"Do you demember her eyes, Rue? Were the pupils either enlarged or small? Was there anything——"

Rue shook her head slowly.

"There was nothing, Andy. Nothing I can remember. Brule was there, and you know how it is with him. Nobody ever questions him. He is so strong, so sure of himself; so certain; he said she was dead. He—I think you came just then. There was nothing. Andy, where are you going?"

He was buttoning the overcoat he had not removed.

"I'm going to find Brule. If anyone telephones, if anyone comes, don't say anything."

He had gone before it occurred to her that he must know where Brule was.

It was cold in the French drawing room so Rue went to the library. There was a fire there in the small marble grate.

From a modern light wood frame above the mantel Crystal stared enigmatically down at her, a half smile on her thin, painted lips, her eyes secret, cool, uncannily observant.

It was half-past one when Brule came.

The heavy jar of the front door roused her. She had curled up in an easy chair and put her head upon her arms, but she had not slept.

Brule saw the light in the library and came in, and Rue stirred and moved cramped muscles.

"Rue!" he said. He was in evening dress and carried gloves and a hat in one hand. He put them down on a table. She saw at once that he was angry. His usually ruddy face was pale, and there were lines in it which only showed under extreme fatigue. His bright, black eyes had points of light, and his straight black eyebrows were frowning. His black, short mustache made a straight, displeased line, too. He was built like a soldier; there was about him a rigidity and compactness that actually meant a trim hard body, always in good condition. He frowned at her questioningly, hesitated and then went to a small cellaret.

"Waiting, Rue?" he said over his smoothly tailored shoulder and bent to take out glasses and a tall brandy bottle.

Her vonce stuck in her throat. Of all the things those hours of thought had stirred in her mind to say to him, nothing seemed poised and able to cut through the hard and brilliant shell which always, as long as she had known him, encased the great and clever Brule Hatterick.

As she did not reply he shot a quick, dark look at her.

"Will you join me?" he said and, taking her acquiescence for granted, poured golden-brown liquid into two small glasses.

She was icy cold. Or was it that the questions she had to ask frightened her, stiffened her tongue, made her hands cold and unsteady?

He turned and put a small glass in her hand.

"Drink that," he said. "I see you know. Who told you—Andy? Well, you may as well know what has happened. I . . ." He paused, swallowed the brandy and went on: "I signed a consent for the exhumation of Crystal's body. We'll soon know the truth."

CHAPTER NINE

Rue said: "Is it true? Was she—murdered?"

Brule could be either brutally direct or neatly, coolly evasive; she had seen him in both moods. He looked at her, now, speculatively.

"What did Andy tell you?"

"Andy didn't find you, then? When he left here he said he was going to see you."

Brule looked at the glass he held, tipped it a little and said: "I haven't seen Andy since about six. I take it he told you the main points."

"He told me about the letters, about the police coming to your office. They were here tonight."

"Tonight!" It startled him; she could see that by the way his eyes narrowed and lighted and the way his mouth straightened itself under his mustache. He added after a moment: "What did they want? Did they question you? What did they ask you?"

She told him swiftly, word for word as near as she could remember them. When she came to her memory of the medicine she faltered. But Brule extracted it quickly.

"Did you tell them you had given her the last dose of medicine?"

"No—that is, Andy said that naturally I had given it to her and that he had prescribed it."

"And did you give it to her?"

"Yes."

"You remember it distinctly?"

"Yes. Yes, I do."

"Why?"

"Because—because she said it was bitter. And then she drank it." She had meant to question him. She still meant to. But he was questioning her.

"Did you tell the police that?"

"No. No, I didn't."

"Why?" he asked again, watching her.

"Because I—Brule, you must tell me, was she murdered?"

For a moment she thought he intended to evade again, but he didn't. Instead he put the small glass deliberately down on the mantel and turned slowly back to her again.

"You want the truth, don't you, Rue? Well then—I don't know."

"But — but what do you think? What are we going to do? What—"

"Nothing. There's nothing we can do now."

"Do you mean—"

"I mean only that. There's nothing we can do. These things take time; perhaps they'll never discover anything that—lends credence to their notion. Any kind of chemical analysis after so long a time has passed is difficult. Unless, of course, they know what to look for; but you can't just fumble in the dark; different poisons show their presence by different and varying tests. Unless the police doctors know what to look for, and I take it so far they do not know, it will be difficult—it may even prove impossible to find and prove the presence of any particular chemical in a lethal quantity. The thing to do is sit tight. Go on with your usual routine. I won't say forget it—"

"Andy thinks she was murdered."

Brule's eyes were bright, dark, altogether enigmatic.

"Yes, I know."

"Do you think so?"

"I don't know, Rue. I've told you that. When she died I did think once of suicide. But I saw no reason for publicizing that — speculation. And I had no very good reasons for it. Except.— well, you were there when she died. You know how unexpected it was."

"Who could have killed her?"

"Again, I don't know. It doesn't seem very likely that she was murdered. I don't think the police will ever be able to prove anything."

"Who wrote those letters? It must be someone who knows something of her death—and the truth of it."

Brule lifted his eyebrows.

"Or someone who wants to make trouble. I don't know who wrote them. But when the tumult and shouting have died down for lack of evidence, I intend to find out."

When that look was in Brule's face the nurses at the hospital cowered. It was only something cold and dark in his eyes and a kind of tight look around the clean line of his jaw. But Rue knew it well. She said: "There must be something we can do—"

"Believe me my dear, there's nothing. Did Andy take you to the opera?"

"I—couldn't stay. He told me after we arrived. We went away. Alicia was there. She left just before we got in the car. We went into a drugstore, and when we came out we saw her leaving."

"Did you? Well, Rue—I'm off to bed."

"But . . ." His assurance baffled her; yet he was right, too. What could they do that night?

"Andy said you were trying to pull wires."

"Oh. I'll do what I can. Guy's coming in tomorrow. I'll talk to him just in case. Don't let this worry you too much, Rue. I'll see to it the police don't bother you; Guy will cook up some kind of protection for you. After all, they have no proof of anything. And they'll probably never have proof."

"But if she was murdered—"

"Well?"

"Oughtn't we—do something? Tell the police—"

"Why?"

"Why, because it's right. Because—"

"Crystal's dead. Madge is very much alive and young. You are, too, Rue, and you are my wife. Steven is frail and horribly sensitive, and his music is of no small value. I myself have my—small importance in the world. Andy was her attending physician, and he's just entered upon what promises to be a brilliant career. Why ruin five lives? . . . You don't know, Rue, what a murder inquiry is. . . . Now, my child, go to bed."

He went to her and put his hand for a moment under her chin and looked down at her, smiling a little. "You'll have weathered many things by the time you reach my age. How old are you, Rue? Twenty-five . . ."

"Twenty-six."

"I'm close to forty. I've worked hard. I've learned, I think, in a hard school to control emotions—"

"You—" She stopped abruptly, checked by the hard directness of his eyes.

"You were about to say I have no emotions. Wasn't that it? Well, that is as may be. Go to bed. It's cold here. I'll have another drink before I go up."

CHAPTER X

It was the next day that Juliet Garder came.

Rue did not see Brule when he left the next morning; Madge left the house early, too, to go to the private day school she attended. Madge, who did not know the storm that was about to burst.

And when Rue went downstairs just before lunch she heard Steven's piano. Steven knew nothing of it, then; otherwise that music would not have been tranquil glissades of sound from the distant wing. In a working frenzy, he had lunch sent to his studio, and Madge lunched at school, so Rue ate alone in the narrow long dining room at the back of the house.

It was late in the afternoon when Juliet arrived. Coughing a little from the smoke in the laden air, asking for Mrs. Hatterick.

"Miss Juliet Garder," said Gross at Rue's bedroom door. "She gave me no card."

"I'll come down," said Rue and then changed her mind. The house was quiet except for the distant faint tinkle of the piano in Steven's studio below. It seemed too quiet and too empty and thus too full of a listening quality which only a silent and empty house, cavernous just then with that abnormal twilight, may possess. "Show Miss Garder up here, please," said Rue. "And order tea. Bring it up when it is ready."

He went away. Juliet. Why had she come? But it was obvious; she and Juliet had nursed Crystal; obviously between them they might be able to piece out a portion of the truth. All at once Rue wondered why she had not thought of going to Juliet. If he had not been so curiously paralyzed with waiting she would have done so; would have gone to the hospital to see Juliet during the nurse's hours off. Her spirits lifted a little.

She had not seen Juliet since her marriage They had trained and nursed together—Juliet, a spare, homely girl with broad, hard-working hands; slow of thought, wiry, lonely, always pressed for money, squeezing through her examinations by a hair's breadth. Propinquity and shared experience was the basis for their friendship. That is until Rue's marriage, when Juliet had quietly but quite definitely withdrawn. Rue had always felt that Juliet did not approve of her marriage. But at any rate Juliet had come now.

"Miss Garder," said Gross and disappeared.

"Juliet."

"Hello, Rue."

She shook hands. She was as spare, as plain as ever, with the lines on her thin face as sharply carved. Her brown topcoat was a little shabby, her hat at an unfashionable angle, her pale, friendly brown eyes looked tired and were rimmed in pink. She looked at Rue and blinked slowly and said again: "Hello—Rue——"

"Why, Juliet! What's the matter?"

"N-nothing," said Juliet and went to a chair. She sat down a little unsteadily, fumbling for the arms of the chair.

"Let me take your coat."

"Coat's—all right," said Juliet, staring straight at Rue and making an obvious effort to speak.

"Julie——" Rue checked herself. She went to the girl and took her gloves and the worn purse which seemed about to drop from Julie's shiny, bony fingers. Julie lifted one hand and pushed her hat back on her head and stared glassily at Rue, ad Rue caught a whiff of alcohol and cried: "Julie, you're drunk."

Julie never drank; she was a militant teetotaller, and Rue knew it.

"Just a cocktail," said Juliet; her thin lips pulled apart in a grin that was like a grimace. "Just a little tiny cocktail. Pink. Say, Rue—there was something I came to see you about. This—you know...." She turned and waved a hand at the bed. "Crystal Hatterick. You know—murdered—I know—I know something about that. You know it too. I came to tell you, but now I'm not going to tell. Understand, Julie—I mean, Rue. You're not to tell a thing. Besides, memory is always false. Remember that, Julie—I mean Rue. Rue Hatterick, married to Brule Hatterick. Crystal Hatterick murdered. Memory always false. Tricks you. I was here—in this very room. Remember that screen," said Juliet and closed her eyes; her head fell forward sleepily.

"Remember—what do you mean? Julie. What do I know? Julie, wake up. Tell me—"

"Sleepy," muttered Julie. "Changed my mind. Don't trust....memory...."

"Julie!"

Rue hesitated, went across the room and touched the bell. Tea would be up. Strong black tea was what Julie needed.

It came almost at once. Gross carried the tray, and Rue, not wanting him to see Julie, took the tray at the door herself and brought it to the low table before the fireplace. Julie did not look up or rouse, and Rue went back to the door behind the screen and closed it, shutting out the distant sound of the piano—a phrase had reached her ears and she recognized it; it was from the piano score of a modern piece of Steven's own composition. She returned. She didn't know she was excited until she lifted the teapot and tried to pour the tea and her hand shook so she spilled it. It was hot and strong, and she waited for it to cool a little, stirring it, watching the nurse. At last she took cup to Julie and lifted her head.

"Listen. Listen, Julie. Wake up. Drink this."

Julie opened her eyes. "Had cocktail," she said fuzzily and with great effort. "Don't want tea...."

"Drink it," said Rue and held it to her lips. The girl gulped but did not wince at the hot liquid, and drank as if she did not know what she was doing.

Perhaps she drank half a cup before she choked and slumped sidewise in her chair. Her plain little hat dropped off; her hair was flat and not very tidy and gave her a defenseless look. Rue got a cushion and tried to prop Julie's head comfortably with it.

But something was wrong. She couldn't make Julie's head stay on the pillow. She couldn't hold Julie upright. Something was terribly wrong in that rose-scented room where Crystal Hatterick had died.

From habit her fingers went to Julie's pulse. Went and sought along the white, thin wrist and sought feverishly, terrified, for a flutter that was not there.

"Julie.... Julie...."

It wasn't a scream, for her voice had gone. And Julie's shabby, thin little body slid slowly out of the chair, hesitated in a queer kneeling position for a grisly instant and then went down on the rug.

Rue kelt beside her and again felt her pulse; no heart beat below her worn sweater. No life in her eyes when Rue made her fingers remember their training and pull those thin eye-lids upward.

There was a sound somewhere, but Rue did not hear it.

She did not know Alicia Pelham was in the room until a voice spoke to her and said coolly: "Why really—what's all this?"

Rue looked up then. "She's dead, Julie......dead......"

It did not seem strange to her that Alicia was there. Nothing would have seemed strange to her at that moment because all her consciousness was stunned by the one enormous strangeness of Julie's death. She said again with crazy, jerky loudness: "She's dead. She's been murdered. Alicia, what shall we do?"

It was completely still. All the house around them was quiet except for the sound of Steven's piano. They must do something. Call doctors. What did one do? Julie was dead; Rue recognized death.

Alicia, beautiful in her trim black street suit, suave and elegant with her sable scarf flung around her shoulders and her small black hat set expertly upon the black and silver waves of her hair, was bending over the shabby little heap on the rug. She pulled a loose beige glove from one hand and touched Julie's cheek with long white fingers, rosy-tipped and flashing with a huge emerald. Her fingers shrank and hovered. Then she rose and looked at Rue.

Alicia was no longer beautiful; her face was drawn and gray, and her lips had drawn back from her shining teeth. She cried shrilly and pointed at the rug and the limp thing upon it:

"She—the nurse—she's dead! Dead! So—you've done it again!"

CHAPTER ELEVEN

There was no mistaking her meaning. It cut as sharply clear through the fog of horror and bewilderment as the thrust of a knife. But Alicia repeated it:

"You've done it again. It's the way Crystal died. Poison. I suppose the nurse knew and threatened you. She knew it and came here and—Where are you going?"

Rue's feet were taking her across the room; she felt disembodied and light and had no consciousness of moving.

"Stop. What are you doing?" Alicia was following her, her small face thrust forward, her eyes so bright and hard they were feral; the savagery of her attack was at sharp variance to her civilized, sophisticated appearance.

German Divisions Pushing Toward North Slovakia

Most Travelled Roads to Poland Commanded by German Arms

STRATEGY PLAIN

If Danzig Dispute Should Start War, Germany Could Attack Poland from South

Zilina, Slovakia, Aug. 21—(AP)—German army divisions pushed on to northern Slovakia today. Motorized troops massed at the frontier. Slovakia's most travelled roads to Poland were commanded by German arms.

As large scale operations continued, involving a force estimated at 250,000 men, observers asserted the strategy was plain. If the Danzig dispute should start a war, German forces now are in position for sweeping action against Poland's southern flank.

Youths unexpectedly summoned for military service discovered Slovakia's army was being mobilized gradually and without official acknowledgement. The mobilization, according to an authoritative report, was approved by the national council under German pressure and against the opinion of General Ferdinand Csatlos, Minister of War.

The reservists called up for duty, it was said, were being sent north to areas not now held by German troops. What role the Slovak army would be asked to play in the event of war was a question unanswered by Slovak officialdom.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen

Science Service Meteorologist

Lightning! Statistics seem to indicate that there is more danger from being struck by lightning in the country than in cities. In the country the greatest danger is on the plains. This is because buildings with high chimneys and exposed points are struck first, while on a plain a man may be the highest point for the lightning to hit. In forests and groves the highest trees are usually hit, while in cities steeples and high steel structures and well-rodded wooden buildings are comparatively safe. In the country stay away from high trees, especially oaks, and if on a plain lie down in a depression for the greatest safety.

British Princess, Aged 9 Years Today, Gives Party in Pink

Balmoral, Scotland, August 21—(CP)—Princess Margaret Rose is nine years old today.

At Balmoral Castle, where the Royal family is in residence, a birthday party in pink was arranged.

Pink is the favorite color of the Princess and she helped pour pink icing over the cake, ("Mummy" said she could), and punctured the glossy surface with nine pink candles. At her request the cake was filled with a fruit mixture.

Several children from neighboring estates, including her young cousin, the Master of Carnegie, were received by Princess Margaret Rose and her sister.

The young hostess wore a new party dress—in pink, of course,—which Queen Elizabeth helped to design.

After tea the children were entertained with a showing of movie-films made by the Princesses.

FATAL ACCIDENTS DURING WEEKEND NUMBER ELEVEN

Six Motoring Deaths and Five Drownings in Ontario

CHILD CRUSHED

Ontario's toll of vacation-period fatal accidents was increased by 11 during the week-end, in six motoring deaths and five drownings.

Lake Simcoe claimed two lives. David King, 19, Toronto, drowned Saturday trying to save his younger brother, James, 12, who had jumped from a rowboat. James was pulled to safety by others. Mary McCrea, 15, Brechin, drowned near her home when she stepped into a hole while wading ashore from a rowboat Saturday.

Miss Annie Bridge, 25 Kincardine, drowned when she tumbled into a well while drawing water on her brother's farm in Kincardine Township Sunday.

The attendance for the four days totalled 46,611 as compared with 46,336 for last year, a decline of 725.

Democracies on Defensive at Start In Any War, Germany to Lose at End

Lake Couchiching, Aug. 21—(CP)—Belief that Germany could start a war with a great advantage but that she would lose in the long run was expressed Saturday by Dr. Hans Simons of New York, before the Canadian Institute on Economics and Politics.

Dr. Simons was formerly a lecturer on political science in Berlin, and now is associated with the New School for Social Research in New York. He said that "it is in the nature of the situation that the democracies must begin any war on the defensive, and the mechanical development of armaments favors the attackers."

He declared however that Germany's internal situation would not stand up under a long war. And the democracies would reveal tremendous sources of internal strength that would enable them to win a long conflict.

Industrial Structure to Count

Dr. Simons said the next war will be on a vastly higher plane of technical perfection than any previous one, and it will not be so much existing armaments that will count as the capacity of the industrial, economic and financial structure of a country to turn them out in ever-increasing numbers.

"Germany would start a war with a great advantage," he said, "since she could gear her industrial machine to be ready for a timed war." Germany would choose the time and naturally assume the offensive, he added. Germany would be ready to turn out a tremendous stream of war materials in an effort to win a quick victory.

But he declared that Germany would inevitably lose out in a long conflict. He said that the Nazis had been subjected to so many "shucks and alarms" that the supreme test would find them already weary. The democracies had not yet met a real test of morale. "I believe they would reveal tremendous sources of internal strength in a crisis that would enable them to win a long conflict."

POLICE RECOVER THREE BODIES

Party Drowns When Car Misses Turn and Plunges Off End of Wharf

Quebec, Aug. 21—(CP)— Police today recovered from the St. Charles River here the bodies of two men and a girl, drowned last night when a taxicab from Thetford Mines, Que., in which they were riding, plunged over a wharf.

Jeannette Fillion of Thetford Mines, who said she escaped from the car by opening a rear door as the automobile began sinking identified the victims as Joseph Cloutier and Dolores Doyon of Thetford Mines, and Jean Louis Bernier of Levis, Que.

Dr. Paul V. Marceau, coroner for the Quebec district, said he "hoped" to hold an inquest late this afternoon.

Body of Cloutier, believed to have been the owner of the car, was found in the front seat when the vehicle was raised by a towing truck hoist.

1,000 Homeless As Forest Fires Rage on 100 Fronts

Seattle, Aug. 21—(CP)—Fanned by high winds and abetted by low humidity and tinder dry conditions, fire chewed its way through Pacific northwest forests on a hundred fronts today. At least 1,000 persons were homeless, one town was destroyed, hundreds of farm buildings were blackened and timber losses mounted so fast there was no accurate method of checking their size.

'Human Echo' Takes Words Out of Mouths of Persons

Scientists Baffled by Strange Phenomen of Youth Who Can Accompany Others in Tongue Twisters — Psychologist and Francis Magner Speak Duet of Words

Medina, N.Y., Aug. 21—(AP)—Nineteen-year-old Francis Magner, a human echo who simultaneously duplicates another's speech, had science puzzled today with his involuntary knack of taking words out of people's mouths.

"I'm stumped," said Dr. Craleton Scofield, Professor of Psychology at the University of Buffalo, after testing the youth with classic quotations, scientific tongue twisters and even foreign languages.

"This boy reproduces the talk of others without a perceptible time interval between words of the speaker and his own," Dr. Scofield added.

To Magner himself, the strange trait is just as much a puzzle. "I found it out by accident two years ago," he said.

Dr. Scofield began his experiment by putting the youth through a series of tests involving complicated neurological terms. Magner responded without hesitation.

"I'll now recite a few lines of poetry," the psychologist said.

He began: "Hence loathed melancholy," and Magner, picking him up with the first syllable, recited with him: "Of cerberus and blackets midnight born in stygian cave forlorn. 'Mongst horrid shapes and sights and sounds unholy.... a'hm...."

Word for word, the psychologist's speech emerged a duet on the lips of his subject, even to the "a'hm."

"I can do this without looking at a person," Magner said, "just as long as I can hear him."

"The boy has such a great capacity for highly-skilled attention to the variation of sounds as they appear in speech, that it is phenomenal," Dr. Scofield declared.

British Officers Accompany Japanese to Show Boundary Line

Hong ong, Aug. 21 (AP)—Japanese apparently were planning today to maintain at least semi-permanent, closely-spaced guard posts to seal the mainland order between this British Crown colony and Kwangtung Province, China.

Apprehension over possible intensification of Anglo-Japanese tension here since Japanese forces moved up to the boundary last week relaxed however. A British announcement disclosed British and Japanese officers conferred yesterday, the British officers pointing out the exact order. The line is marked clearly by Union Jacks.

British officers conducted Japanese officers along the boundary today "to avoid an ymistakes by Japanese soldiers."

COUPLE BRUTALLY BEATEN TO DEATH NEAR BRANCHTON

John Milroy, 77, and Sister, Annie, 73, Found on Floor of Farmhouse

ROBBERY MOTIVE

Toronto, Aug. 21—(CP)— Police today said they were questioning three men in connection with the killing Saturday near Branchton, Ont., of John Milroy, 77, and his sister, Annie Milroy, 73. The three, arrested in Toronto early today, were remanded until Aug. 29 when they appeared in court on vagrancy charges. Bail was set at $3,000.

The men are Richard McGuigan, 20, Reginald Hanlon, 20 and Charles Tavignot, 25. They gave police no home address.

Police said the trio went up an alley carrying a package and returned without it. Police examined the package, found a pair of blood-stained trousers, and captured the three.

Police said one man admitted ownership of the pants. He said the blood came from a man he fought in a box car.

The Milroys were found brutally beaten to death Saturday in their farm house near Branchton. Police said they believed robbery was the motive. Neighbors said they believed the attack could have been committed only by someone familiar with the house.

Galt, Ont., Aug. 21 (CP)—Neighbors expressed an opinion today that only a person or persons familiar with the household could have murdered John Milroy, 77, and his 73-year-old sister, Annie, in the parlor of their farm home.

The aged pair were found brutally beaten to death Saturday on the floor of the farmhouse near Branchton, four miles south of Galt. Police were without an immediate lead in their attempts to solve the slayings, but Inspector william Lougheed of Ontario Provincial Police believed it possible that robbery was the motive.

Neighbors who respected the Milroys as kindly, god-fearing folk could help the investigating authorities but little. They recalled, however, that robbers twice broke into the house last winter and obtained sums of money.

BRITISH DEFENCE 'AT HIGH PITCH', BURGIN DECLARES

Reasons for 'Solemn Thought Before Any Enemy Allow Conflict to Start'

PRESENT LIKE WARTIME

Totalitarian Advantage in This Period is Ability to Silence Criticism, He Says

London, Aug 21—(CP)— The "very high pitch" of Great Britain's defence preparedness gives good reason "for solemn thought before any enemy should lightly allow a conflict to break out," Supply Minister Leslie Burgin told a group of visiting Canadians at a government luncheon in their honor at the Carlton Hotel today.

The Canadians, a delegation of 18 industrialists and four government representatives, are in England to inspect armament factories here and ascertain to what extent Canadian firms can participate in Great Britain's rearmament

LONDON MARKET NOTICEABLY WEAK

Sharp Decline Seen as Market is Beset by Fears of War

London, Aug. 21—(CP)—The London stock market declined sharply today and finished in a nervous condition as it was beset by fears of possible war.

British government issues were noticeably weak with the 3 1-2 per cent great war loan quoted at 89 7-8, or 1 7-16 points below Saturday's close. Today's level for this issue was the lowest of the year and approximated the depth of last September's "war scare."

"War commodities" pushed upward with copper reaching £45, currently $211, a ton for the first time since last November.

POLAND PREPARES TO MOVE TROOPS

Sent Toward Her Frontiers Facing Germany and Slovakia

Warsaw, Aug. 21.— Poland was said to day to have sent troop reinforcements toward her frontiers facing Germany and Slovakia as a general precaution against similar increases reported to have been made by Germany.

(Along Slovakia's 250-mile frontier with Poland, 250,000 German troops were reported to have been stationed yesterday. Roads were choked with troops, artillery and supply trains as the Germans concentrated behind the four main passes through the Tatra Mountains into Poland. Zilina, Slovakia, was general headquarters, and the towns of Cadca, Trstena, Orlow and Mezilaborce were concentration points.)

The Polish position is that Poland must be prepared in a military sense for any eventuality, but that Germany must be given no opportunity to charge Poland with aggressive military aims. From the start last March, foreign observers agree, there has been nothing demonstrative about the Polish mobilization.

Farmer Undergoes Tests for Fitness For 'Frozen Sleep' Hibernation

Philadelphia, Aug. 21—(AP)—A man with cancer spreading slowly through his pancreas submitted to a series of tests at Temple University Hospital today to determine his fitness to become medical science's regular patient No. 1 for the "frozen sleep" cancer treatment.

The man, Max Harlan, 42-year-old Stockport, Ia., farmer, entered hospital yesterday. If blood, X-ray and physical examinations show he is qualified, the treatment — which involves lowering the normal body temperature of 98.6 degrees to 85 or 90—may begin tomorrow.

The unusual method was developed by two temple physicians, Dr. Temple Fay and Lawrence Smith., who reported favorable results in skin cancer cases for the first time last May. Little is known of its effect on internal cases.

"It is a hopeful experiment," said Dr. Smith.

Like a bear hibernating for the winter, the patient is put to sleep with mild anaesthetic and chipped ice packed closely around his body to induce a state of suspended animation. Breathing slackens, he requires no food and his natural eliminative functions cease.

For four or five days he remains in a cold-dreamless sleep. Then he is awakened with a warm drink which restores normal bodily functions.

The physicians hope this refrigerative process will check the growth of cancerous tissue in Harlen's body and possibly destroy it.

ARMS INDUSTRY BOOMS IN U. S., ORDERS POUR IN

Aircraft Building and Shipyard Employment Engage 62,000 Workers

13,000 MORE BY JAN. 1

Washington, Aug. 2.—(AP)—The aircraft industry in the United States is booming and employment in shipyards and arsenals is mounting as a result of the largest army and navy and foreign orders since the Great War.

Aircraft and engine plants have unfilled orders aggregating more than $300,000,000. Their total sales last year were only about $68,000,000.

Labor Department figures show employment rising sharply in the industry as a result of heavy orders for warplanes from the American army and navy and from France, in particular, among foreign buyers. Wage earners in plane manufacturing plants alone increased from 24,739 in January to 35,935 at the end of June.

Expanding navy yards are preparing to add 13,000 civilian employees by Jan. 1 to the 62,000 already at work. With more than 100 warships and auxiliaries in the ways or ordered, the number of workers already has risen from 46,000 at the start of 1938 toward an estimated peak of 100,000 at the end of 1941.

200,000 Workers in 2 Years

Commercial shipyards have expanded their forces to nearly 50,000 and within two years naval experts expect possibly 200,000 men to be employed in building or repairing warcraft at all establishments.

TOLL OF DEATH MOUNTS STEADILY

Worst Flood in Tientsin's History Submerges Much of City

Tientsin, Aug. 21—(AP)— The toll of death and property destruction mounted today as the worst flood in Tientsin's history submerged much of the city under constantly deepening water.

With the flood crest believed still to be at least a day away, the overflow of the swollen Hal River and other streams put the city's electrical facilities out of commission and isolated it part of the time from the outside world.

An all-night rise in the flood level inundated the few remaining dry spots in the British concession when the water was three feet deep in the shallowest places.

Telephones were dead. Small boats were the only transportation through streets. Many persons braved waters often waist-deep to carry out vital errands.

The water system still functioned, but authorities warned that it's failure was possible momentarily.

Except for a slight increase in milk supplies—the result of herds being driven to shallower water within the British concession— the flood situation was acute.

As flood waters within the concession reached an average depth of nine feet over most of the area, British authorities commandeered all small boats, and officers were assigned to transporting ill and exhausted victims of whatever race to hospitals or improvised refuges.

'Ghost' Turns Out To Be a Bat

Last night a citizen had an experience that, for awhile, led him to believe the Picton ghost had transferred the locale of its nocturnal act to Belleville.

"I woke up with the feeling that someone, or something, was prowling in my room," he said. It was dark and I couldn't see a thing. Then suddenly there was a sharp rap on the window screen, followed in a few seconds by another rap and then something shuffled across the floor and rattled against the foot of the bed as it passed.

"Although the night was comfortably cool I began to sweat and my heart pounded like a trip-hammer. Ghosts? Aw fiddlesticks, I didn't believe in 'em. Another sharp rap and a shuffling on the window-sill, then something brushed past my face! I ducked under the bedclothes. A bat!

"The blamed critter had half-brained itself trying to get out through the window and was shuffling and fluttering all over the place. Well—I'm not exactly scared of bats but I don't like 'em. They're such loathsome creatures and always crawling with vermin.

"Finally, with some trepidation, I switched on the light and leaped out of bed. Then, armed with a tennis racquet in one hand and a rolled-up Intelligencer in the other I went on the attack. At last, after considerable dashing here, there and everywhere I spelled finis to the creature's career with on overhand swat at the foot of the back stairs.

"Of course I woke everyone in the house with the noise of the chase and it being four o'clock in the morning my explanation for the confusion wasn't received with enthusiasm. Bats—urgh!"

Commercial Relations Likely to Improve By New Trade Pact

(By Edwin Shanke)
(Associated Press Foreign Staff)

Berlin, Aug. 21—(AP)—Political and economic quarters predicted today a "sharp upward turn" in commercial relations between Germany and Russia under their new trade agreement, especially because Germany's capacity to absorb Soviet raw materials is "without limit".

In the face of what she charges is "encirclement" by Great Britain and France, Nazi Germany forgot ideological differences to conclude a barter trade agreement with Communist Russia during the week-end.

(In Moscow, announcement of the agreement at a time military staff talks are under way with Britain and France surprised diplomatic circles but informed observers were cautious in speculation on its consequences. It was pointed out the trade negotiations began long before the military staff talks were announced.)

The treaty provides for an exchange of Germany's machine and other highly specialized industrial products for raw materials the Nazis need badly —Soviet ore, raw chemicals, lumber, gasoline and oil.

To this end the Nazis gave Russia an $80,000,000 credit while the Soviet Republic promised to deliver within two years $72,000,000 of her products.

Press Hails New Pact

Moscow, Aug. 21.—(AP)—A prediction the new trade agreement between Germany and Soviet Russia might lead to improvement of their political relations appeared today in the Communist Party newspaper Pravda as the Soviet Press hailed the new pact.

Pravda's front page editorial appeared a few hours before the expected resumption of military staff talks looking toward a mutual assistance pact among Great Britain, France and Russia. These conversations have been in recess three days.

The editorial said:

"The new trade credit agreement between the U.S.S.R. and Germany, having been born in an atmosphere of tense political relations, is looked upon to dispel this atmosphere.

"It may become a serious step in the direction of further improvement of not only economic, but also political relations between the U.S.S.R. and Germany."

PASTURES HELP DAIRY OUTLOOK

Bountiful Crops Reported in Southern and Western Parts of Province

Toronto, Aug. 21—(CP)—Farmers in Southern and Western Ontario are completing the harvest of bountiful crops these days, aided by ideal harvest weather. The weekly crop report of the Ontario Department of Agriculture shows grain harvesting nearly finished in South and Western Ontario, about 75 per cent complete in the Eastern counties and about 50 per cent complete in Northern Ontario.

Winter wheat yields will be above average in Brant county but mid-summer drought cut the spring wheat crop below normal. Rains that ended the drought have improved the pastures and improved the corn and root crops.

Haldimand farmers reported rains there last week revived the corn crops and harvesting of cereal grains is almost complete.

Lambton reported a bountiful grain harvest over most of the county. Farmers' granaries are well filled and farmers are talking of filling their silos soon.

Spring grain in Middlesex generally has been good and harvesting weather ideal. "Exceptionally good" yields of oats, barley and mixed grains were reported from Oxford.

Wide variations in crop returns came from sections of Eastern Ontario. Hastings county reported some parts of the county had normal crops and in others the drought-stricken fields provided crops far below normal.

Pastures throughout Eastern Ontario have made a big come-back, transforming the outlook for the big livestock and dairying industry on Eastern Ontario. The milk flow has improved.

Wheat Higher In Europe's Unrest

Winnipeg, Aug. 21 (CP) — Brisk buying precipitated by disturbing political dispatches from Europe and a strong Liverpool market rallied wheat futures prices as much as a cent in early trading on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange today.

After the first half hour quotations were ¼-½d higher. Seaboard houses were credited with a good share of the support in the pit and boosted estimates on export sales of Canadian wheat although no definite figure was available.

Liverpool jumped ¼-½d shortly after mid-session.

WHAT THE CATBIRD KNEW

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"Went away and never has been heard from," asserted Captain Halliday, as he re-filled his pipe and pulled out a battered matchbox. "I always ask folks from the city if they know Robert Landis, but no one ever had up to the time you came to the village."

"It may not be the same person" said Mrs. Mently, as she knitted busily. They were sitting on the bottom of an upturned boat on the shore, and the captain had been relating many stories to the city boarder. "I have met a Robert Landis; he is a young newspaperman, and he lives in the same boarding house that I do in the city. I have often talked with him, but he never mentioned Shellbeach—in fact, he knew I was coming here, but he did not appear to be interested."

"Hum! Is he married?" asked the captain.

"Oh, no."

"Does he seem to like the girls?"

Mrs. Bently laughed. "I cannot say that he seems much interested in them; he seems like a rather grim, silent young man, absorbed in his work and not particularly happy."

"Sho! muttered the captain. "That sounds like he ought to be, but not how he uster be around here. He was just wild about my niece Sally—"

"The pretty, black-eyed girl who lives with you?"

"Yes. Five years ago she was eighteen, and prettier than she is now—more color, and her eyes were happy. She was engaged to Robert Landis. They quarreled about something and he went off; she's that proud she never mentioned his name after that—only she's wistful and never so gay and happy as before."

"I am so sorry," murmured Mrs. Bently. "Is there anything I can do to bring them together? It is a delicate situation. But it seems dreadful that they should miss their chance for happiness."

"My theory is that there is some misunderstanding," commented the captain. "There they were, happy as clams at high water, having a postoffice in a hole in a hollow tree in the orchard. One day not so long ago I was coming across the orchard at dusk—and there was Sally, leaning against the old tree, crying as if her heart would break."

"Don't!" cried Mrs. Bently, taking out her handkerchief.

"There's the case!" said the captain gruffly. "Thank you, ma'am, for listening—good afternoon." He trudged up the beach with his fishing tackle and string of fish and disappeared through a hole in a broken fence.

"The poor little thing," murmured Mrs. Bently, thinking of Sally and her sad love story. "I believe I will go home for a week-end, and I will carry with me some snapshot pictures; one must be of that old orchard and the postoffice in the tree, and one must be of Sally at her prettiest; I must catch her secretly. And then some odd ones of the beach and other parts of the village, but those two will be mingled in and he cannot help but see them."

So Mrs. Bently spent one busy day with her camera, and then she took the train for the city. Captain Halliday missed her pleasant companionship on the beach, and went fishing every day. Sally sang about her housework in a soft, sad little voice, and sometimes her eyes wandered out to the old apple tree where there was a mossy hollow in the trunk—that was always empty now. A tangle of bushes had grown up around the old tree and amid the sharp thorns of brier a catbird had built her loosely constructed nest. Brown twigs, leaves, bits of grass, a scrap of old newspaper all helped to build the home for the hungry brood. They had flown away, and the parent birds still clung to the old nest, uttering their clever mimicry of other songsters or making that strange, mewing cry so like a cat. Sally liked the beautiful creatures, for they had returned to the same old nest year after year. How often she had seen them on her fruitless visits to the old trysting place!

That afternoon there came a terrific windstorm, and all the fishing boats hurried into port just before the storm burst in its fury. Captain Halliday was among the first to arrive, and he put up his boat and hurried home to help Sally close the heavy shutters and make the old house snug against the gale.

"We're in for a bit of windy weather, my dear," said the Captain as he sat down to a hot, savory supper.

"It is raining Uncle Peter; listen," said Sally, pouring out his tea.

There was the steady beat of rain on the roof, the chink of water running through the gutter pipes, the sound of thrashing trees.

They awoke the next morning to a sodden world of soaking land, fallen trees, and a beach strewn with driftwood from Wreckers island.

Captain Halliday went down to the beach to gather some of the driftwood for the winter fires, and Sally wandered through her ruined flower garden. There were cries of distress from the catbirds who were perched in the old apple tree. Sally found their frail nest blown to the ground, but strongly tied to the thorn bushes was the bottom of the nest—of many nests, for each year the birds had reinforced the old home with new twigs, bits of string and paper. Now the ragged remains of the nest clung defiantly to the stems of the bush.

"You poor things!" sympathized Sally.

"Mew-w-w-w-w—" warned the birds as they flew away in a circle to return again. "Mew-w-w-w—"

Sally heeded the warning and turned. Someone was standing near by looking at her with an embarrassed smile. It was Robert!

"Sally," he said biting his lip, "I came back to ask you why you didn't answer my letter."

"Letter? What letter?" Sally was clearly amazed; her color rose and her eyes shone. "There was no letter here when you went away—nor since."

"Have you really looked for one, Sally?"

"Yes," she confessed.

"I left one three years ago—I asked you to marry me, and because I could not bear to have you say no, I told you not to reply if you didn't love me."

"I never received such a letter," quavered Sally.

"I put it in the hollow—and when I found no reply I went away without seeing you, dear."

Sally stood with downcast eyes and aching heart. How could she convince Robert that she had never received the letter? He was looking at Sally, then his gaze passed her and saw the remains of the old old nest. There was something familiar sticking out of the sticks.

He rushed forward and pulled the sticks apart. From the bottom he pulled out a wet and torn envelope—it was thin and weather beaten—the ink was faded and pale—but the agitated catbirds who had appropriated the letter so long ago saw it pulled from the old nest, saw two young heads close together, reading the long-delayed letter, and saw the happy ending.

NEW COAT

By KARL GRAYSON

"I'm sorry Julie. You'll have to make that coat go another year. Things are pretty bad. I just can't raise the money to get you another."

There was a note of bitterness in Norman Sander's voice. Julie saw that he wasn't looking at her, and she knew a pang of pity. It was the first time that Norman had had to deny her.

"But I saw just the coat I want at Neathersole's, only this morning," she said doubtfully. "We have a charge account at Neathersole's; you wouldn't have to raise the money for at least 60 days."

Norman gestured annoyedly. "You mean we had an account at Nethersole's. They dropped us yesterday." He hesitated. "Their last statement showed a balance overdue for three months!"

Julie bit her lip. But sight of Norman's disconsolate figure stirred her sympathies. She came across the room and placed an arm about his shoulder.

"That strikes me as being pretty poor business. The minute we get a little hard up, they drop us like a hot iron. Next year, if our income is back to normal, they'll fall over themselves trying to get us back. Somehow it doesn't seem quite fair."

Norman stood up and leaned against the mantel, staring gloomily into the fire. "Oh, you can't blame them. Conditions are pretty uncertain these days, and they have to protect themselves."

"Well, that's not the way to do it. We've been good customers of Neathersole's for more than ten years. We've always paid our bills promptly and given them all our business. I hope they don't expect us to come back when things pick up."

There were other thoughts running through Julie's mind as she talked. She hardly heard Norman's reply. And after a moment she said: "Norm, I'm coming in town tomorrow noon and have lunch with you. We could run around to Neathersole's and talk things over with the credit department."

"It won't do a bit of good. They've made up their minds, and whatever we might say would be a waste of breath."

Julie smiled brightly. "We can't do any harm. And, besides, I haven't come in for lunch with you for ages."

Neathersole's is located in the heart of Boston's shopping district. Shortly after one o'clock when Julie and Norman arrived, the usual crowds of shoppers were gathered momentarily before the great show windows. A bevy of painters were enriching the store-front woodwork with bright colors.

Julie tugged at Norman's arm and led him up close to one of the displays. "The coat that I spoke about is in here," she told him blithely. "I'd just like to have you see it."

Norman glanced sideways at his wife, shrugged resignedly and followed.

"Isn't it a beauty! It's that dark green, with the wolf collar!" Julie clasped her hands together and stared enraptured.

Norman's brow puckered as he squinted through the glass. "Can't see a thing. The light's wrong. All I can make out is a reflection of the street."

"Well, you must be blind. Here, move down this way."

Julie edged along, tugging at his arm, until she was standing directly beneath one of the painter's ladders. Its shadow on the window made visibility clearer in that particular spot.

"Trouble is," Norman explained, "they haven't got the awnings down. Suppose they can't, while the painting's going on." He glanced up at the man on the ladder. And at that exact moment someone jostled against Julie. She was pushed back against the ladder.

"Hey! Look out!"

But Norman's warning came too late. A can of paint, suspended from a rung of the ladder by a wire, got loose from its moorings and came tumbling down. It struck Julie on the shoulder, spilling its contents over her back.

Julie let out a little squeal and jumped away in dismay. But the damage had been done. A wide streak of bright red had hideously discolored her coat.

Norman swore beneath his breath and looked up at the painter, who was regarding the disaster apathetically, two rungs above them Julie began to expostulate in no uncertain terms about the carelessness of a store management that would permit the possibility of such a thing.

A crowd began to gather, expressing its sympathies. Norman feeling a bit silly about the whole business, tried to get Julie away, but he looked at him angrily, seemingly on the verge of tears.

"It's ruined," she wailed. "My brand new coat is absolutely ruined! Now whatever shall I do?"

Norman was on the point of uttering surprised protest, when the crowd parted to permit the passage of a bald-headed man, who, by his attire and demeanor, was connected with the store. At sight of him Julie renewed her wailing with a vehemence that stirred the sympathies of the crowd to a greater degree.

Norman was spared further embarrassment when the bald-headed man invited him and Julie into the store. They were ushered graciously into the manager's office, where Julie ruined a perfectly good chair by sitting on it. Unperturbed by the manager's exclamation of alarm, she sobbingly explained once more about how her brand new coat had been absolutely ruined through the carelessness of the store. Twice Norman was in the act of giving vent to the honest urge that surged through his blood, only to be interrupted by Julie's wails.

The manager drummed on his desk and finally wondered if Julie would be satisfied if they replaced her coat with a new one. Julie declared she wasn't particularly taken with any of the styles they were showing that year, but there was a dark green with a wolf collar.

Later, in a tiny restaurant, Norman looked sternly at his wife and said: "Julie, you did that on purpose. You brushed against that ladder because you knew the paint would spill on your coat!"

"Why, Norman!"

Norman gestured angrily. "Don't try to lie out of it. I know you did!"

"How? How could you know such a thing?"

"Because the coat you tried to point out to me in the window wasn't there at all. I looked in when we were inside the store. There was nothing at all in the show window."

"Oh, Norman!" Julie dabbed at her eyes. "Please don't be angry. We've been good customers of Neathersole's for ten years. I—I don't think what I did was unjust."

Norman considered. One thing he was sure of. He wasn't going back to that store and try to explain things. He'd been embarrassed enough for one day. "All right," he said, smiling faintly. "All right, I'll have to admit you did some quick thinking."

Julie beamed. "Quick thinking. Why, Norm, I've been thinking about it for days. Any woman will tell you you can't see into Neathedsole's windows between 1 and 1.30 o'clock. And yesterday when you told me about them dropping us from their books, I remembered they were painting and—" She broke off. Norman had ceased to smile.

That Mr. Smith

By SYDNEY FELL

"Now—you've got it all straight?" Ann Barrington leaned from the opened window of the car, her hands already on the wheel preparatory to starting.

"Yes, ma'am," she said. "Let me say it to you. When Mr. Smith comes I'm to show him into the par—living room. And give him his lunch on a little table in front of the fire. And make him comfortable till you come home."

"That's right, Susie," said Ann, as she started the engine. "And I'll be back about four."

And off she went, the loud purring of her engine falling away to a blur, and then to silence, as Susie watched her wind up the road and over the hill.

Susie was almost completely happy.

She had come to work for Ann Barrington straight from the orphan asylum that had always been her home. She had been with Ann two weeks, the two most interesting weeks, by all means, that she had ever passed.

Her life at the orphan home had not been unhappy. Indeed, it had been definitely happy. But it had been institutional. The freedom she enjoyed in Ann's kitchen and in the small, cheerful third-floor bedroom which she called hers at Ann's house was heaven to Susie.

Just one thing sometimes bothered Susie.

John Barrington, Ann's husband, was Susie's ideal of perfect manhood. To be sure, Susie's acquaintance with men at the home had been limited. Old Peter, the handy man—and occasional visits of inspection by members of the board of directors.

Susie's acquaintance was certainly limited.

Her idea of the perfect man had been formed largely from the heroes and villains she had seen on the once-a-week visit the home children made to the movies. And John Barrington certainly was nothing like those heroes or those villains.

At eighteen Susie had become acquainted, for the first time, with a real man. John was not good-looking, not glamorous in any way. Abut thirty, hard-working, rather solemn; but kind and considerate. He was devoted to his pretty young wife. And to Susie it seemed as if his devotion, his considerateness, his loyalty and attention must be enough to make the world a perfect place for Ann.

Yet sometimes Susie thought Ann was not quite as appreciative of her husband as she might be.

Today, Mr. Smith was coming, at Ann's invitation, to lunch.

Ann had invited him by telephone.

Susie had heard her.

"Do come for lunch," she had said. "My husband won't be home till dinner time. If you come for lunch that will give us five or six hours."

Then, at half-past eleven, there had been a telephone call for Ann. And a few minutes later Ann had come into the kitchen, dressed in her smart tweed coat and skirt, all excited and upset.

"Susie," she said, "I've just had a telephone call—my sister's little boy is ill and she's got to go away this afternoon. She has to go to court—some sort of suit she and her husband are involved in about his father's estate. So I've got to stay with the boy. And you'll just have to take care of Mr. Smith till I get back."

She had left the lunch all ready for Susie to serve, and had told Susie just what to do. And now, as Susie heard the last of Ann's motor as her car went up the hill, she was planning to do a little missionary work on Mr. Smith—work for Mr. Barrington.

Perhaps she'd tell Mr. Smith Ann had gone to lunch with another man—get rid of him before Ann came home.

So engrossed was she in her thoughts that she did not hear the car coming from the opposite direction.

Suddenly she was startled by a voice right at her side.

She looked up. There stood a young man—hatless, coatless, grinning.

"Oh," she said, startled. "Are you Mr. Smith?"

"Sure!" said the young man. "That's me. You Miss Barrington?"

"Mrs. Barrington's been called away. She couldn't help it. It's her sister's little boy—he's ill, and she has to stay with him. But she told me to tell you to come right in."

And Susie smiled, a smile that made her plain face radiant, and led the way to the house. She liked Mr. Smith—and she couldn't lie about Ann, when the chances really came.

"You go right in there and sit down," she said at the door of the living room. "And I'll bring your lunch right in. Mrs. Barrington said you'd be hungry."

"Well, sure, I'm hungry. Haven't had a thing since seven. Mrs. Barrington's swell ,isn't she? But say, if I'm going to have some lunch, I'd a heap rather eat with you. You eat in here?"

"Oh, no," said Susie. "I eat in the kitchen. You see, I'm Susie." And before she knew it she had told the strange Mr. Smith of her life at the home and of her present blissful existence as Mrs. Barrington's maid. A real home—real money—and the kindest people in the world to work for.

Mr. Smith gave Susie flattering attention. And in the kitchen he helped her set the oilcloth-covered table for two and, when she had the coffee ready to serve, and the salad and sandwiches, the cup cakes and shredded pineapple all daintily spread out—she tried to follow Ann's good taste in setting the table—he stood and held Susie's chair while she was seated.

Susie was thrilled. Never in her quiet life had she been so thrilled. She didn't blame Ann for being a bit interested in this jolly and very courteous Mr. Smith. He passed things to Susie, insisting that she help herself first. He said, "One or two—or maybe three—lumps?" and dropped them into her cup. He jumped up and went to the stove for more coffee. And he talked of the things that interested her.

"You look pretty in that pink dress," he said as they ate their dessert.

Susie blushed with pleasure.

"Like it?" she murmured. "I put on a white dress every afternoon—sort of a stiff one, like linen. And a cute little apron."

"Well," said Mr. Smith, through a mouthful of cake, "you'd look good to me even if your dress was mud-colored."

And they both laughed, as if at a great joke.

Then the doorbell rang and Susie went to the door.

A good-looking man, about Mr. Barrington's age, stood there. "Is Mrs. Barrington home?" he asked.

"No said Susie, "she isn't."

"Not home?" said the man. "When will she be home?"

"I don't think that's any of your business," said Susie, and slammed the door. "Fresh thing," she said, explaining to Mr. Smith in the kitchen. "Thinks just because I'm young I'll tell him all our affairs. Probably he's a burglar, come to pry around. I'm sort of glad you're here to protect—"

Mr. Smith beamed. "Sure, I'll protect you—always," he said. That was a swell feed you gave me. Sure Mrs. Barrington won't care?"

And then Mrs. Barrington herself burst in at the kitchen door.

"Oh, hello Sam," she said. "Come to fix the only faucet upstairs? You're the only plumber I ever knew that could be depnded on. Susie, wasn't it nice I didn't have to stay? The trial has been postponed—and anyway the baby's better. Mr. Smith come?"

And then between tearful apologies on Susie's part and half-exasperated explanation on the part of Ann, the thing was untangled, while Sam Smith, the young plumber, stood by very red of face and uncomfortable, ready to defend Susie if need be.

Mr. Smith—the Mr. Smith who should have eaten lunch in the living room—was an old friend of John's a college classmate, stopping at the house for a visit with Ann before he went on to town for dinner with John.

"And," said Ann, "I suppose he's the burglar you slammed the door on! Oh, well—"

Another ring at the door.

Ann answered it.

Sam and Susie heard her laughing, explaining. In a minute she came back to the kitchen.

"Hurry up, Susie," she said. "Let's scrape up some lunch for Mr. Smith—the other Mr. Smith—and me. Sam, you run upstairs and fix that leak. And—oh, Sam! Busy this evening? Well, why don't you invite Susie to go to the movies? I'm going to town to have dinner with my husband and the other Mr. Smith, and I don't want to leave Susie to a lonely evening. Have her home by eleven."

And as Sam's quick and cheerful acquiescence came down the back stairs as his noisy footsteps went up, Ann said: "He's a nice young man, Susie. You'll like him, lots."

"I do," said Susie, "already."

DANCE TEAM

By NED O'DOHERTY

The stage door of the only theatre in Hilltown swung open and the dance team of Elaine and Edmund stepped out into the glistening rain swept street. With hunched shoulders and lowered heads, they hurried towards the hotel.

The girl entered her unpretentious room followed by the man who slowly removed his coat and hat and, with a gesture of disgust, threw them into the farthest corner.

The girl, from force of habit, it seemed, picked up his discarded clothes and carefully hung them up.

"Elaine," the man said finally, "I'm completely fed up. For three years now I've been playing these one-horse towns, working like a Trojan, and what's the result? We all but break our necks doing difficult tap routines which brings us a lot of applause, but you can't eat applause!"

He turned to face the girl.

"Where's this break?" he shouted. "Where's this real money? Where's this mythical Broadway one hears about?"

Elaine came over and put her arm about his shoulders.

Blonde, silken hair fell down in waves about her neck.

Soft eyes filled with moisture which was somewhat prevented from becoming tears.

"Don't Ed," she urged. "Don't take it like that. Let's fight just a little longer."

He lifted her chin and brushed the tip of her nose with his lips. Just a peck it was; just a friendly, brotherly peck. Too brotherly, Elaine thought.

"O. K. kid," he mumbled, "I'll see you tomorrow."

And taking his coat and hat he left the room.

Elaine was sitting in the lobby when he came down next day.

He saw her, waved, and stopped to talk with the coquette who reigned supreme behind the cigar counter. Elaine smiled. Strange why she cared so much for him. Well, she did, and that was that.

A few minutes before they went on the stage, Eddie came to Elaine's dressing room for the usual limbering up. While they were in the midst of their intricate dance, someone knocked loudly upon the door and entered without the formality of waiting to be asked in.

Eddie was irritated at the interruption.

"Who are you?" he demanded angrily of the newcomer.

The man smiled.

"I," he began, "am the answer to a hoofer's prayer. My name is Lyons, which is beside the point, so I'll get to the point. I was sent down here to prevail upon you to pack your duds, and prevail further upon you to rush to Harrison's office in New York. Well here I am prevailing but you don't seem to be packing. How come?"

Eddie glanced about the room as if in search of something with which to tie up the lunatic. Not finding anything, he asked instead: "What, my good man, are you talking about?"

The man laughed:

"I forgot. Dear me, I forgot to tell you Harrison is producing a new musical comedy and the old fool is laboring under the delusion that he needs a hoofer. And you're elected."

With some effort he searched for something in his pockets.

Eventually he found what he was looking for.

"Here's your railroad ticket," he said, and dropped it carelessly upon the dressing table.

When Lyons had gone, Eddie grabbed Elaine and danced her round the room.

"I'm made," he shouted. "I've got a break at last! Broadway!"

Eddie danced that night as he had never danced before. Elaine was in a daze. She had never before been so heavy on her feet and she wondered, vaguely, if it was the weight of her heart that was holding her down.

Later in his hotel room, Eddie rushed about packing his clothes.

Elaine lay back in an easy chair and gazed intently at the discolored ceiling.

"Eddie, if you are sure they don't want me, too, what....well, what shall I do? I mean I can't do the act alone."

Eddie ceased packing.

He frowned, but only for a moment; then he smiled.

"Listen, Beautiful," he laughed. "A swell looking little dame like you would have only to lift her little finger and she would have a thousand partners."

Elaine arose quickly and hurried from the room.

She hated herself for crying, but she couldn't help it. At any rate it would be the last time. Never again would he be the cause of her tears.

People do not cry for those they no longer love.

Eddie arrived in New York next day and went directly to Harrison's office in the Strand building.

Harrison came from behind his desk and shook hands.

"Glad to see you, Eddie," he said, "but where's your pretty partner?"

"My partner?" Eddie frowned.

"Speak up, man!" he growled. "Where's the better half of your act?" Eddie fell back with a bewildered look in his eyes. "The better half? Oh! Why, I left Elaine in Hilltown."

Harrison chewed on his cigar ferociously.

"Listen, son," he said, tapping Eddie on the chest, "you get that pretty dancing partner of yours here in a hurry if you want to work in my show. Without her, you couldn't have a seat in the gallery." And he walked away.

Five minutes later Eddie had the Hilltown hotel on long distance. "Where's Elaine?" he shouted. "Yes, the cute little girl with the blonde hair. Where? Hollywood? When? Oh!...."

Then after what seemed like ages, waiting for the operator to put through a person to person call to Hollywood, Elaine's sweet voice on the other end:

"Hello?"

"Hello, Elaine, dear. This is Eddie. You know, your old partner. Listen, honey, could you come to New York right away? I have a swell proposition for you. You and I are going to dance together in the big show. I fixed it all up. What train will you take? I'll meet you."

Minutes ticked by before Elaine's cool, collected voice answered. Then:

"I'm sorry, Eddie, but I'm afraid you're too late. You see, for the past year I've been holding an option on a movie contract. Of course I wasn't interested while you and I were together, but when you decided to step out for yourself—well, I had no alternative. So I've signed a contract for a year at two hundred a week. But you should worry, Eddie. A handsome fellow like you need lift only his little finger, and ....but you know the rest of it."

For a long time Eddie remembered the final click of that telephone.

A World for Two

By OSCAR WALES

Rita hurried out the Spruce street door of the great store and made her way through the crowd of home-seekers to the motor bus. She had spent her noon hour window shopping and had decided to buy the stunning sports suit that had been reduced because of a small spot on the blouse. She knew that she could embroider a black flower on the black knitted silk—something formal that would not spoil the tailored effect, perhaps a symbol of cubistic square.

"I'm just agraid that Ed thinks me too shabby to take about," she told herself sorrowfully wishing she could stretch her small salary to the point where she could indulge in the frills that all girls love and especially those girls who work in the downtown stores and see the latest novelties.

For three weeks she had heard nothing from the young radio salesman and she had grieved until she had lost four pounds. And, when one weighs a scant 100 pounds, four pounds is important.

She loved Ed and she was not ashamed to admit it to herself.

He had been taking her about for some months and his manner had become increasingly tender until that last night at the theatre. The heroine, a dreamy girl with golden curls and babyish mouth, had spent her last $50 for dozens of roses because she expected her lover to call. He had arrived hungry and cold, and looking forward to a good meal, and Rosamond had told him gaily of her depleted finances.

It was at this point that Ed had turned to his companion saying:

"Isn't she wonderful? To be so romantic—so appreciative of the beautiful things of life."

Rita agreed that the scene was indeed lovely, but she had qualified this by mentioning the unwiseness of spending one's all in a moment.

"Suppose her lover had failed to reach that country house that night? What would she have done for dinner? The empty pantry was shown and there would be breakfast, too, to consider."

Rita had wondered at his sudden coolness that night, but had never connected it with the play except—and this had loomed big in her mind—except that he might have fallen in love with the exquisite Rosamond in her childish frock of expensive white lace. Rosamond, with her background of nodding pink roses was beautiful, and Rita had contrasted her own blue serge smartness with that dream of girlhood.

Rita made her own blouses and most of her sheer collar sets, often working until far into the night in order to make a bit of real lace that she could not afford to buy.

Passing a florist shop in Rosemont avenue, Rita glanced in.

She knew the girl who owned it.

Grace was in the far end of the small shop and she was bent over her tiny desk with a handkerchief in her hand. Rita stared in.

Surely Grace could not be crying.

There was no one else inside and Rita opened the door.

Grace bit off a sob and mopped her eyes. "Oh, thank goodness it's you Rita. I'm a sight."

"What's wrong?"

"I lost my purse and, my rent money was in it. The agent will be here by eight o'clock in the morning and what I'm going to do is more than I know. Where in the world can I get $60?"

Rita stood in stunned consternation. Where, indeed?

"He warned me when I rented this that he'd accept no excuses. 'Pay or go' he said. There won't be any important sales tonight. It's seven o'clock now. What in the world shall I do?"

Rita looked down at her purse.

In that she had the savings that she had withdrawn to buy her summer clothes. Sixty-three dollars. She needed the clothes but—another girl needed that money—it meant her living. If sh were put out what would she do? She knew that Grace had no near relatives, none in the city. Still, there was Ed. He might want to take her out and that meant clothes.

Motors whizzed past in the wide street and gay snatches of song or laughter drifted into the fragrant shop.

Spring had come definitely and the world rejoiced. The scent of lilacs came with the soft breezes and the smell of earth and bursting buds could be detected even in the wilderness of bricks and stone.

Love meant so much and modern love seemed to follow the girls who wore the prettiest frocks.

An unconscious sigh burst from Rita's pink lips.

She seemed to see Ed's face before her above the nodding flowers.

Then she lifted her head gallantly.

She could not see another girl in need when she had surplus money.

"Take this, Grace," she cried, opening her purse and unpinning the little packet of folded bills from the safe inner compartment. "I have it extra, don't have pay a thing with it."

Grace crimsoned.

"Good heavens, child, don't think I'd take your savings. I'll get through somehow. The shop is paying—it's just that my mad carelessness has left me strapped for the moment."

But Rita had made her decision and she dropped the packet into Grace's cash drawer and hurried toward the door.

"You can't leave the shop you know," she smiled and was gone.

Up in her fold-up flat she shared with a teacher Rita began preparing for dinner.

The teacher was out and she had the partment to herself.

The sharp tinkle of the doorbell sounded before she had finished eating and she pressed the button that released the street door.

She felt sure it would be Ed and her heart sang as she smoothed backq her hair and cast a glance into the hall mirror.

"Flowers for Miss Johnson," announced a small boy, almost buried beneath his load.

"Miss Grace sent me up with them."

Rita's eyes blazed with pleased excitement as she filled vases and jugs and pitchers with the long stemmed roses of scarlet. Grace had sent her very best blossoms and the shabby little room was turned into fairyland.

Again the bell.

Rita pressed the releasing button without anticipation this time.

"Hello, Rita," came Ed's voice, "how's everything?"

She tried to keep her tone careless as she greeted him; he must never guess her secret.

"How beautiful."

Ed stopped in the doorway, his eyes upon the roses. "I thought you didn't care about flowers. I got to thinking that maybe you were like these city girls who live only for clothes and jazz. Red roses. They beat any other flower there is. Smell them, Rita, they are like you, some way, glowing and fragrant, yet not showy."

Speaking, he put out his hand and drew her towards him, gently, reverently, yet with a strength that would not be denied. "I'd about decided to say 'good-by' tonight, but—"

The walls of the living room seemed to dissolve until she saw down a glorious vista of joyous scenes. A world for two.

"Rita who sent them to you," he cried abruptly, a sudden fear leaping into his eyes, "tell me."

She smiled mysteriously.

Another girl had opened the gates to happiness through her generous gift and Rita gave her postponed shopping not a thought.

The Bad Dream

GERTRUDE Von BERNUTH

It was a stormy winter night. The wind blew a gale, the rain came down in torrents, and Cynthia Blake was all alone in the Long Island house.

Cynthia didn't like being alone, and on a night such as this she hated it. Especially since it had recently been in all the papers that David had gotten a fifty thousand dollar executor's fee from the Dodge estate. That made her nervous. But she lighted a log fire and settled down beside it with her book, hoping against hope that the time would pass quickly. David would be home by 11.30 anyhow.

Eight o'clock, nine o'clock—surely that clock must be slow!—ten o'clock—and the telephone rang. Cynthia sprang to answer it.

"I'd like to speak to Mrs. David Blake." It was a man's voice, business-like, yet rather sauve.

"This is Mrs. Blake" said Cynthia.

"Oh! Well, Mrs. Blake, I'm afraid I have some disturbing news for you."

"Yes?" said Cynthia, striving hard for self-control. Something had happened to David! "What is it?" she asked faintly.

"Er—Mr. Blake has had an accident." Cynthia gave one cry of anguish and then forced herself to listen.

"Mr. Blake was on his way home in a taxi, and his car skidded on Queensboro bridge. I happened to be driving by and stopped to see what had happened. Mr. Blake isn't seriously hurt, but they insisted upon taking him to Bellevue for examination and treatment. His one worry seemed to be about his wife, so I told him that I'd phone you. In fact, I told him that I'd gladly take you in to Belelvue, if you cared to go."

"Oh, would you? That's awfully kind of you!" cried Cynthia. Her one wish was to get to David, darling David. That was all that counted.

"How soon can you be ready Mrs. Blake?" asked the voice.

"In five minutes! Oh—you're sure that my husband's not badly hurt?" she implored. "You're telling me the truth, aren't you?"

"Mr. Blake is not badly hurt. He may have a broken rib or two, but—"

"Come on, come on, cut it out," broke in a rough voice. "We ain't got much . . ." then silence, as if a hand had been suddenly placed over the mouthpiece. Then:

"That was some one who wants this booth, Mrs. Blake. I'll be there inside of fifteen minutes. Good-by."

As Cynthia put the receiver back on the hook, she was puzzled. Her fear about David seemed to have vanished. She began to be her usual cool-headed self. That other voice, so rough and snarling. "Come on, come on, cut it out. We—"

Cynthia raced upstairs to the extension phone beside her bed.

"Pennsylvania-6-3500," she said speaking into the mouth piece again."Hello, hello, is this the Bar association? Is Mr. Blake there this evening—Mr. David Blake? He was to be in conference with—"

"Yes, Mr. Blake is here. He's in room 510. I'll connect you with him if you wish."

"If you please," said Cynthia.

"Mr. Blake, please," said the voice. And then David's voice saying hello.

"Dave is that you?"

"Certainly it's I. "What's up?"

"And are you all right?"

"All right? Of course I'm all right. What's the matter with you? I'm just starting for home."

'O. K" said Cynthia, and hung up the receiver.

"Operator, I want the police," she said, taking down the receiver again.

"I'll connect you," said the operator. Her voice sounded excited.

"Po station, One Hundred and ninth precinct. What is it?" asked a man's voice.

"Officer," said Cynthia. "This is Mrs. David Blake, at 20 Weybridge road, Bayside, Long Island. I have just had a phone call from a stranger who tells me that my husband has had an automobile accident and wants me to come to him in Bellevue hospital. The man said he would be here in fifteen minutes to take me to my husband. I have since located my husband by telephoning and he's perfectly all right. But I thought, if the man comes, I'd like to have the police."

"Humph! A snatch! Well, have some one there inside of three minutes, lady. Don't be scared. Take it easy."

Cynthia hung up the receiver with fingers that trembled. That was that. Now what? She sat tense listening for sounds outside, and finally heard a car coming up the road. Which is it, she wondered, the 'snatcher' or the police? She shivered a little.

Just then the telephone rang again.

"This is Dave again," said her husband's voice. I'm phoning from the Long Island station. Is anything wrong out there? I'm worried."

Suddenly Cynthia heard a commotion outside, and a shot rang out. "'S all right, I dropped him," shouted a voice. "Where's the other one? Did he get away?"

"He won't get far. I blew his front tire, and the other boys are just coming up the road. They'll get him."

"Cynthia!" shouted David. "Is anything the matter? You're acting awfully queer. Why did you all me at the Bar association?"

"Oh, I fell asleep by the fire and had a bad dream," said Cynthia. "Tell you about it when you get home."

GERMANY STARTS NEW CRISIS

Another German-made crisis with the characteristics of the past eighteen months is on the horizon—a reiteration in the German press of "horrors" to German nationals in border Polish communities, the cry of Germans in Danzig for reunion with the Reich, the late summer-early autumn movement, such as was shown last August and September before Munich, huge concentrations of troops, military manoeuvres the occupation of Slovakia, are some of these.

Hitler means Germany to go as far as he will be allowed to go. No one in any of the democracies believes the German leader has altered one jot—the world does not know how far he dare go before the peace front. Of course the nations believe that only force, whether used in battle or in lineup of powers can end the Hitler menace to the world.

The British ministers have been called to Westminster, Chamberlain starting one day ahead of schedule for a meeting which was arranged before Parliament prorogued.

This crisis is faced with confidence, but naturally with anxiety by Britain and France, now in an immensely more powerful position to face any emergency than one year ago. Today they have a resolute Poland with them, a Poland whose morale Germany has been trying without result to break down. The democracies will not 'let Poland down.'

Italy now sees how far she has been led into the arms of Germany by the Axis agreement. There are signs, many believe, she is very anxious to prevent outbreak of war but on the face of things, she must appear a unit with Germany.

There is no doubt of critical days ahead. Germany can make in the next three months or more a mighty gesture or worse if she will for the time of year seems to suit any war-like intention if such should be the final German step.

The Axis powers have stood revealed in all their selfish aims since the Anschluss of Austria and the Czechoslovakian grab. Democracies the world over know force menaces and will continue to threaten the world until this cancerous growth is removed in some manner. No nation trusts the German Government, Germany has satellites through fear but underneath any pacts are believed to be 'curses loud and deep' for the German Fuehrer and Nazism. In the long run it is the world against this deadly political growth of nationalism, Fascist and Nazi.

NEXT WEEK THE FAIR

Late summer and early autumn are the days picked for annual fairs and exhibitions. Harvests have been garnered and the season has come when man and woman can measure the progress of growth of the year for the year's growth has largely been completed by nature, though there are crops which yet remain to be harvested.

Belleville's annual fair is one of the earliest, falling on the last three days of this month and is a fitting close to the holiday season which officially ends on the day on which the fair closes, August 31st. Set in the middle of the week with two market days and a Wednesday half holiday, the dates should appeal to the crowds.

Officers and directors state that the outlook from the agricultural and industrial standpoint is bright, exhibitors will be more numerous than ever and the exhibition in every way complete with every attraction which should be found at a fair which aims to represent the district. That the attendance and weather will be satisfactory are the two factors which count greatly. The attendance rests with the people of Belleville and the district and there is every reason to believe it will break the record.

SEIZURE OF SLOVAKIA

Once more, as in the case of his seizure of Bohemia and Moravia last March, Hitler has acted with lightning suddenness and with no warning. But in taking military possession of Slovakia only five months after he had solemnly guaranteed the boundaries of that country for twenty-five years, he reveals, so that the dullest may understand, the complete worthlessness of his treaties and promises, and the impossibility of coming to any negotiated understanding with him with any assurance that it would last a day longer than he found it convenient.

But whatever the purpose of the move, it puts beyond doubt the futility of the old policy of appeasement and of any hope of gaining peace from Hitler by concessions. Nobody can doubt now that nothing more than an armistice, terminable at Hitler's own will, could be bought by turning over Danzig to him.—New York Times.

THE ENTERTAINMENT APPEAL OF MOVING PICTURES contains a mystery which even the movie magnates cannot solve. Hence it is not surprising that the onlooker fails to understand the public appeal some pictures have and the lack of appeal others have for the general public. Current mystery of the celluloid is the play "Goodbye Mr. Chips," which has made one of the greatest movie sensations in the United States in recent years. Being familiar with the life story of this lovable English schoolmaster, who was father, brother, and chum of his boys, a mild, emotional, but very human reflection of the lives which came into the focus of Mr. Chips, the schoolmaster, and were influenced by him for good, the immediate popularity of the film story for United States audiences seemed a mystery to the writer. A Belleville member of the Sidelight Family, (A.E.H.) saw the film in Buffalo and passes along his impressions to the other members of the Sidelight Family, as follows, under the caption:

EVERYBODY LOVES OLD "CHIPS"

Crowds clamoring for seats to see "Goodbye Mr. Chips" had to be turned away at Shea's Buffalo during the opening days last week. I thought I'd take no chances and went early but was surprised to find at one o'clock the big theatre was packed to the doors and had been since ten a.m. However, after waiting awhile I was lucky enough to nab a seat.

"Goodbye Mr. Chips" is a supreme strip of celluloid if there ever was one, and the remarkable portrayal of the lovable schoolmaster from the ages of 24 to 83 by Robert Donat is without equal on the screen. The picture at once assumes a place among the great productions of the decade.

We have got into the habit of associating the names of Paul Muni and Spencer Tracy with the Motion Picture Academy Award. These splendid Hollywood actors are now facing a powerful rival in Donat; in fact, already many critics are mentioning the English star and the Award in the same breath.

I was curious to find out what the American reaction would be to the portrayal of the British public school spirit, its infusion of boys with tradition, with the indefatigable loyalty to accumulating consistent ideals. The Americans have notions about British smugness and I had a feeling they might be inclined to resist such a theme as quaint and stolid, even faintly funny. It is not easy to translate for American eyes and ears the best in the British public school spirit.

I needn't have worried. The biography of Brookfield is a thing set apart. The march of the lads through this old place, through the prime of Victorianism, through Boer War days, through World War years is managed quite superbly and of course Mr. Chipping is a cord that binds the generations together. This remarkable character, this dear and affecting personage, always the great central figure, has been portrayed by Donat in a manner that truly brings him to life. And no actor can boast of a greater achievement.

So many have read Hilton's best seller it is needless for me to sketch the story. Although this is a one man performance, the burden of which is carried superbly throughout by Donat, Greer Garson as Katherine deserves more than passing notice. She is sweet and beautiful (not glamorous—thank Heaven) in an entirely unconventional and countryfied way.

The grave, plain sweetness of the romance in this picture has been handled with restraint. One can well imagine that if this picture had been made in Hollywood Mr. Chips might have looked like a Charles Laughton when he fell in love and turned into an Errol Flynn at the first kiss. Nothing like that happens; it is a spiritual, not a physical transformation that we perceive and like to believe. And yet when love comes into the life of the musty little schoolmaster with his ludicrous mustache and bad clothes he takes on dignity and acquirres direction.

The crowd in Shea's Buffalo theatre thoroughly enjoyed Mr. Chips. You could tell it by the quiet chuckles, the sighs of approbation, the little sobs from overflowing hearts and the spontaneous applause at the finish.

You'll love old Chips. You'll love him so much you'll forget there's a Donat in the picture for it is Chips come to life, Chips as you've always pictured him in your mind. No wonder James Hilton says of the picture "it is an author's dream come true."

THAT BODY OF YOURS

Rest is Important in Gaining Weight

A woman of 35 found that she was too thin for her height. While her friends envied her boyish figure, she realized that a little padding of fat underneath her skin would give her the graceful curves of womanhood instead of the flat, rail-like figure she possessed.

Before trying to increase weight, she visited her physician and dentist. The physician found her normal and the dentist found the root of one tooth suspicious so cleaned out the root canal and put in a filling. She increased her starch foods by one-half and doubled the amount of fat foods. She ate a banana or an orange or chocolate bar at 4 p.m. and a glass of milk at 11 a.m. and before going to bed. Her gain in weight was slow but gradual and by the end of three months she had put on five pounds. At the end of five months she found that she had put on but one pound more and at six months there had been no further gain and still no further gain at seven months. As her object was to gain ten pounds which her frame could easily carry, she was greatly disappointed and again consulted her physician. After careful examination including a metabolism test which showed that her thyroid gland was normal, the physician asked her about her hours of sleep and if she had any rest periods during the day.

The facts were that this woman was very active during her work in a downtown office, having to supervise the clerical work on three floors, her own office being on the middle floor. In addition to this she was taking a correspondence business course which meant studying three nights a week. Her hours of sleep did not average more than six daily.

The reason that there was no great gain in weight was because too many hours of the twenty-four were being used for physical and mental work. There is little wear away of fat or other tissues when one is asleep. This is when weight accumulates.

The lesson is plain. Fat and starch foods will increase weight if the underweight will rest more. More sleep and more rest periods during the day are as important as food in gaining weight.

Gravedigger Padlocks Chains to Sons' Feet To Make Boys Behave

Paralysed Wife, Near-Blind Daughter, Make Strange Family — Boy Found Clanking Through Streets

Elizabeth, N.J., Aug. 19 (AP) — A gravedigger—with a paralyzed wife, a nearly-blind daughter, and two 'teen-age sons said by police to be on probation for stealing auto accessories—must explain to a judge why he allegedly padlocked heavy iron chains to the boys' ankles to impede their movements "so they wouldn't get into trouble."

Detective George Craig said he found 13-year-old Domenic Naturile clanking through the streets with his chain yesterday.

Craig said the boy explained: "My father put it on so we won't get in more trouble. My brother, Frank, is home with one on his leg, too."

Going to the home, Craig said, he found 15-year-old Frank, also on probation, with a chain on his ankle.

The father, Joseph, then out on a job, later was called in and ordered by Mrs. Mae Lynch, probation officer, to remove the chains. Mrs. Lynch filed a complaint of cruelty to children.

Prince's Launch Upsets 4 In Boat, Prince Rescues All

Amsterdam, the Netherlands, Aug. 19 (AP)—A father and three children fell overboard from their motorboat when a launch driven by Prince Bernhard, husband of Crown Princess Juliana, crashed into it on a lake near here yesterday.

The prince rescued all four with a boathook.

Prince Bernhard was towing a surfboard for a friend on the "Loosdrechtsche Passen", a favorite boating lake between Amsterdam and Soestdyk, and apparently failed to see the other boat.

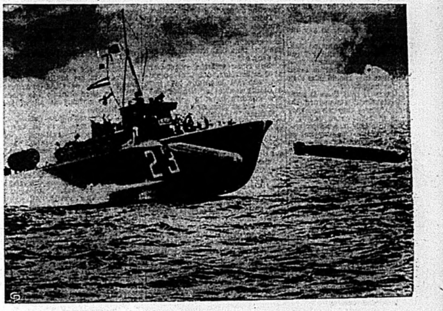
DOUBLE-BARRELED DEATH FROM BRITISH SEA "MOSQUITO"



This remarkable photograph is the first ever to be published of the latest type of speedy and deadly motor-torpedo boat of the British navy's "Mosquito Fleet" in action. Torpedoes have just been fired from the boat's twin torpedo tubes—and have not even struck the water to speed to their target. These deadly stinging "Mosquitoes of the Sea" are as hard hitting as they are hard to hit—darting into action at speeds of 50 miles an hour and more, their torpedoes make them deadly to the heaviest battleship.

THREE ESCAPE SERIOUS INJURY

Car Turns Over Near Madoc but Occupants Crawl Out Unhurt

Madoc, Aug. 21 (Special)—Three teen-aged lads of this village narrowly escaped death one mile south of here on Saturday night, when the automobile they were riding in skidded on the loose gravel and turned over twice into the ditch. The driver of the car, Gordon Govier, 17, and two companions escaped unscathed, suffering only from shock.

Eye-witnesses who saw the vehicle skid and then tumble over twice into a ditch, were astounded when they hastened to the wrecked vehicle and saw the three lads crawl practically none the worse for their experience, from beneath the wreckage. Young Govier was attempting to negotiate a sharp curve on the Belleville road south of here when the car skidded on the loose gravel.

The vehicle was reduced to a crumpled wreckage.

Jobless Insurance 'Urgent Necessity'

'Must be Administered by Single Government'—Prof. Mackintosh

Lake Couchiching, Ont., Aug. 21—(CP)—A national unemployment insurance scheme has become an "urgent necessity" in Canada, Dr. W. A. Mackintosh of Queen's University, Kingston, said today in a speech prepared for delivery to the Canadian Institute on Economics and Politics.

Because of the need for co-ordinating unemployment provision with trade and monetary policies, any scheme "must be administered and financed by a single government," Professor Mackintosh declared.

"Experience has shown that in periods of great unemployment the provinces have not the financial resources to carry the responsibility. The only government which can command both the resources and the experience necessary to administer such a plan is the Dominion government."

The major part of any adequate social security program must be unemployment insurance.

What he advised was not a lightening of the burden for the provinces but a shifting of the responsibility to Ottawa.

"Provincial or municipal administration of unemployment relief is impossible without grant-in-aid," he said. "We have had enough experience with grants-in-aid to demonstrate, I think, that the system is wasteful. It is always wasteful to have one government expend money which has been raised by another government."

Professor Mackintosh warned that payments under unemployment insurance program should be lower than the normal earnings of the worker. They must be designed to lead to re-employment.

FRED COLEMER

According to County Constable Frank Atkinson and Traffic Officer Wilson who investigated the Riebell car occupied by eight passengers was proceeding west, while the Depew car was travelling east a short distance outside the limits of Brighton village, when it is alleged by the police, Mr. Riebell, driver of the west bound car apparently reached for something in one of the pockets of the car or was otherwise attracted from his driving and the car swung quickly to the south and directly into the path of the Depew car. The Depew car was turned over in the south ditch and Colemer was pinned under the wreckage. Willing hands soon extricated the man from his position and he was rushed to Belleville hospital but died a couple of hours after admission.

Constable Atkinson stated last night there had been no charges laid in the accident and would not be any until the inquest was completed. The body of Mr. Colemer will be taken to Bowmanville for interment.

COUPLE

Woman Attacked First

As nearly as the investigators could reconstruct the crime, it was thought Miss Milroy was attacked first by whoever entered the home It was believed Milroy heard his sister's screams and ran into the house, picking up a kitchen chair that was found broken near his sister's body.

Neighbors reasoned that a break-in during broad daylight would have been planned only by someone who knew that Miss Milroy was feeble and almost blind and that her brother probably would be out of the house.

Badly Battered

The heads of both victims were badly battered by a blunt instrument but the bodies were not heavily marked. There was no indications a gun might have been wielded.

Mrs. William Oliver, the nearest neighbor, found Miss Milroy dead and Milroy dying late in the afternoon when she went to aid Miss Milroy in household tasks, as she had done since the aged woman underwent an operation a month ago.

At 10 o'clock in the morning Mrs. Oliver's daughter, Jessie, visited the house and found nothing disturbed. Soon after that, police believe, the murders were committed.

Then the murderer or murderers ran to the Milroys' garage and drove off in their 10-year-old automobile, which was found yesterday about five miles away in a bush near Hespeler.

Milroy drove to Galt early in the morning to deliver milk. Later he was seen in his fields by two boys to whom he gave permission to pick apples in his orchard.

Hired Men Away

The Milroys' two hired men, Richard Rivers and Alexander Grant, went for the day to the farm of the Milroys' second cousin, Stewart McBean, to aid in threshing operations. The hired men said the Milroys were "gentle and kind" and treated them "in the best possible way."

Funeral services for the pair will be held tomorrow. There only close surviving relative, Dr. Thomas Milroy of Winnipeg, a brother, is en route here.

FATAL ACCIDENTS

At Fort William, Gertrude Ristanen, 19, was killed Sunday when an automobile in which she was a passenger collided with one driven by John Gregor.

Drowns Near Windsor.

Austin Amley, 21-year-old father of two children, drowned Sunday near Windsor when he got into difficulties after diving from a raft. Two others who made a rescue attempt were nearly pulled beneath the surface.

When his boat capsized during a fisherman's contest at Blenheim Philip Gilbert, 35, Detroit, drowned Saturday while two companions were saved after clinging to the overturned craft for 15 minutes.

Gerald Voisin, 17, St. Clement's, was killed Sunday when the automobile he was driving was struck by a motorcar driven by Vivian Bertram of Toronto at Baden, eight miles west of Kitchener. Bartram was charged with criminal negligence.

Struck By Car.

While he was walking on the highway near Cobalt, William Brennan, 46, Cobalt, was struck by a truck driven by Albert Russell of New Liskeard. He died in hospital of a fractured skull. Brennan was said to have walked into the path of the truck.

Fred Colemer, 60, Bowmanville, died in hospital a few hours after the automobile in which he was riding was struck by an automobile driven by Charles Riebell of Rockport, N.Y., on the highway near Belleville Sunday.

At Eastview, a suburb of Ottawa, 22-months-old Pierrette Belair was crushed under the wheels of an automobile backing out of a laundry yard Sunday. The child died a few hours later.

Frank Kierdorf, 60, Detroit, was killed and his wife was critically injured Saturday when their automobile crashed into the rear of a stalled transport truck on the highway at New Glasgow. Mrs. Kierdorf was taken to hospital in St. Thomas.

ACCIDENTS DUE TO RAINY WEEKEND

Ten Admitted to Belleville Hospital Suffering from Injuries in Crashes

Ten persons were admitted to the Belleville General Hospital over the week-end, the direct result of increased motor accidents, which occurred throughout the Bay of Quinte area during a rainy week-end. It was the largest number of persons to crowd the local hospital as the result of motor accidents, during one week-end this year. Only one fatality resulted however. In practically every incident the motor crashes were attributed to the wet slippery pavements, caused by the heavy downpour over the week-end.

Fred Colemer, 60, of Bowmanville, died in the hospital as the result of a motor accident, while a Brazilian honeymoon couple and two persons from Toronto were taken to hospital after a head-on collision near Deseronto.

Five other persons sustained severe injuries west of Brighton, when two cars were in collision on Highway No. 2 early yesterday. Mr. and Mrs. Melville Lee, Milton, Ont., and Wm. Hoskins, 39-year-old C.N.R. draftsman, and his father, James Hoskins, a railway inspector, both of Verdun, Que., were badly shaken up and cut, when the two vehicles sideswiped near Brighton. Dr. R. S. Gibson of this city is in attendance. Mrs. Hoskins, Jr., escaped uninjured, however. H. T. O. Wilson of Cobourg investigated and dispatched the injured persons to the local hospital.

Several minor accidents occurred along the highway between Deseronto and Brighton, Motorcycle Patrolmen Caldwell and Ervine reported today, but generally speaking no serious injuries except the above mentioned, resulted. "The wet, slippery pavement during and after the week-end rains, were directly responsible for the greater number of collisions," stated H.T.O. Ervine as the greatest toll of property damage of the season was reported during one week-end.

COUSINS CLING TO UPSET BOAT

Spilled Into Cold Waters of Georgian Bay Manage to Reach Shore After Hour

Meaford, Ont., Aug. 19 (CP)—Mickey and William Gardner, young fishermen from Weirton, W. Va., managed to reach shore after clinging for more than an hour to their overturned boat in Georgian Bay yesterday.

The cousins were spilled into the water when a sudden change in the wind overturned their home-made rowboat as they fished for bass. Another change in the wind started the craft towards shore and the boys hung on grimly until carried in.

"It was a terrible experience to be out in that rough water," Mickey said, "but we kept calm and knew that if we could withstand the cold water and our strength would hold out, we would eventually get to shore."

William F. Gardner, father of one of the boys, and Bob Irwin were caught in the squall two miles away and before they reached shore their boat was filled with water. They were able to wade ashore but their fishing tackle and a string of bass were lost.

Porker Disappears From Car Trunk

"This little pig went to market——"

But he didn't come home like the little pig in the nursery rhyme.

On Saturday C. L. Redner, Rossmore, brought a small pig to market, but was unable to dispose of his porker on the open market. Mr. Redner har merely dropped the porker in the rear trunk of the car, opening the lid for sale inspection.

Leaving his car parked on the market square and the little pig safely lodged in the car trunk, Mr. Redner proceeded with his shopping in the city. Later when he returned to his car, however, the little porker was among the missing.

The matter was promptly reported to the police but no signs of the wayward pig or stories of "the big bad wolf" having been seen followed.

AN ABRUPT END TO HONEYMOON

Ernani Peixpo and Wife of Rio De Janeiro Injured Near Deseronto

A Brazilian honeymoon came to an abrupt and sorrowful conclusion with the bridegroom now in the Kingston General Hospital following a headon motor car crash east of Deseronto late yesterday afternoon. Both vehicles implicated in the crash were reduced to practically useless wreckage.

Ernani Peixpo, Rio De Janeiro, Brazil, a bridegroom of but a few weeks enjoying a honeymoon in North America, is in the Kingston Hospital suffering from extensive internal injuries and slight concussion, while 29-year-old Wilfred Powell, Toronto, and Miss Margaret Kinzinger, also of Toronto and who were passengers in the other car, are in the Belleville General Hospital. Powell was suffering from concussion, while Miss Kinzinger sustained an injured leg.

Mrs Alziro Peixpo, bride of Ernani Peixpo, was driving easterly on Highway No. 2 at the time of the accident when the Peixpo car skidded on the wet pavement, crashing headon into an east bound car driven by Brinley Powell, Toronto. Both vehicles were damaged beyond repair.

The honeymoon couple from Rio De Janiero had sailed by boat to New York City, where they recently purchased a new automobile, which Mrs. Peixpo was driving when the vehicle skidded headon into the Powell car. It was raining at the time of the accident.

Motorcycle Patrolman Sam Ervine investigated the crash and stated the matter of traffic charges would be left in the hands of Crown Attorney Kenneth Ham, Napanee. Miraculously no fatal injuries resulted in an accident that saw both vehicles demolished.

Mrs. Peixpo is the daughter of the President of Brazil, being the former Miss Abzira Vargas De Amaral, while Mr. Peixpo was formerly governor of Rio de Janeiro.

Fisherman Lands 5 3-4 Pound Bass

The answer to a bass fisherman's prayer came to a trio of Belleville fishermen over the week-end when Robert Chesher hooked and landed the grand-daddy of the large-mouth bass.

The finny beauty weighed five and three-quarter pounds and measured 21½ inches over all. Mr. Chesher was fishing with Messrs. Morley Baker and Clayton Webb in the Bay of Quinte east of Riley's Pavilion when the big fellow struck.

To finish off what was generally conceded to be a perfect day's sport Mr. Webb hauled in his line after a particularly heavy strike and discovered a small-mouth bass hooked on the front gangs of the plug while securely hooked on the rear gangs was a large-mouth bass. Both fish put up a strenuous struggle but Webb was successful in landing both.

ROBINSON—HOLTON

Gladioli, palms and ferns decorated Howard Park United Church, Toronto, for the wedding Saturday afternoon, of Barbara Louise Holton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Holton, formerly of Belleville, to John Forbes Lewis Robinson, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Robinson. Rev. C. A. Williams officiated, assisted by Rev. H. A. Frost. Mr. Burkley played the wedding music.

AT THE BELLE

"The Gorilla"

Mystery goes merry when the Ritz Brothers, as three half-wit Hawkshaws get on the trail of something big as an elephant and ten times as nasty in "The Gorilla" the 20th Century-Fox fun-and-fright film opening next at the Belle Theatre.

Of course, a Ritz is afraid of nothing—but this is something—and it's all set to scare you silly—with laughter!

Said to be the hair-raisingest of all hilarity hits, "The Gorilla" brings a great case to the screen in support of the Ritz Brothers. Carefully selected by Production Chief Darryl F. Zanuck, it includes Anita Louise, Patsy Kelly, Lionel Atwill, Bela Lugosi, Joseph Calleia, Edward Norris and Wally Vernon.

The Ritz Brothers play that inimitable trio of detectives, Harrigan Mulligan and Garrity, in the Rian James-Sid Silvers screen play based on the memorable stage hit by Ralph Spence.

And from the moment they arrive on the scene, bent on tracking down the weird beast, there's fun—and fright—to pay.

For the Ritzes are one thing and a gorilla is another—but when you put them both together in a house full of sliding panels and slippery people whose host has been threatened with murder at midnight—brrr!

The boys take one look at the gloomy old mansion.

"I'll bet there's a dead body in every room," ventures Harry.

"A dead body can't hurt you," counters Al.

"It can't do you any good," concludes Jimmy.

And the riot is on.

"The Kid From Texas"

Fast action on the polo field and fast action in making love combine with high-speed comedy in "The Kid From Texas" second of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's sports dramas featuring Dennis O'Keefe, which comes to the Belle as the companion feature attraction with Florence Rice, Anthony Allen, Jessie Ralph and Buddy Ebsen in a topnotch cast.

An original by Milton Merlin and Byron Morgan, the new story deals with a Texas cowboy who gets the polo craze, masters the game, invades Long Island's social set, pays strenuous and greatly-resented courtship to an heiress, and wins his triumph and the girl when he invents a game between wild Indians and cowboys for a Wild West show.

All the thrills of the polo field and a Wild West show are combined with a number of dramatic moments in the love story. Comedy thickly interlards the story. O'Keefe tries to rescue the heiress to find the water's only knee deep; he hits the richest woman in Long Island with a ball while practicing polo, which he insists on playing in his cowboy garb; the denouement climaxes romance and at the same time ends the picture in a gale of merriment.

S. Sylvan Simon, who directed "Four Girls In White" directed the polo comedy-romance. Famous polo players, horses and polo fields are shown in the action. Details of the care and training of the ponies add an intimate touch of interest. O'Keefe and Ebsen add to the hilarity with a hill-billy song, "Down in the Middle of Texas."

The Belle News of the Day will be presented on the same program.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Captain Fury"

United Artists Production, directed by Hal Roach, with the following cast:

Captain Fury—Brian Aherne.
Blackie—Victor McLaglen.
Dupre—Paul Lucas.
Jeanette Dupre—June Lang.
Coughy—John Carradine.
Trist—George Zucco.
Preston—Douglas Dumbrille.
Mabel—Virginia Field.
Governor—Lawrence Crossmith.

Outstanding entertainment, stirring adventure and rich romance, a story with the background of Australia, when the country was an open frontier land, the "must see" picture of the year, "Captain Fury" is now playing at the McCarthy Theatre.

In the role of a modern Robin Hood, Brian Aherne heads the great cast, with June Lang, more beautiful and more glamorous than in any of her previous pictures and with Victor McLaglen, star of "Gunga Din" in a character part that should again win him the coveted Academy Award, the principal trio of stars have well been selected by Mr. Roach, director.

The story of "Captain Fury" dramatizes early Australia, at a time when it was overrun by greedy land barons who fought honest colonization by incoming settlers. Captain Fury, a political prisoner, arrives in Australia just when the worst offender, Arnold Trist, is carrying on underhand thieving against the unprotected citizens, grabbing their land by every foul means and setting up an empire within an empire. Fury becomes an Australian Robin Hood who provides the story with punch-packed episodes as he drags the fight out into the open and outwits his adversary in a thrilling climax. The film has been produced with the accent on action and characterization, and too much praise cannot be given for the direction of the story by Mr. Roach. The producer has turned in a picture packed with thrills, action, speed and imagination. "Captain Fury" fills the bill on all counts.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Ridicule Crushes a Child's Spirit

Ridicule is the bane of any child's existence. It crushes the spirit of a child, especially of a sensitive child, and often, pitifully often, makes him embittered and self-conscious all his life.

Loving and lovable mothers and fathers realize that ridicule in any form, and of anyone, whether of any member of the family or of someone not of the family, is destructive criticism.

Ridicule is too cruel a weapon to be used on a child. Banish it from your home as you would try to banish a most dread disease, for it is indeed a social poison. It is not constructive training. It is not skilful training. It is not fit training There is no kindness in it, no courtesy to the young sprit trying so desperately to "understand". It is a thoughtless, cowardly way to humiliate a child, to stab its spirit. No right-thinking mother and father should allow themselves to use it, or should allow one child to use it on another child.

Of course every family has its "little jokes". But keep them gay little jokes, not barbed wires from which a child is constantly trying to extricate its hurt feelings.

If a child's words pathetically hesitate to tell us of this cringing before devastating ridicule, its eyes will tell the sad story to those who will read.

Informal Church Wedding

Dear Miss Beeckman

We are planning to be married November first at a very informal church wedding at half past four.

1—My attendant and I will wear street-length dresses with matching accessories, and will carry bouquets of chrysanthemums. Is an arm bouquet appropriate, or do you think a corsage would be more suitable?

2—The groom and best man will year business suits. Should they wear boutonnieres?

3—Should my mother and the groom's mother wear corsages?

4—Both my fiance and I have many relatives and friends, and we went them all to share with us our "days of days". There is the problem of the invitations. Somehow I don't care for word-of-mouth invitations. I would much rather write these people notes of invitation. Could I properly write these notes, or is this one of my mother's duties, even though she doesn't know the groom's relatives and many of his friends?

5—Do you think it advisable to have ushers—at least two— or do the guests just sit wherever they care to when they arrive? If there are ushers, do they precede the maid of honor in the procession, or would it be better for them to act as "doormen", keeping late guests on the outside during the ceremony?

Joan

1—Since you and your attendant are to be so simply attired, I would definitely suggest that you and she wear corsages instead of carrying arm bouquets. A corsage seems more appropriate with a street-length dress . . . don't you agree? A bouquet of chrysanthemums would be too "possessive" of your costumes, I think.

2—Yes, it will be completely appropriate for the groom and best man to year boutonnieres . . with their business suits. If you decide to wear a corsage, and if, let's say, it is to contain a few sprays of lilies-of-the-valley, your bridegroom could appropriately wear two or three small sprays of these, worn "as is", no attempt to make them into a formalized boutonniere. Or he and the best man might wear a small boutonniere of bachelor buttons, especially appropriate with a business suit.

3—Yes, your groom should gallantly send a corsage to your mother and one to his own mother. The mothers should have a gala touch too!

4—Like you, I don't care much for word-of-mouth invitations, although sometimes these can be especially gracious; for example, when it is apparent that the giver of the invitation has made a special effort to go to call on the person to "extend" the invitation.

It's always a compliment to receive a written invitation, and I am delighted that you are enthusiastic about sending written invitations. It is correct for you to write these, but I always very much like the idea of having these written by the bride's mother, for, as the hostess of the home and therefore of the occasion, it is gracious for her to do the inviting.

The fact that your mother does not know the groom's relatives and many of his friends is not an adequate reason why she should not write the invitations. Indeed, to my way of thinking, this makes the invitations written by her more appropriate, for it gives them family background and appropriate hospitality background.

5—Yes, I do think it advisable to have ushers ,at least two, and perhaps four would be better. They give dignity and convenience to the seating of the guests, seating your relatives and friends in the pews on the left side of the aisle down which the procession is to come, the groom's relatives and friends in the pews on the right side of the aisle. You and the groom will, I am sure, feel more comfortable knowing that your guests are being properly and gallantly cared for, while you are on your way to the church and preparing for the formation of the procession.

At your informal wedding, you may or may not have the ushers take part in the procession, as you and your groom prefer. But I don't think that it will be necessary for them to be "doormen", since the door to the vestibule should be closed after the procession has passed through. Wedding guests are usually not late . . . as a matter of fact, they plan to be early birds to get the desirable seats to view the procession. And if any guests are late, they usually realize that they should, if the doors of the church are closed, go quietly to the gallery.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

Speak to Her Father Immediately

Dear Miss Fairfax—

We both read our column almost every day and enjoy it so much. We expect to be married in the fall sometime, not having fully decided the date. We haven't told anyone, although we've been engaged for a couple of months. We want to keep it secret until I can get her an engagement ring.

Now my problem is, when shall I ask her father? Must I wait until after I've given her the ring, or tell him after we've decided on the wedding date? Or shall I ask him right away, even before I can get the ring?

Anxious

These days, young people take the matter of their future so much into their own hands that the formality of parental consent is frequently not asked until after the youngsters have made their own decisions. The ring really is but a small detail.

It would be a courteous and tactful thing—befitting a future member of the family—for the young man to speak to the girl's father about the engagement as soon as possible.

Exchanging Rings and Pins

Dear Miss Fairfax

A certain question has been troubling me for some time. A boy friend of mine asked me to wear his ring, and I hesitated until I can find out what it really means. Does it mean anything to wear a boy's ring or pin?

Rae

You do not say whether you refer to fraternity pins and rings, or just ordinary jewelry. If they are brotherhood or class symbols, more significance is attached to them. In certain college fraternities, when a girl wears a man's pin, it practically announces her engagement to him. This also holds good with class rings in other universities.

It is a compliment, certainly, to lend or wear a ring or pin, and it denotes interest. On the other hand, it frequently makes trouble if these articles happen to get lost, and also if one fails to return the other's property. Sometimes there is misunderstanding about what the wearing of them really signifies to the two people involved. Better make it a point to find out before you lend yours, or wear another's pin or ring.

Discouraged Too Easily

Dear Miss Fairfax

One of my friends invited me to his home one evening and there I met a lovely girl, an American, whom I loved from the beginning. She said she also liked me a great deal, but I was surprised at that, as I am not very good looking, being rather stout with features not much to look at.

Her mother objected to me as soon as she met me because I am of foreign birth. From then on I was more determined than ever to keep up my friendship with this girl. We kept on going together, and she told me not to mind the ravings of her mother. This went on for several months.

Then—she met and fell in love with another boy, and told me that she thought it best to break off with me. I gave her up without saying a word. I met another girl, and fell in love with her, but the same thing happened and I gave her up.

Now, I'm really in love, because the feeling I have for this girl is vastly different from the other affairs I've had. What if another boy should come into her life, and she'd want me to give her up? I love her so much that it would just about break my heart if I had to give her up. Would I do wrong in trying to hold this girl's love?

Wondering

I'm afraid you give up too easily. When you see a rival you become discouraged too quickly when you step aside and give him a clear field. In this case, if you are sure this is the one girl with whom you will always be happy, hang on and don't give anyone else a chance to make any progress. If you are in a position to marry why not settle things by proposing?

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Operation Essential For Certain Types of Hernia

Abdominal hernias in children usually occur around the navel, or umbilical cord. Another kind of rupture, not so common but more troublesome is hernia of the groin.

This is a malady which may occur in either girls or boys, but it is much more common in males. When it happens, the bowel breaks through the muscle of the abdominal wall and drops right into the scrotum. If the child stands up, coughs or cries very hard, a firm lump appears in the scrotum. This type of hernia may be controlled, but it is never cured by a truss.

These ruptures are exceedingly troublesome for they are so hard to cure. Operations are needed in such cases much oftener than when the rupture is at the umbilicus. Nearly always, in my experience, an operationis necessary to cure scrotal hernia. This operation, generally speaking, shouldn't be performed until the child is several months or a year old. During this waiting period, there is some danger that the bowel may get caught in the scrotum and cause a stoppage of the bowel. When this happens the symptoms are about the same as those I described in the case of umbilical hernia. The child passes nothing through his bowels, he vomits, and the hernia itself becomes hard and cannot be pushed back into place as it could be formerly.

When this strangulation of the bowel takes place, about the only thing to do is operate at once. If you don't, the child will likely die. Several times, however, I avoided this emergency operation by holding the child up by the feet, taking the pressure off the abdomen. I was then able to stuff the bowel back through the aperture.

If your child has a hernia, and the doctor suddenly advises an emergency operation, don't wait, let him do it at once, for time is a great factor. If you are a little hesitant about the operation, have the doctor call in a consultant. But whatever you do, don't keep the doctor waiting hour after hour while you make your mind up.

I have been reading recently where some doctor claims that hernia never develops before birth. It is his contention that the rupture is sustained after the child is born. I don't think I agree with him. I remember one case of a child who was born feet first. The child had two inguinial hernia and I saw them before the head was born. Several time, too, I have seen babies that had umbilical hernias as soon as they were born. I don't see how they could have developed them if it hadn't been before birth.

Cardinals Stamping on Heels Of Cincinnati Reds Cutting Their Lead to 3 1-2 Games

Cards Have Won 19 and Tied One of Last 22 Games Played

WIN TWIN BILL

Steve Sundra of Yankees Chalks Up 7th Straight Victory

By JUDSON BAILEY

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Those bells ringing in St. Louis may have sounded like a false alarm to some fans, but the 7-1 and 7-5 victories the Cardinals captured from Cincinnati Reds yesterday made everybody know this is a real four-alarmer.

The new Gas House Gang has won 19 and tied one of its last 22 games, and burned the Reds' National League lead down to 3 1-2 games.

The great Chicago fire—when the Cubs won 28 of their last 40 games to overtake Pittsburgh Pirates a year ago—is being dwarfed rapidly into insignficance.

The Cards ate into the Reds yesterday with the score tied in the first game's eighth inning. Jimmy Brown singled with the bases loaded. The Gang went on to score six runs in two innings.

Mize Hits Two Homers

In the nightcap, Johnny Mize hit two home runs, one with two on and the other with one aboard. Manager Bill McKechnie used seven hurlers in the two games.

The Cubs and Pirates divided their double bill, Chicago winning the opener, 9-5, to extend the Pirates' losing streak to 12 games and a new league record for the season. Max Butcher pitched Pittsurgh to a two-hit 5-0 shutout in the second session, shortened to six innings by Pennsylvania's Sunday law.

New York Giants and Philadelphia Phillies also split their bargain program, with Hal Schumacher leading the Terrymen to an 8-4 triumph in the first game. Gil Brack's double with the bases loaded gave the Phils the nightcap, 3-2.

Boston Bees and Brooklyn Dodgers were rained out.

7th Straight For Sundra

Home runs by Dick Siebert and Bob Johnson gave Philadelphia Athletics a 5-4 victory in their first game with New York Yankees. But Steve Sundra's five-hit pitching and assorted slugging led by Red Rolfe, who homered in each game, won the second for the champions, 6-1. It was Sundra's seventh triumph without defeat.

Boston's second-place Red Sox were unable to take advantage of this opening and lost their first game with Washington Senators, 2-0, in the face of Dutch Leonard's effective knuckleballing. Too late, they got their hitting going to win the nightcap, 10-5. Jimmie Foxx hit his 32nd homer of the season in this one.

St. Louis Browns spoiled "Buck Newsom Day" for Newsom at St. Louis by defeating Detroit Tigers, 6-2, behind Vernon Kennedy's five-hit hurling. The second game was rained out.

Seventh Win In Row

Chicago's White Sox chalked up their seventh consecutive triumph in a 10-innings 6-5struggle against Cleveland Indians. A single by Eric McNair scored two runs in the 10th to overtake the tribe.

In Saturday's American League program the Senators and Red Sox split a doubleheader, Boston taking the first 8-6 and the Senators the nightcap 2-1. Detroit downed St. Louis Brown 9-3 and Chicago edged out a 6-5 win over Cleveland. The Philadelphia-New York fixture was washed out.

Rain halted the Reds-Cardinals Saturday game in the ninth with the score at 3-3 and cancelled the New York-Philadelphia game. Brooklyn blanked Boston Bees 4-0 while the Cubs shutout the Pirates.

'SI' JOHNSON, FIRST HURLER TO WIN 20 GAMES

Rochester Moundsman Beat Newark Bears 9-2 for 20th Victory

LEAFS LOSE TWO

Tony Lazzeri, Manager at Toronto, Goes to Mound in Montreal

(By The Associated Press)

That old saw about the "rich get richer" must have been made expressly for the handful of pitchers who dominate the International League.

Not that they are piling up wealth, but the fellows who have the most victories are getting more. And the won and lost column is the pitcher's stock in trade.

Southpaw Al Smith of Buffalo Bisons, leading percentage pitcher in the League, won his 11th against two defeats by turning back Syracuse Chiefs 3-2 in the abbreviated second game of a doubleheader.

The Chiefs took the first game 8-0 behind towering Johnny Gee, who had won 16 previous games. Gee was struck in the mouth by a liner off George Savino's bat in the seventh and Ray Benge finished the shutout.

Si Johnson of Rochester Red Wings became the first flinger to attain 20 victories, by beating Newark Bears 9-2. It was the first time in 12 years of major and minor league baseball the chunky righthander had won that many games. His task was made easy yesterday by a 14-hit Red Wing attack which featured four home runs.

Joiner Wins 17th

Roy Joiner, ace of the league-leading Jersey City Giants, chalked up his 17th victory with a five-hit 3-1 performance against Baltimore Orioles. Joiner gave only two safeties in the first eight frames.

The day's strangest pitching chore, however, saw Manager Tony Lazzeri of Toronto Maple Leafs take the mound against Montreal Royals.

After Montreal had won the first game 4-2 and scored eight runs in the first two innings of the nightcap, Lazzeri relieved Bill Weir. Two runners were on base and no one was out when Lazzeri, a versatile infielder before his legs gave out, took charge and retired the side. Although he was touched for a run in the third, Lazzeri had only one bad inning, four runs in the sixth, as Montreal won 13-4.

In Saturday's play Montreal took their third straight from Baltimore 7-2 and Toronto dropped two in a row to Jersey City which blanked the Canadians 1-0 and 5-0. Rochester beat the Bears, 4-2 and Buffalo won from the Chiefs 10-5.

Canada May Not Have Hockey Team At Olympic Games Next Winter

By JACK CALDER

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, Aug. 21 (CP)—Canada, winner of the Olympic hockey competition in ever staging but that of 1936, may not be represented by a hockey team in next winter's Olympic games at Garmisch-Partenkirchen, Germany, if the clouds over Europe do not clear up.

Port Arthur Bearcats, Dominion senior champions, long ago were designated to represent Canada at the 1940 Olympics, strengthened "where necessary" by two or three players. But the Bearcats' entry appeared today to be contingent on public reaction in Canada to affairs in Europe.

Without once referring to the Olympic games, the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association's central committee announced after a meeting here Saturday that terms again were being offered to Port Arthur for a European tour in the coming season.

The terms, already rejected once by the Port Arthur Club, call for a trip similar to that made last winter by the 1937-38 Dominion champions, Trail Smoke Eaters, except that the struggling Bearcats will get a $5,000 donation from the C. A. H. A. "clarification" has been given in the repeated offer, the Association announced.

Await Developments

Questioned regarding the Bearcats' expected appearance at the Olympics, President Dr. W. G. Hardy of Edmonton said the matter of formal entry would have to await "developments."

Dr. Hardy didn't say what those developments might be, but it was learned the central committee decided to try to gauge public opinion on the matter of sending a team to Germany. Although all members of the six-man body refused to be quoted, they indicated an immediate entry to the Olympics might have repercussions in the face of international events to come.

"After all, the C.A.H.A. shouldn't be the measuring-stick in an affair like this," said one. "I think it's a matter of the entire country's attitude."

Strengthened For Tour

The Bearcats may be strengthened for their tour by players approved by the President of the Thunder Bay Branch of the C.A.H.A., the management of the Port Arthur club and Frank Saroent of Port Arthur, second vice-president of the C.A.H.A.

"We feel the $5,000 grant should be adequate to strengthen and equip the Bearcats and take care of any extra expenss," Dr. Hardy said.

The C.A.H.A. repeated its warning to players commuting to Scotland for the coming season that they must have sanction of the British Ice Hockey Association and the C.A.H.A. or face suspension by both organizations and by the Amateur Hockey Association of the United States and the National Hockey League.

JUG McSPADEN CANADIAN CHAMP

Par-Five Hole Spelled Defeat for Big Ralph Guldahl

By SUDNEY GRUSON

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Saint John, N.B., Aug. 21 (CP)—The meanest hole on the par-five, 489-yard dog's leg that saved the Canadian open golf championship for Jug McSpaden of Winchester, Mass., and lost it for burly Ralph Guldahl of Madison, N.J.

There were more broken hearts and near-broken clubs on that hole during the open than on the other 17 combined. When it was all over and McSpaden had the title with a 72-hole total of 282 to Guldahl's 287, big Ralph muttered his hate. He took 14 strokes, two sevens, in Saturday's final rounds.

"No matter what I did I couldn't play that ding-dong hole today," said Guldahl, who won $600 for second place to $1,000 for McSpaden. "On my second round I was so darn glad to get a decent lie with my drive that I let the excitement go to my head and knocked my second into the woods."

He did almost the same thing in the morning and the big 14 ruined any chance Guldahl had of catching the leader.

McSpaden started the day with three strokes on Guldahl and five on Stan Horne of Montreal and Pudgy Arthur Hulert of Toronto, gunning for the first Canadian victory in 25 years. Guldahl wound up with 73-75 Saturday; Horne with 72-78 and Hulbert went the limit, 73 in the third round and 83 in the fourth for 297.

Vic Ghezzi of Deal, N.J., knocked off a 71 after a 74 for a total of 288, third place and $400 while Bobby Cruickshank, the wee Scot from Richmond, Va., went around unnoticed by the galleries in the best golf of the day, 71 and 69, to come from far back to fourth place with 289. It was worth $300 to Cruickshank.

Horne and Ross (Sandy) Somerville of London, finished as top Canadians, tied in fifth place with 291s. The slight Horne got $200 for fifth place and another $200 as leading Canadian pro while Sandy got a medal and the honor of first amateur, five strokes better than Ted Bishop of Boston.

DESERONTO WINS OVER POINT ANNE

Score Surprise 9-4 Win in Second Game of Play-Downs

It's all even in the Point Anne-Deseronto intermediate "C" series play-off in the O.A.S.A., the Deseronto kids handing 'Bubby' Gaulin's Ox Point charges a surprise 9 to 4 drubbing at Deseronto on Saturday.

The homesters added insult to injury by clubbing "Ding" Luffman for 18 hard and safe base blows, as Fraser, the Deseronto hurler, scattered nine hits fairly well and was never seriously troubled after his teammates scored six big runs in the fifth inning. The third and final game will be played at Point Anne Tuesday.

Every member of the Deseronto squad touched Luffman for at least one hit as Jackson, their left-fielder having a perfect day at bat getting five hits in as many official trips to the plate. Hughes touched Luffman for three safeties, while Frazer helped his own cause with a home run in the fifth, the big inning that saw the winners score six runs and cinch victory.

Genereaux, Whitehead and Loft, with two hits each, paced the losers and accounted for six of their nine hits.

Deseronto 2 0 0 0 6 0 0 1 x—9 18 1

Umpires — Bawden, Belleville, plate; Cole, Deseronto, bases.

Yesterday's Stars

(By The Associated Press)

Jim Brown and Johnny Mize, Cardinals—Former singled with bases loaded to spark four-run rally which won first game of double-header; latter hit two home runs and batted in six tallies to win nightcap.

Dick Siebert, Athletics, and Red Rolfe, Yankees—Former drove in three runs with homer and single as A's took first game and latter hit homers in both games and batted in three runs as Yanks won second session.

Gabby Hartnett, Cubs, Chicago manager, drove in four runs with double and single to lead his team to victory in first game.

Jimmie Foxx, Red Sox—Led Boston to triumph in nightcap with his 32nd homer and a single.

Eric McNair, White Sox—His single brought in two runs in 10th inning to beat Indians 6-5.

Hal Schumacher, Giants, and Gil Brack, Phillies—Former scattered nine hits and himself got two doubles in winning first game while Brack's two-bagger with bases loaded in the eighth inning decided second game 3-2,

HE GOT UP TO WIN

Here is a picture in sportsmanship and courage. The sportsmanship is extended by Don Hawley of Orange, N.J., who massages a leg cramp which has felled his opponent in the Bretton Woods invitation tourney, Gerard Podesta of Montclair, N.J. The courage was Podesta's who, after a brief rest, went back to play—and win.

Ambers Not Known To Lose Return Go

New York, Aug. 21 (AP)—Henry Armstrong and Lou Ambers, a pair of game little fighting men, will meet in a 15-round bout at Yankee Stadium Tuesday night to decide the world lightweight championship, and there is no reason for believing it won't be a whale of a fight.

The men who ballyhoo such things for Promoter Mike Jacobs have dug up more angles than in a geometry lesson, most of them intended to convey the idea that Champion Armstrong shouldn't be a top-heavy favorite. But Lou usually takes care of those things himself.

The excitement which is expected to draw some 30,000 customers and a gate of perhaps $150,000 goes back a year to the time when Armstrong lifted the title from Ambers and thus became the first fighter in ring history to hold three championships at the same time. He later vacated the featherweight throne and he has agreed that if he loses Tuesday he'll defend his welterweight title against Ambers in November.

Ambers never has been known to lose a return bout. He won them from such guys as Tony Canzoneri and Fritzie Zivic, who broke his jaw once, and Pedro Montanez. He figures on preserving this record against Armstrong and with that in mind has been trying to develop a punch that will put the hammer down for keeps,

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

Ken J. Colling

War scares and international situations will have to share a place with the sports news in the Old Country for the next few days at least. With the English Soccer Leagues opening next Saturday, football is king and Britain is once more divided into three sections—players, fans and pool betters and nobody seems at all worried about war, except the football wars of next Saturday afternoon. Millions of football enthusiasts from all parts of England and Wales will flock to watch their favorites, but all will find the "national emergency" has entered strongly into the soccer football picture without much pre-season publicity.

Missing from the line-ups and from the spectators' galleries will be 20-year-old players and fans, who have been called up for emergency military service during the past few weeks. However, most of the players affected are part of the clubs' reserves, because those who were needed badly by their clubs were excused from military service, which might or might not prove something, insofar as war is concerned. During all of Saturday's opening games the football moguls are co-operating with the nation in an effort to "make Britain strong" program.

Southern fans are wondering who will fill the shoes of left-half of the champion Portsmouth team, left vacant as the result of a serious off-season motor accident in which Jim Guthrie was injured. He sustained a fractured skull in a motor accident, which immediately prompted Manager Jack Tinn to gain some publicity by banning motoring for his players. "Let them walk to and from the grounds, it will make them healthy," predicted Tinn. It is estimated there are over 10,000,000 football pool gamblers in Britain and another soccer lottery will be introduced this year and sponsored by the Trades Unions for paid up members only.

Did you know that the R.C.A.F. "Flyers" have only lost two of their last seven games in the Bay of Quinte baseball loop? They played Picton, Napanee and Belleville tie matches, beat Belleville and Picton and lost to Picton and Napanee for a record that Skipper Al Laut feels should make his Airmen favorites over the Belleville 'Orfuns' in the first of the Quinte loop play-offs, which get under way at the Fair Grounds on Tuesday evening. Belleville baseball fans have neglected the "Orfuns" to a noticeable degree all season, but after last week's 4-3 game these patrons present left the park high in their praises of the calibre of ball played by both the Flyers and Belleville. After that game the rival managers will doubtless send the same two pitchers, Joe Kelleher, for Belleville and Harry Dole, of the Air Force, back to their mound assignment.

Dan Parker of the New York Mirror observes: "The next time a famous National League pitcher plays in St. Louis, he faces arrest for assault and battery on a charge brought by a fan he hit.... Mrs. Lefty Gomez studies dramatics while attending the games at the Yankee Stadium....Ernie Lombardi, catcher for the Reds, is known as the softest touch in the National League for the borrowing brethren....Noisiest member of the New York Giants is Jimmy Ripple."

Literally hammering the offerings of "Ding" Luffman in a most prolific manner, the Deseronto mushballers evened their Intermediate O.A.S.A. series with the Point Anne "Cementmen" on the home lot Saturday, winning 9 to 4. A six run splurge in the fifth inning practically settled the issue, as the best the Cementmen could do was garner one run at a time. Deseronto out hit the Ox Point squad 18 to nine for good measure. In their first meeting Point Anne won 19 to 5 and apparently were over-confident on Saturday. However, the Deseronto kids are as good as the Cementmen today and it's all even as the teams move into third and final game. Frazer, who did the relief pitching in the first game of the series for Deseronto, silenced the Point Anne bats on Saturday, especially in the clutches, as the homesters made merry at the expense of Luffman. The third and final game will be played at Point Anne tomorrow evening, but the big softball tilt of the week opens at the Flats this evening with Point Anne meeting the Shell "Oilers" in the first of the City League finals.

There were big goings on in the major leagues over the week end the Reds and Cards battled to a darkness draw on Saturday, but the St. Louis "gas-house gang" walloped the Redlegs for two losses yesterday whittling Cincinnati's lead to 3 1-2 games, which isn't too many at this late stage of the league schedule. Taking into consideration the Cardinals have won 19 and tied one of their last 22 games played ,their record to date is most impressive and they seem to be the top-ranking team in the senior circuit, despite the fact the Reds are leading the parade. Over in the American league the Yankees continued to win when they count the most, splitting with the Athletics over the week end to retain a 7 1-2 game lead over the Red Sox. Dutch Leonard elbowed a 2-0 win for the Senators over the Red Sox, which in no way materially assisted the latter in their bid to become a second Cardinal threat of the majors.

SPORT SPICE—All those finny beauties we went after are still in the North Hastings lakes, we're sorry to report......However, we came back in time for tonight's initial City League softball final at the Flats where the Cementmen and "Oilers" cross bats..... Remember that Henry Armstrong is the only modern fighter to hold a one-man monopoly on three world's titles at one time, but he's facing a tough assignment tomorrow night in Lou Ambers, who has the reputation of never having lost a return bout.... so take your pick, youse guys and gals....The Browns got revenge on their former team mate, Buck Newson, as they beat the Tigers yesterday 6 and 2....There is a possibility that the Port Arthur Bearcats, 1939 Allan Cup winners, may not represent Canada in the 1940 Olympics games a mere matter of public opinion, as the Olympic hockey is to be played in Germany, maybe.

HOW TO OVERCOME ITCHING PILES

If you are annoyed with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not neglect the same or run the risk of an operation. Any itching, soreness or painful passage of stool, is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once. For this purpose get from J. S. McKeown or any druggist, a package of Hemroid and use as directed. This formula, which is used internally, quickly relieves the itching and soreness and aids in healing the sore, tender spots. Hemroid is a physician's prescription and is highly recommended. It is easy to use and it seems the height of folly for anyone to risk an operation when a simple remedy, which is so pleasant to use may be had at such a reasonable cost.

POLICE CHIEF A NOVELIST

Detroit, Aug. 21—(CP)—On Sept. 1 Highland Park residents will be able to boast of having a novelist as police chief. On that date Chief Dan Patch's novel "Past Finding Out" will be issued. The chief wrote the 320-page book which has a religious theme, between his duties on running a force in a city of 60,000. The 52-year-old chief wrote the book from his observations as a law officer.

SEN. F. O'CONNOR

First Store in 1913

He had little more than a recipe for making chocolates when he opened his first store in Toronto, in September, 1913, and sold his own product over the counter himself. Within eight years branches of his firm, Laura Secord, spread across Canada.

He entered the United States market in 1921 at Rochester, N.Y. under the name of Fanny Farmer Shops, and his United States business grew rapidly. When he sold his shares in the Canadian and United States companies, he was a multi-millionaire.

But his employees were not forgotten during his years in active business. On the 10th anniversary of the firm's start, he gave his employees a share of the profits.

Noted For Gifts to Charity

Senator O'Connor was noted throughout the Dominion for his gifts to charity and to the Roman Catholic Church. In 1925 he gave $125,000 to St. Michael's College, Toronto, for the building fund and further gifts to aid special departments.

On Aug. 7, 1935 he gave $500,000 to Most Rev. J. C. McGuigan, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Toronto. Among the institutions that benefitted were the Hospital for Sick Children $10,000; St. Joseph's Hospital, Peterborough $10,000; Toronto Star Fresh Air Fund $1,000; Church of The Precious Blood, Wexford $10,000; Carmelite Orphanage, Toronto, $1,000; Institute For The Blind $10,000; Christie Street Hospital $10,000.

Honored by Pope

Pope Pius XI elevated the Senator to the rank of Knight Commander of St. Gregory on May 8, 1937 in gratitude for his services to the church.

Most of Senator O'Connor's political labors were behind the scenes. He was an intimate friend of Premier Mitchell Hepburn and was credited with being a major factor in the Liberal victory in Ontario in 1934. He retired as treasurer of the party in Ontario in 1937.

Wife Credited With Success

Senator O'Connor credited his wife for much of his success. He married Ellen Hayes of Belleville, who died in September, 1931. Two children survive, Mrs. Frederick Neale and William O'Connor.

During the latter years of his life he purchased a large estate just outside of Toronto.

10th Vacancy in Senate

Ottawa, Aug. 21—(CP)—Death of Senator Frank Patrick O'Connor in Toronto today created the 10th vacancy in the Upper House and cut the Liberal representation to 32 against 54 for the Conservatives.

There are five vacancies in Quebec, three in Ontario, and one each in Alberta and Manitoba.

For the last six weeks Senator O'Connor has been confined to his home and was constantly in an oxygen tent. With him at his death were his son and daughter and a brother, Frederick A. O'Connor.

The body will rest at the Senator's country home, Maryvale, until Wednesday at 9 a.m. when it will be taken to St. Michael's Cathedral for Requiem High Mass. Interment will be in Mount Hope Cemetery, Toronto.

ARMS INDUSTRY

Some 14,000 are turning out guns and other material at the army's manufacturing arsenals, a gain of 4,000 within a year.

Approximately $150,000,000 in contracts for new tanks, guns and other weapons and materials to be let this fall by the army ordnance department may provide jobs for several times this many workers. Private industry will do three-fourths of the work, officials said.

Licences to export munitions were issued to a record total of $112,026,044 up to Aug. 1, and more than half the shipments remain to be made. France alone ordered warplanes and other arms in the first seven months of the year costing $71,667,460.

The United States army and navy together are spending within a year an unprecedented peacetime aggregate of nearly $1,000,000,000 on guns, tanks, barracks and ships — exclusive of normal operating expenses. Most of the outlay remains to be made, although army orders for planes and engines alone have totalled $192,000,000 in less than four months.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Aug. 21 (CP)—Morning reports from Europe concerning war fears were far from re-assuring to stock holders and they sold the mining and some of the oil shares in considerable volume on the Toronto Exchange today at much reduced prices. Gold stocks showed an index loss of 2¾ points at noon while the industrials were down 2½ points, the base metals about 1¾ and the western oils about ⅝. Volume reached 264,000 shares in the first three hours with the selling tapering off at the end of the first hour.

Base metal issues weakened regardless of the advance in the price of metals. Noranda lost about 1½, Nickel and Smelters dropped fractions and Sherritt sold off 9 cents to 96. In the western oil group Home Oil, off about 30 cents was the weakest, Calgary-Edmonton, Okalta, Anglo-Canadian and Foothills weakened 5 to 10 cents.

Practically all industrial groups were heavy. Walkers Common weakened 2 points and recessions of ½ or more appeared for Distillers-Seagrams, Fanny Farmer, Ford A, International Pete, Loblaw A and others. Losses of 5 to 15 cents were boarded by the active golds including Kerr-Addison, East Malartic, Preston, Kirkland Lake, O'Brien, Pickle Crow and Little Long Lac.

WALL STREET

New York, Aug. 21.—(AP) — A back-sliding stock market today gave up fractions to more than 3 points.

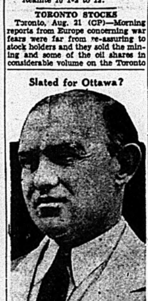
There was a slow-down in offerings after a fast opening in which blocks of 1,000 to 4,000 shares of leading steels and motors changed hands. Effort to drop the list subsequently were unsuccessful, and, near the fourth hour, prices were around the worst. Dealings again picked up near midday.

Selling was attributed mainly to more serious European war threats.

Prominent share losers were U.S. Steel, Bethlehem, Youngstown, Chrysler, General Motors, U.S. Rubber, Boeing, United Aircraft, Montgomery Ward, American Telephone, Western Union, Westinghouse, Du Pont, American Can, Safeway Stores, Loft, Santa Fe and Union Pacific.

McIntyre Porcupine tumbled nearly two points in the Canadian group while fractional losses were chalked up for C.P.R., Dome, Hiram Walker and Distillers. Dominion 4s were under fairly heavy pressure in the bond market.

Oils were moderately resistant throughout.



Slated for Ottawa?

According to reports from Washington, Harry H. Woodring, U.S. secretary of war, may be appointed to succeed Daniel C. Roper as United States minister to Canada. Mr. Roper, appointed temporarily during the visit of the King and Queen to Canada, has resigned from the Ottawa post.

FIRES BEING PROBED

St. Catharines, Ont., Aug. 21—(CP)—Fire and police department officials today probed three fires set in St. Catharines Catholic Church here yesterday. They were believed lighted by a religious maniac. The church is the largest Ecclesiastical Edifice in the Niagara Peninsula.

The church was discovered filled with smoke by the housekeeper who threw pails of water on the fires. Firemen found that cloths on the altar and baptismal table had been charred and the two antependia of the altar was damaged by falling debris. The wooden frame holding the altar linen was charred. Loss was estimated at about $100.

Slight Advance in Produce Prices

Toronto, Aug. 21.—Butter and eggs closed the week on a firmer footing after advancing slightly in improved trading on the Toronto open produce market Saturday. Cheese was quiet and unchanged.

After declining steadily all week, butter became firmer on Saturday as demand suddenly improved. Trading increased and first grade Ontario creamery solids gained a fraction to close at a range of 21c to 21¼c. With receipts arirving in normal quantities, the market appeared steady at the slightly higher level. Sales of Western butter were made at 21½c pound.

Egg receipts were very high for the day, and consumer demand was decidedly better. As a result, A-large eggs in the graded section firmed to a range of 26c to 27c a dozen, and A-medium to a range of 25c to 26c. Dealers said the upward movement was merely a reflection of a firmer trend on the Montreal market where wholesalers were reported to have paid as much as 29c for top-grade eggs. On the whole, grading was not heavy on the local egg market Saturday, although there was definite improvement over action in the past few days.

Montreal Eggs Gain.

Montreal, Aug. 21.—Potatoes held about steady on produce makets here last week, while eggs gained one cent, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported.

Job price of first grade creamery butter prints was 22¼ to 22¾ cents a pound, and of first grade solids 21¾c to 22¼c. Western butter delivered in Montreal was unquoted. Price to creamery of Quebec No. 1 pasteurized butter delivered in Montreal for current make was 20¾c, and price of Quebec No. 2 pasteurized butter was 19¾c. Receipts: 17,123 boxes, compared with 18,959 a year ago.

Price to factory of Ontario white current make was 10 7-16 to 10 11-16c and colored 10⅝c to 10 11-16c. Quebec white was quoted at 10c and colored at 10¼c. Receipts: 31,215 boxes compared with 31,087 a year ago.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases sold at 28c a dozen for A-large, 26c for A-medium, 21c for A-pullets, 20c for B-large, and 15c for C. Receipts: 5,585 cases, compared with 7,373 a year ago.

RAPIDLY-MOVING

This was said to have been for the purpose of keeping the opposition advised of developments in the foreign situation during the parliamentary recess.

The Belgian move in calling the Foreign Ministers of the six other neutral states associated in the Oslo trade convention to a conference in Brussels Wednesday offered the possibility of some Anglo-French action toward a settlement of the German-Polish dispute over Danzig.

Parliament May be Called

A joint statement by Britain and France reaffirming in strong terms their pledge to aid Poland in event of an attack upon her but at the same time advocating negotiation by Germany and Poland was considered another possibility.

In some political quarters there were suggestions that parliament should be reconvened immediately and used as a medium for a new warning to Germany.

In some British quarters, the effectiveness of any move toward mediation or a peace appeal by the small Oslo powers was discounted pending some indication of a more conciliatory attitude by Germany.

Intense Activity

London, Aug. 21 (AP)—Intense diplomatic and military activity throughout Europe today created an impression in political circles the stage is being set for developments pointing the way to peace or war, possibly before the week ends.

Many observers viewed trends of the past several days as indicating that from some quarter might come a concrete proposal for a formula of negotiation whose rejection or consideration would decide whether Europe's problems are to be decided at the conference table or on the battlefield.

Russian Trade Treaty

A somewhat incalculable factor was the announcement of a trade agreement between Germany and Soviet Russia on the eve of resumption of talks among British, French and Soviet military experts toward a three-power mutual assistance pact.

One possibility that attracted discussion was that of Germany making a "final offer" to Poland on demands for Danzig and a link with East Prussia through Pomorze (the Polish corridor).

In Berlin, the press insisted "Polish insolence" was speedily exhausting "German patience" and "Der Tag"—day of accounting — was spoken of with increasing frequency. But some papers hinted Poland might yet "save herself" by initiating an acceptable suggestion.

At Danzig yesterday, the Nazi district leader, Albert Forster, told a crowd of uniformed police that the "hour approaches now" and added "when it comes we will win."

There was still the possibility that Poland, feeling the pressure of extensive military activities on her borders, might advance some plan.

Week of Crisis Seen

The Poles, stiffly opposed to negotiations under pressure and insistent that Danzig is vital to Poland's independence, nevertheless several times have voiced willingness to discuss the situation with Germany. The Polish newspaper Czas said this "will be a week of crisis—to be decided: Peace or War."

Foreign Minister Count Ciano of Italy has been engaged in strenuous diplomatic activity following talks with Fuehrher Hitler and his Foreign Minister, Joachim Von Ribbentrop. Premier Mussolini asserted May 14, "there are not at present in Europe problems big enough to justify a war."

Returns "Borrowed" Art

Serge Bogousslawsky, youthful French painter of Russian descent, created a sensation as he walked into the Parisian law courts accompanied by his lawyer, and handed over to an examining magistrate the missing masterpiece, "L'Indifferent," by Watteau. Serge said he had borrowed the $1,000,000 masterpiece from the Louvre because his artistic soul was pained by the sloppy retouching on it, and because he wanted to clean and retouch it properly.

OTTAWA INVOKED

Jack Leydon, 14-year-old Halifax model aircraft builder and flier, barred because of his youth from competition in C. N. E. Dominion championship matches, appealed to model craft authorities in Ottawa, has been notified that he may compete. He will contest five classes, including gasoline jobs.

HELD IN PAL'S DEATH

James R. Hazzard, 32-year-old grandson of Lillian Russell, famous beauty of Diamond Jim Brady's day, is shown as he was questioned in regard to the death of his Cuban pal, Thomas Martinez, who was found in a bathtub of scalding water in Hazzard's apartment.

7 SMALL POWERS

The calling of the conference of Foreign Ministers spot-lighted the man reported behind the move — Leopold, King of the Belgians.

Leopold's hatred of war is deep-rooted, beginning when as a lad of 12, he watched German armies overrun his country in a sweep toward Paris.

He came to the throne unexpectedly 5 1-2 years ago when his father, King Albert, was killed in a mountain-climbing accident.

An example of the part he has played in government affairs was given last Feb. 2, when he summoned his cabinet ministers to his palace and, when they were assembled, marched in with his staff, all in full uniform.

Then for 40 minutes he lectured them on the needs and omissions of government. Belgium's internal troubles were promptly healed for the time being at least. He is 37 years old.

Leopold's relationship with Great Britain and the British royal family is extremely close.

BRITISH DEFENCE

efforts.

Referring to the immense contribution which Canada and her material resources made to the Empire during the Great War, Dr. Burgin said that one of the text books in his bookcase at the Ministry of Supply was a work by Colonel David Carnegie on the history of munitions supply in Canada from 1914 to 1918.

Nations Awake to Danger

The democratic peoples, Dr. Burgin continued, are now fully awake to the danger which threatens the world and have determined, whatever it may cost them, to make good the gaps in their defences.

"Our own preparations, taken as a whole have been brought to a very high pitch," he said. "The navy, the army, the air force — look where you will—you will find much to impress, much to give reason for solemn thought before any enemy should lightly allow a conflict to break out.'

"This period of neither peace nor war through which we are passing has many of the attributes of war on a world scale. Certain it is that the magnitude of preparations, the immensity of cost, the universality of effort, the extent of organization and the preoccupation of all classes and in almost all countries compares with conditions prevailing in the years 1915, 1916 and 1917.'

Ability to Silence Criticism

One "immense advantage" which the totalitarian nations have over the democracies in the present period, Dr. Burgin claimed, is their ability to silence criticism.

"For a great democratic people, accustomed to discuss everything in public, to regard freedom of the press as an asset of great value and to know no restriction on the right of public meeting and freedom of public speech, it is not easy to commence the task of armament to withstand aggression from totalitarian countries.

"Those countries, moving almost automatically, disciplined and dragooned to such a degree that the pressing of a button the giving of a single order, mobilizes forces, silences criticism and compels at least outward unity, have in all matters of military preparation and negotiation an immense advantage over other parties to the possible dispute or to negotiations where the whole of their preparations are conducted in the full glare of publicity and controversy of their own minorities."

Chamberlain Returns Without Umbrella

London, Aug. 21 (CP) — Prime Minister Chamberlain, whose return from a Scottish fishing trip was hastened by increasingly grave European outlook, arrived today without his familiar umbrella.

But he had another symbol of preparedness. He carried an extra herring bone topcoat across his arm in addition to the one he wore. Both were shed quickly. It was a muggy morning in the mid-seventies.

He soon got out an umbrella after arriving at 10 Downing street. Then he and Mrs. Chamberlain took their favorite walk through St. James's Park.

Kuhn Wants Bund Leaders Called to Answer

New York, Aug. 21 (AP) — Fritz Kuhn, leader of the German-American Bund, demanded today that the United States Congressional Committee on "unAmerican" activities permit Bund leaders to answer the charges of Helen Vooros of immortality in a Bund camp.

Miss Vooros, 19-year-old Brooklyn girl, testified before the committee last week that she quit the Bund because of the immoral conduct of members.

In a telegram to Representative Martin Dies, (Dem-Texas), committee chairman, Kuhn asked that Frederick Vandenbergh, Brooklyn unit leader of the Bund; August Kapprott, manager of Camu Nordland and Gustave J. Elmer, national organizer of the Bund, be subpoenaed.

"Testimony o Vooros would be stand up ten minutes in cross-examination," the telegram said. "Will be able to bring proof as to reason why Vooros made false charges against Bunt."

REWARD OFFERED BY PARISH PRIEST

Wants Information Leading to Arrest of Persons Responsible for Explosion

Field, Ont., August 21.— (CP)—Offer of $200 reward for information leading to arrest and conviction of person or persons responsible for dynamiting an automobile and garage here early Saturday morning was posted today. The blast was heard three miles away and rocked this village. The reward was first announced by the parish priest in church of the small French-Canadian village.

Joseph Vinet said he believed the destruction of his garage and car was done "just for spite". He did not believe "any attempt was made on my life".

Vinet estimated damage by the blast that blew the engine hood of his car through the garage roof to a hill 100 yards away at $3,000.

Destroyed by Explosion

Mabee's Corners, Ont., Aug. 21.—(CP)—A mysterious explosion preceded a fire early today that destroyed Louis Francis's store and poolroom here. G. Bradfield, owner of a general store across the road from the poolroom, said he saw a flashlight in the poolroom and then a man rush out the back door.

Seconds later, he said, a terrific explosion occurred that was heard three miles away. The fire followed. Flames from the outlets to the underground gasoline tanks provided dangerous moments for firemen. Loss was estimated at $6,000.

The Tillsonburg fire department made the seven mile run here and stopped the fire from spreading to nearby buildings.

"The GLASS SLIPPER"

by MIGNON G. EBERHART

"I'm sending for the police," said Rue, too bewildered to reason. She rang the bell.

Alicia cried: "The police! Are you going to give yourself up?"

"I didn't murder her. I didn't murder Crystal."

Alicia said more thoughtfully, watching Rue:

"You were here when Crystal died She was better; she ought not to have died. She was in your care when her—extremely unexpected death took place. And you married Brule."

"If Brule were here——"

"If Brule were here he'd know."

"Yes, madam," said Gross, opening the door, "You rang—" he began and saw Julie.

Alicia was breathing quickly, thin red lips drawn back a little from perfect teeth; in the sudden silence Rue could hear that and could hear the way Gross's breathing seemed to stop short and then suck inward sharply. He turned quite gray and became instantly helpless, turning blank eyes to Alicia for direction.

"What...." he wavered, and Alicia said quickly:

"The lady is dead. She's been murdered. In this room."

How Alicia must hate her, thought Rue swiftly. And how well, up to now, she had hidden that hatred. There was no time to think of that; not with Julie lying dead.

Yet, if Alicia had been a dozen Alicias, Rue was still Mrs. Hatterick.

"Gross. Look at me."

"Y—yes madam." He did so with reluctance. Obviously he preferred to take orders from Alicia. Rue said stiffly:

"Get Doctor Hatterick on the phone. He should be in the office now. I'll talk to him."

"Yes. Yes, madam."

He took the telephone on the bed table. Both she and Alicia could hear in that quiet room the vibration of the office girl's voice.

"He's not in, madam," said Gross helplessly, looking over the ivory telephone at the little heap on the rug. "He's not in——"

"Ask where he can be found."

"She says try the hospital——"

Rue had remembered Steven.

"Very well. Do so. But first call Mr. Steven."

"Yes, madam." He put down the telephone quickly, with obvious relief, and vanished.

"Steven?" said Alicia. "Why not the police?"

Rue was again conscious of Alicia's bright, oddly triumphant eyes watching her. She must pull herself together, think clearly, make no mistakes. If they couldn't find Brule, then she herself must act; not Alicia, not Steven. It had been a mistake to say they would call the police; there was no reason—no real reason—to believe that Julie had been murdered. First, they must have a doctor; it would be his place to say why Julie had died. And if he said murder, then the police.

Julie. Rapidly Rue went back to the years of their acquaintance. Julie never drank. And Julie, inexperienced, would have been so easy to poison in that way because she wouldn't have been able to distinguish the taste of the poison. A strong hypnotic, say, with no nausea.

Steven Hendrie, taking three steps at a time, reached the top of the stairway and flung himself through the doorway.

"Gross said—" began Steven and saw Julie and stopped as Gross had done. "Good grief! Is she really—dead? What happened? Rue, tell me—"

"We've got to have a doctor. If we can't find Brule, then someone else," said Rue.

Alicia smiled the faintest, thinnest little smile and said: "Why not get Andy. He'll say anything you want him to say. He did before."

Steven flashed a troubled look at Alicia. He was kneeling beside Rue, his pale face and his eyes two bright sharp pin points.

"Andy," he said, failing to perceive or at least to give attention to Alicia's implication. "Certainly. If we can't find Brule we'll call Andy. Though if the girl is dead . . . Gross—"

The butler was in the doorway. "I've already taken the liberty, sir," he said. "Doctor Hatterick was not at the hospital. So I left word at the hospital and then telephoned for Doctor Crittenden. He'll be here in a few moments. Is there —anything else?"

"Wait," said Steven. "You're sure she's dead, Rue?"

"Yes. There's nothing we can do."

"What happened?"

"Nothing. She—just drank her tea—and died."

"Her tea," said Gross from the doorway in a strangled way. Alicia looked at him and back at Rue.

"Steven," she said, "thank God you are here. Look, Steven. There's the tea tray. There's the cup the poor girl drank from—half emptied. Look carefully, so you'll remember."

"Wht do you mean, Alicia? Surely you aren't trying to say that—"

Alicia's eyes flashed impatiently.

"Have you forgotten how Crystal died?"

There was a gurgle from the doorway where Gross stood as if transfixed.

CHAPTER TWELVE

Steven got up.

"Look here, Alicia. You can't go around saying things like that. Crystal wasn't murdered. What do you mean?"

"Can't you see for yourself, Steven? Have you never questioned Crystal's death? Or the circumstances of it? Because if you haven't, you may as well know right now that the police have. They think she was murdered!"

"Alicia, what are you saying! You are mad. Nobody thinks Crystal was murdered. Who would have murdered her?"

"Ask yourself questions, Steven. Who was with Crystal when she died? Who knew how to give her poison so you wouldn't think of it being poison? So Crystal would die like that—in a coma without active symptoms of having been poisoned. Who profited by Crystal's death? Why—good lord, Steven, are you as blind as Brule?"

"Do you mean—Rue?" said Steven slowly.

Alicia smiled, a little scornfully as a teacher might with a backward pupil.

"The nurse, Julie Garder, must have asked those questions too," she said with a curious effect of lightness. "Now she's dead. As Crystal died."

"Rue, you hear what Alicia said. Of course it isn't true." Steven's deep-set eyes, though, questioned her, begged for reassurance.

"No, Steven. It is not true. I don't know why she accuses me."

Alicia caught it up neatly and replied with an adroit touch of wistfulness. "I was Crystal's best friend. And I'm engaged to marry you, Steven I love you. How can I remain quiet and see you taken in by—" She checked herself too obviously. "I make no accusation at all."

Steven rubbed his hands through his hair, already disheveled. He wore a brown sweater instead of a coat, and his tie and collar were loosened and he had on soft wollen slippers.

"I don't know what to do." He turned. "Gross, did you let in this —Miss Garder?" His hand indicated Julie, and Gross said, understanding him:

"No sir. If you mean to say did I let the young lady into the house, I didn't."

"But you announced her," said Rue. "You told me she had come to see me."

"And so she said, madam. But she was—already in the house. It —I —I hope it wasn't wrong. I hope the police . . . I didn't mean any harm. It was unusual, but I saw no reason to tell Madam—"

"What do you mean?' 'asked Steven.

"I mean, sir, the nurse was already in the house. I came into the drawing room to turn on the lights and she was there. Sitting in the dark. She—she seemed to be waiting. She said she'd come to see Mrs. Hatterick and would I please let Madam know. So I—did," said Gross helplessly.

Alicia was listening intently, her small, classically beautiful face like porcelain and as britte. She said: "Who let her in then? She couldn't have entered unless someone opened the coor."

"I dont' know, miss. She—I was taken aback as it were. I didn't ask. But I—I know nothing of this. If it is murder—"

Julie in that silent house, waiting in that shadowy French drawing room. Rue thought back to the silence of the day; the quiet and apparently empty house. She'd heard no sound of Julie's arrival. She'd heard no one moving about.

But then, the house hadn't been empty. Had Julie had that cocktail in the French drawing room while she waited? Then, if so, who had given it to her? Only Rue and Steven were at home. Only she and Steven and . . . how had Alicia got there? When had she come? Who had let her into the house?

Rue said: "Gross when did Miss Alicia arrive?"

The butler opened his mouth to speak, but Alicia quickly interrupted.

"Why, really, Rue," she said, "what a question. I came to see Madge of course. After all, Rue, this house is almost my home and has been for years. I've always come and gone as I chose. I have always been like a member of the family." Her look said, you are the interloper here, you are the stranger; your time is short. She continued in silky, cool reproof: "At any rate, Rue, this is scarcely the time and place to attempt to quarrel with me."

Brule and Andy were in the doorway. Rue didn't know how long they'de been there, but she thought it had been long enough for them to hear Alicia's words.

"Where is she?" said Brule and looked past Alicia and Steven and saw.

Brule would know what to do. He didn't look at Rue as he went to Julie. Andy followed him. The room was so still you could hear a faint small hissing in the old-fashioned radiators, concealed below the windows. Neither Andy nor Brule spoke for a moment. Then Brule said in a preoccupied voice:

"No chance."

"She'd been drinking," said Andy.

"Yes, I know. But — I'd say a strong hypnotic; look at her eyes."

"Yes, I see."

Andy rose and his eyes sought out Rue anxiously. Brule got up, too, and looked deliberately at all of them, but his glance when it met Rue's eyes held no special message for her. His eyes were bright and dark and preoccupied. He took off his overcoat and dropped it on a chair.

"What happened, Rue? Tell me exactly—"

"Brule," said Alicia. "It's the way Crystal—"

"Wait, Alicia, please. Tell me Rue."

"She came to see me," said Rue. "She said she'd had a cocktail, and I thought she was drunk. Julie never drank. I ordered tea and gave her some hot tea—then she died."

"How did she die?"

Rue swallowed heavily. Her hands were pressed against her throat, though she didn't know it; her figure, slim and taut under her green wool frock, was pressed against the chair before her. "She—seemed to become unconscious; it was as if she's been drinking a lot; she talked some—"

Brule's eyes sharpened.

"Oh, she talked?"

"Yes. Some. In a wandering way—not very sensible."

"Why had she come? Were you expecting her?"

"No. I think she came about—about Crystal. There was — she knew something. I think the police inquiry had alarmed her—"

Steven looked up quickly.

"Police?" he said. "Then Alicia was right—"

"Steven, if you'd only believe me," cried Alicia. "Brule, how can you question her like that? As if you believe—with that girl dead exactly as Crystal—"

Brule swerved around with a quick compact motion to look at Alicia.

"You are talking to my wife," he said.

In the little silence Alicia laughed a very small, faint laugh which managed to be unutterably scornful.

Brule telephoned the police. "I think it's murder," he said. "Yes . . . All right. We won't touch anything."

He hung up.

And dialed again. This time for Guy Cole.

"Guy, can you come right away? Before the police get here . . Yes, it's the thing I talked to you about but a—bad development. The nurse —the day nurse I mean—who took care of Crystal has been murdered. Here in the house—"

They could hear Guy's exclamation and the sharp click of his telephone. Brule put down the instrument and sat for a moment looking at it; his face was as always impenetrable except that there was a tight hard look about his jaw and his eyes were very bright. They all waited.

Finally Brule said: "Go downstairs to the library. All of you. Guy will he here in a moment. He'll be present while the police question you. He won't let you make any damaging admissions; but of course you'll have to tell the truth. Exactly wht happened but that's all. Don't volunteer any information. Stick to the simple facts as you know them. If Guy tells you not to answer don't answer. Do exactly what Guy says."

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

"Brule what's this about Crystal's having been murdered?" asked Steven abruptly. "Has there actually been an inquiry?"

"Yes. But I don't think the polive have any direct evidence. Don't answer any questions at all about that. Now then . . . "

He stopped thoughtfully. Andy said slowly:

"Well that ties it. We're in for it now. But I don't see Brule, why you told the police it was murder. I mean, the nurse. It seems to me it could either be accident or suicide."

"The girl came here to see Rue; she'd probably been questioned by the police sometime yesterday about Crystal's death. Whatever she told them, the inquiry seems to have aroused her suspicions or reminded her of something she knew and wanted to tell Rue—"

"Yes. Yes, that's what she —" Brule's glance stopped Rue; she didn't know what it meant, she only felt that something in that swift looked compelled her to silence. Brule went on in terse sentences:

"If she really knew anything, if Crystal was murdered, if the murderer knew Julie Garder had any knowledge of it, then Julie was stopped. Before she could tell it. It's obvious—as the police will see it."

"But—but it isn't conclusive, Brule. You know that. That's assuming that Crystal was murdered," said Andy, troubled. "That's assuming the girl actually knew something that would lead to the murdered. That's assuming that even if she knew it she would come here to tell Rue. Wouldn't she have been more likely to tell the police—"

"I said, that's as the police will certainly see the case. Call it murder then, for they will. If it proves to be accident, or if it proves to have been suicide—though heaven knows why she would have come here to kill herself—let the police discover it. Don't try to dodge their own certain and obvious conclusion; tell them straight off that it's murder."

Steven said slowly: "Of course, Brule's right. I wouldn't have seen it myself, but I do now."

"If you please, sir." It was Gross.

"Yes, Gross?"

"I think Mr. Cole has arrived."

Brule got up swiftly, with the compact elasticity of motion that characterized him.

"Go downstairs. All of you. I'll stay here. Except—Rue, I want to talk to you."

Alicia gave Rue a swift look, and Steven put his arm lightly about Alicia's waist, and together they left the room. Rue moved uncertainly toward Brule. It was easier to breathe somehow since Brule and Andy had come.

"Tell me, Rue, exactly what happened. Quickly. Don't leave out anything." He paused and then said more kindly "Don't tremble like that, Rue. But tell me. Everything. What time did she arrive? Where did she sit? Where did you sit? Above all, what did she tell you? Did she—' He glanced at the door but the others had gone. His voice lowered, however, and he put his hands on Rue's shoulders and drew her nearer him so he could look directly down into her eyes. "Did Julie know anything of Crystal's death? For you see, if she did, if she told you, if you share her knowledge—you share her danger."

Rue's heart was like a bird caught in her throat. "Her . . . danger . . . " she said stiffly.

Brule's eyes were suddenly a little less hard and bright. He said:

"Don't be afraid. You are my wife, and I'll try to take care of you."

She looked up into his eyes for an instant; but in that stillness they both were aware of a sound growing out of the deepening dusk away off in the distance. It was the police siren swooping upon them like a bird of prey, shrieking its triumph through twilight streets.

There was no escaping it. Brule listened, and his hands on Rue's shoulders became tighter. He said: "Hurry. Tell me what Julie told you."

She told him hastily against the eerie background of that nearing siren. Brules' bright, searching gaze seemed to draw from her every smallest phrase Julie had uttered as if she, Rue, were mesmerized. She told of the girls' wavering entrance; of what she had said; of how Julie had seemed confused, as if she'd been drinking; of how she confused names, calling Rue, Julie; of her repeated warning that memory wasn't to be trusted; of how she had said that she know something of Crystals' murder and that Rue knew it too.

"What did she know?"

"I don't know. I can't think — it's all so horribly sudden. I don't know what it is. She thought I knew, too, but theres' nothing." Rue's voice wavered upward.

"All right. You'll have to go down. Listen, Rue, and obey me. Don't tell the police what Julie said. It would be advertising your own danger. I'm being blunt with you because you've got to know. Remember Julie was almost certainly murdered because she knew too much; she was the day nurse, you were the night nurse, and she was murdered on her way to you."

"You speak as if you know it was murder," cried Rue.

"Therey' not much doubt of it," said Brule tersely. "We'll make the most of what loopholes we can find—but there may be none. It's murder; I'm afraid theres' no reasonable doubt."

He relinquished her shoulders, strode to the window, looked down through the gathering dusk of the dark day and abruptly turned toward her again.

"They're coming in. All of them. Lord . . . Well, Rue. Remember not to tell exactly what Julie said; say she seemed confused and didnt' say anything that made sense; insist upon it. I can't make it too strong a warning. Do you understand?"

"I—yes. I'm to tell them nothing that she said. I'm to tell them I know nothing of Crystal's death that suggests murder."

"Thats' right. And listen, Rue —"

Feet were on the stairs. People and voices and movement had quite suddenly flooded the house. Brule took her hand.

"Listen. We've stood shoulder to shoulder before this. When life was the stake as it is now. We can do it again."

"Yes, Brule."

He looked at her for a second or two without speaking; then quite suddenly took her in his arms. She felt briefly the pressure of his shoulder and the hard warmth of his face against her own. Then he released her.

"All right, Rue. Go downstairs with the others. Follow Guy's lead in everything and remember what I told you . . . I'll stay here and see the police."

Rue went down to the library. They were all there. Alicia and Steven and Andy and Guy Cole. And Madge was there too; still in her coat and hat as if she had just arrived from school, sobbing hysterically in Alicia's arms, while Crystal's painted face, detached and beautiful in its own curious pallid beauty, stared down at them mockingly from above the mantel. And ten minutes later two policement walked into the room and remained there, so they had to talk cautiously, aware of listening, official ears.

Madge lifted her head as Rue entered; she stared at Rue with implacable, hating eyes and wiped tears from her face with the back of her hand.

Andy came at once to meet Rue.

"Sit here, Rue. I'll get you a drink. Guy's telling us what to do."

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

Hours, it seemed to Rue, passed while the police and Brule remained for the most part in the second-floor room where Julie had died. Andy and Guy Cole during the waiting made occasional scouting trips into the hall, Andy coming back with a grave face.

After a while they removed Julie's body. It must have been about then that the first reporters reached the house. Guy saw them.

"Tell 'em we don't know yet whether it was suicide or — or what," said Andy. "Don't say any more than you can help."

Guy looked at him rather pityingly and went away. He came back with news.

"They're going to have an autopsy done right away. Tonight. Meantime they'll question you. They cant' make a definite murder charge yet. But they'll proceed as if they knew it to be murder," said Guy rather dryly. "Remember, when they question you, everything I've told you."

He had warned them and he repeated it, undeterred by the stolidly listening ears of the two policemen.

"Chances are the girl simply took an overdose of some medicine."

His matter-of-fact way was subtly sustaining. Guy knew about these things, they happened all the time; their own special nightmare was a labyrinth whose twisting paths Guy could follow.

"I'll stay with you," he said. "Anything they ask that I think might be damaging in the event they prove the girl was murdered, I'll object to. They can't force you to answer anything. Unless, of course, they get enough evidence to justify an arrest. The vista his words opened was inexpressibly chilling. Andy stirred restlessly, gave Rue an anxious look and said in a voice that failed to disguise his anxiety:

"You don't think they're likely to do that, do you? Right now? I mean—well, do you think there's enough evidence against — against anybody to justify an arrest?"

He meant against Rue, of course; everyone knew it.

Guy lighted a cigarette and said he didn't think so.

"Not unless you tell them something you haven't told me. And I wouldn't advise that, Rue."

It was like Guy to address Rue nonchalantly and directly. But it made still clearer her position of prime suspect.

"See here," said Andy, glancing at the policeman uneasily but continuing. "Does she have to tell them about—well, I mean, the tea . . . "

"Why not? Gross knows he brought up the tea tray; the kitchen girl knows it was ordered and prepared. Besides, the fingerprints will be on the cup and there's no other explanation for Rue's fingerprints being there and not the girl's. Julie's. But if Julie was poisoned and the poison's been in her stomach long enough to show it was given her before she arrived her, Rue will be in the clear."

It was then that Brule came in, his face like a mask and said there was nothing new and that the police wanted to question Rue and would she come into the dining room.

"And Guy," said Brule.

Rue rose and went to the door. Queer how much will power that slight effort of muscles took.

"Don't be afraid," said Brule, and Andy gave her a look of almost anguished encouragement.

"A NEW CHAMPION IS BORN!"
Firestone CHAMPION

. . . and Firestone FLASHES THE NEWS VIA DAILY NEWSPAPERS

CONSISTENT, nation-wide advertisers since 1921 when their Canadian plant was opened, Firestone, from proved experience, turned first to daily newspapers to introduce the new Firestone Champion Tire and Firestone Leakproof Tube, this spring.

Response was immediate. In a single day car owners across Canada were asking for the new Firestone Champion Tire and Leakproof Tube. Mounting sales taxed Firestone production facilities, proving the pulling power of daily newspapers.

Firestone attributes its success to two factors— a quality product and consistent advertising.

That this combination still remains the greatest impetus for better business is reflected in the fact that the Firestone plant at Hamilton, Ontario, is always busy meeting an ever increasing demand.

One of a series of announcements featuring specific examples of the power of newspaper advertising to build business.

Russo-German Non-Aggression Pact Stirs Europe

View is Expressed in Moscow That Impending Treaty Will Not Exclude Negotiations of Mutual Assistance Agreement With Great Britain and France

DENUNCIATION CLAUSE

Tass, Soviet News Agency, Says Both Nations Desire to Eliminate Threat of War — Opinions Not Expressed in Newspapers of Moscow on Importance of Agreement

Rome, Aug. 22—(AP)—The proposed Soviet-German non-aggression pact will contain a provision permitting its denunciation in the event either party commits an act of aggression aganst a third country, a reliable informant said today.

The pact, this informant said, would contain three main points:

1. A pledge to abstain from aggression against one another.
2. In case one party is the victim of an attack by a third party, the other will remain neutral.
3. In case either commits an act of aggression, the other may denounce the agreement.

In some pro-Soviet circles the agreement as outlined was regarded as not necessarily incompatible with an alliance among Great Britain, France and Russia.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen

Summer heat! Air temperatures of 100 degrees in the shade are quite common. The highest on record is 136 degrees at Tripoli, North Africa. By "temperature in the shade" is meant that the thermometer is properly shaded, well ventilated and 4 or 5 feet above the ground. But the temperature of the ground, under direct sunshine, may be 190 degrees, and the air immediately in contact with it must be almost as hot. There is a greater difference than is commonly thought, in air temperatures at ground level and 5 feet above it. Measurements have shown as much as 9.7 degrees between one inch and 12 inches above the ground; 10 degrees difference between air at ground level and 5 feet above it is common.

STATEMENT CAUSE OF MAN'S ARREST FOR BANK HOLDUP

Harry Miller, Windsor Held After Rudolph Schramek Makes Statement

OFFENCE ON JUNE 30

Windsor, Ont., Aug. 22—(CP) — Rudolph Schramek, 23, of St. Catharines, pleaded guilty today to the $1,404 armed holdup of a branch of the Provincial Bank of Canada here and elected trial by magistrate. Schramek, arrested in St. Catharines last night when picked from a police lineup by two witnesses of the robbery June 30, was remanded eight days by Magistrate Arthur Hanrahan.

Earlier Schramek gave Windsor police a signed confession which allegedly implicated two Windsor men in the robbery. As a result of the statement Harry Hiller, 32, is held for investigation. The second man mentioned is Albert (Jerry) Farr, 24, serving a six-month term in Mimico Reformatory for assaulting Miller's wife.

Schramek was named by bank manager Leon Dufour and a customer, Miss Dorothy Hudson, as the man who robbed the Bank of Canada here.

Schramek told police he came to Windsor, his former home, on June 15 and stayed with his father, a hotelkeeper. He said he asked Farr to get him a revolver and the latter arranged a deal with Miller for the loan of a .38-calibre nickel-plated gun for $100 of the loot. He told of buying cartridges at a Windsor store the day of the robbery after staying at Farr's home overnight and planning the robbery. Loot in the robbery totalled $1,000.

Drove to Vicinity

He said Farr drove him to the vicinity of the bank. After the robbery Schramek drove away in a car he had stolen a few minutes before and telephoned Farr to meet him in his automobile. He said they went to Miller's home.

SHUTTLE SERVICE ACROSS GERMANY PLAN OF BRITAIN

Say Bombers Would Make Round - Trip Raid on Germany at Intervals

HAVE FRENCH BASE

Believed Big Gasoline Reserves Now Stored in Poland

London, Aug. 22—(CP) — A "shuttle service" by bombing planes across Germany was believed by foreign military experts to be the most striking plan of British-French action to help Poland in event of war.

Many suppose the British, French and Polish general staffs, quietly devising war strategy, have worked out a plan for virtually continuous round-trip raids on Germany.

Germany's own "Blitzkrieg" (lightning war) theory of air attack might be met with sudden, devastating raids on German plane and munition factories.

Starting from French bases, British and French planes would loose their bombs over Germany, fly on to Poland, refuel and reload with bombs, and make another raid over Germany on the way back.

Gas Reserves

Big bomb and gasoline reserves for French and British planes are believed established in Poland.

Because most experts agree the initial phases of "the next war" will be fought in the air, and because to get land forces into Poland would tax her friends with a difficult strategic problem, Britain and France probably would concentrate on air force assistance.

Poland—wedged between Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia—has a trained, well-equipped army of around 1,000,000 men. Many observers believe it could hold a German land advance days, weeks, or even months.

Tacticians said, however, the new German-Soviet agreement would complicate the problem of aid from Britain and France, particularly if the agreement excluded Russia from furnishing supplies to a foe of Germany.

U. S. RESIDENT DIES ON PLATFORM

Suffers Heart Attack While Waiting for Train at Bonarlaw

Marmora, (Special) — About two minutes before he would have boarded the east bound train for Montreal en route for his home in Worcester, Mass., Frederick Park Gleason expired on the platform at Bonarlaw C.P.R. station about 12.45 p.m. on Monday. With his wife, the late Mr. Gleason had been spending a holiday at the home of his brother-in-law, Caleb Lloyd and Mrs. Lloyd at Harold. The Lloyds accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Gleason to the station and thus witnessed with Mrs. Gleason her husband's sudden end. Dr. H. Crawford of Marmora, was summoned and attributed death to cerebral apoplexy. Following the arrival of the coroner Dr. F. J. Nickle of Eldorado, the body was removed to F. N. Marett's Undertaking Parlours. The late Mr. Gleason who was in his seventy-eighth year was connected with a stationery business for thirty-four years from which he retired about seven years ago. The remains will leave the Undertaking Parlours on Tuesday to meet the 12.49 train for Montreal, then to Worcester for interment.

Father Accused of Chaining Sons And Placing Girls in Closet

Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 22—(AP)—Accused of chaining two sons by their necks and imprisoning two daughters in a closet, an unemployed father of eight children was summoned to city court today.

Superintendent J. W. Henry of the Humane Educational Society arrested the man yesterday and had him put in jail, where he was booked as Jess Cline, 43. He was charged with "inhuman treatment."

The superintendent said he found Nathan Cline, five and his brother Henry, six, chained to small beds. The chains were fastened around their necks and wired to bed posts.

Two sisters, Minnie Frances, nine, and Jeanette eight, were imprisoned in a closet half filled with quilts and bedding, superintendent Henry said. A hole beside the door, barred with laths, provided the only ventilation.

The children, described by Henry as the "most ill fed and pitiable I have seen in my 15 years of work," were placed in custody of the Society.

Henry said the wife explained to him: "We couldn't do anything with them (the children). They were all over the street and the police complained. We had to do something."

Worst Flood in History Sweeps Thru Tientsin, Water 15 Feet Deep

Tientsin, Aug. 22—(AP)— Flood ravaged this great north China city today, taking a heavy toll of life and causing property damage running into millions of dollars.

Waters of the swollen Hai river rushed through Tientsin, flooding an area extending some 30 miles and south of the city. It was the greatest flood disaster in Tientsin's history. But many feared the worst was yet to come.

There had been hopes that because rain ceased in the immediate area of Tientsin the flood crest would be reached today. However, the waters continued to rise slowly, fed by continuing rains in the interior watershed which the Hai drains.

Refugees by the thousands streamed into Tientsin from the submerged areas. There was intense suffering among the city's 1,500,000 residents.

The Japanese concession was under water—in some places 10 to 15 feet deep. Houses collapsed. Through the night, the sky was red from fires which burned huge sections of buildings to the flood line. Fires also raged in the native areas.

The British and French concessions were submerged to depths up to 15 feet.

ITALY SEES GAIN IN TERRITORY THRU NEW PACT

Mussolini May Renew Demands for Colonies from France

AXIS IS STRONG

Rome, Aug. 22—(AP)—Diplomatic quarters expected Premier Mussolini today to move quickly to get his share of benefits foreseen under the German-Soviet non-aggression pact.

The possible result of the pact and its implication of Soviet support for Adolf Hitler's expansion plans are so extensive, some diplomats felt, that Mussolini may strive to get far more than merely Italy's demands on France.

In recent months, Fascist agitation for colonial concessions from France had subsided. The issues were defined by Mussolini March 26 in a Fascist anniversary address declaring that problems between the two countries were "Tunisia, Jibuti and the Suez Canal."

The minimum significance given to the announcement of the pact by these quarters was that Russia has given up any idea of joining the Anglo-French front which the Rome-Berlin axis powers have attacked as an "encirclement program."

International Briefs

Danzig, Aug. 22—(AP)— Albert Forster, Nazi district leader of Danzig, greeted a mission of jurists from East Prussia today with the declaration, "you are here in a moment when the free state (of Danzig) approaches its end." Hans Frank, German Minister of Justice, told the jurists: "The will of the third Reich of Adolf Hitler to bring the vital rights of our Danzig countrymen to reality is stronger than any threat."

Madrid, Aug. 22—(AP)— The Spanish press today hailed as a master stroke of diplomacy the announcement that a non-aggression pact between Germany and Russia would be signed and declared the attempts of the democracies to "encircle" Germany were a complete failure. The newspaper 'Bac' said: "With the non-aggression pact there will be removed the danger of a European war.

Gibraltar, Aug. 22—(AP)— The Gibraltar Spanish frontier was closed by British troops for approximately an hour today, then reopened. No reason was given for the action.

Vatican City, Aug. 22—(AP)—A Papal authority said today Pope Pius is considering a broadcast to the world of a speech in which he is expected to renew his appeal for peace.

The address will be delivered to approximately 20,000 members of the young Catholic workers organizations, mostly from France and Belgium, who are coming to Rome on a pilgrimage Sept. 6.

MOUNTAIN OF FURNITURE INTO FIVE GARAGES

Detroit, Aug. 22 (CP)—The two-day vigil of Mrs. Sadie Hollands, evicted from her home, was over today and the 63-year-old woman directed moving of her furniture into five garages for storage. Mrs. Hollands stood guard over her mountain of furnishings until room was found for its disposal. In 1934 Mrs. Hollands lost possession of an apartment building and moved all the furniture into her home. Carried from the house by surprised Bailiffs were 16 beds, eight living room suites, 10 dining room suites and considerable other goods.

WORLD MARKETS ARE SURPRISED AND CONFUSED

London Security Markets take Worst Fall Since 1938, Then Steady

NEW YORK RALLIES

By The Associated Press

World markets registered surprise and confusion today over news of the Russo-German non-aggression negotiations. Prices of securities and commodities fluttered unevenly in various money centres.

London security markets at the start of trading there took the worst fall since the pre-Munich break last September but recovered later. Paris marked prices down also.

In contrast, the Berlin Bourse swung higher and the New York stock market rallied following a hesitant start.

German and Italian bonds advanced moderately in New York while Japanese loans inclined downward.

Some Wall Street traders took the view the news pointed to a peaceful settlement of German-Polish differences or at least postponement of general war.

Commodity Trends Mixed

The London securities market steadied following the first selling shock and the pivotal 3 1-2 per cent British war loan recovered partially after setting a record low quotation.

Commodity trends were mixed. London copper again benefitted from German demand for the metal. Liverpool wheat jumped but had difficulty holding the gains. Chicago wheat, starting lower, seemed to put a peace slant on the news.

Leading European exchanges held to a narrow path. The British pound, supported by official control, was about unchanged. Holland's guilder dipped, as did the Belgian belga and the French franc. Swiss francs and the Japanese yen were up a little.

MAN QUESTIONED IN TWO KILLINGS

$5,000 Reward Posted for Information in Double Killing at Galt

Galt, Ont., Aug. 22 (CP)—Police today questioned Reginald White, 35, of Hespeler, in connection with the killing Saturday near here of John Milroy, 77, and his sister, Annie Milroy, 73. White appeared in police court on a vagrancy charge and was remanded without plea.

Inspector W. C. Lougheed of the Provincial Police said White is a former employee on the Milroy farm, scene of the double killing. He worked there several years ago. Clothes taken from White were examined by police for a possible clue.

Three men were arrested in Toronto yesterday on vagrancy charges and police questioned them regarding the double killing, but later they were freed of any suspicion in connection with the slayings

Refused Comment.

Provincial police here and at Toronto refused to comment on the arrest. The charge of vagrancy was read to White in a police cell here and he was remanded a week.

Police, after the hearing, rushed White out a back door of the jail to a waiting automobile, eluding a group of newspapermen and photographers, and took White to the county jail at Kitchener.

Police said their attention centred on the Hespeler district from the start because the automobile stolen from the Milroy farm the day of the slaying was found abandoned on the outskirts of Hespeler.

369.23 MILES PER HOUR RATE DRIVEN BY COBB

London Driver Abandons Return Trip, Motor Stalls Mile Before Starting Point

FASTEST LAND SPEED

Capt. Eyston Set 357.5 M.P.H. Last Year Which is Present Record

Bonneville Salt Flats, Utah, Aug. 22—(AP)—John Cobb of London flashed through the measured mile in his powerful automobile today at 369.23 miles per hour but abandoned a return trip over the record-testing route when his motor stalled.

His mark of 369.23 was the fastest man ever has travelled on land.

But Cobb's "Railton Red Lion," a turtled shape comet has to complete a return journey over the mile to qualify for a new record.

The present mark is 357.5 m.p.h., established a year ago by Captain George E. T. Eyston.

Cobb started the return trip amid a cloud of smoke from his twin-motored machine. He shifted to second gear at approximately 125 miles per hour and to high at approximately 240 but the motors stalled and the machine coasted to a stop one mile from the start of the measured mile.

Cobb, on the first run, exceeded both Eyston's mile mark and his kilometre mark of 357.34 mph being timed at 365.51 miles per hour, but he failed to shatter the record when his car stalled.

"The car handled like a train on the first run," Cobb said.

"It held to the course beautifully and I had no difficulty holding the machine on the black line."

A two-foot black line splits the 13-mile straightaway.

JAPAN CONSIDERS "ISOLATION" OF THE SETTLEMENT

Apparently Move is Outgrowth of a Police Shooting Scrape

Shanghai, Aug. 23—(AP)—Japanese military authorities and Chinese officials of the Japanese-backed local government were reported today to be considering possible "isolation" of the Shanghai international settlement, apparently as the outgrowth of a police shooting scrape.

The Japanese were said to have moved additional troops, along with tanks and other mechanized equipment, into an area along the settlement border where a Briton, Sergeant W. L. Kinlock of the settlement police, killed two and wounded six of the puppet government's policemen with a sub-machine gun last Saturday.

Kinloch said he opened fire when he was shot in the back. Demands for indemnities, punishment for Kinloch, and apology and assurance against recurrence of such incidents were presented last night to Cornell Franklin, American chairman of the settlement council, over the signature of Fu Siao-En, Shanghai Mayor.

A Japanese army spokesman made the communication public, along with an English translation, but insisted the army had nothing to do with its dispatch.

Reports from Nanking were that leaders of the reformed (Japanese-sponsored) government "view the incident as an insult," and that "some agitators in Nanking are demanding that the British be driven from China and the Shanghai settlement restored to Chinese control."

United Kingdom's Railroad Workers Vote to Start Strike on Saturday

London, Aug. 22—(CP)—A strike on the United Kingdom's four main railroads effective Saturday was decided upon today by the executive committee of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen.

The strike decision followed failure of the companies to agree to raise the minimum weekly wage from 45 shillings ($11.25) to 50 shillings ($12.50).

All labor will be withdrawn, the union announced, unless an agreement is reached before Saturday.

The union has a membership of more than 55,000.

General managers of the railroads, The London, Midland and Scottish, London and Northeastern, Southern, and Great Western, were notified, as was the Minister of Labor, Ernest Brown.

The other large rail workers' union, the National Union of Railwaymen, also was meeting to determine its course of action in the face of the railways' refusal to meet its demands for a 50-shilling minimum weekly wage.

Some Hold View Russia Seeking Isolationism

British Government Reported to be Considering Empowering Military Leaders to Act Immediately and Autonomously Without Parliament if Poland is Attacked

NON-AGGRESSION PACTS

View in Warsaw is That Poland Has Not Expected Aid from Russia and That the Soviet States Are Anxious to Pursue Policy of Isolation

By J. F. SANDERSON

Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 22—(CP Cable)—Parliament may be recalled to review the new European situation caused by the proposed German-Russian non-aggression agreement. The cabinet met to discuss this possibility and others.

(The Havas news agency said that according to reports heard in diplomatic quarters the government is considering empowering Great Britain's military leaders to act immediately and autonomously, without prior convocation of parliament in the event of a sudden German attack on Poland. Such a decision would be unprecedented in British history.)

Official London was shocked and startled by the German-Russian rapprochement but was not plunged into gloom. There was a disposition to regard the agreement as hindering but not shattering the Anglo-French peace bloc plan.

Opinion Changes Overnight

When Berlin and Moscow startled the world last night by announcement of the pact the first reaction in London was of decided gloom and pessimism. Since then there has been a change.

One of the reasons for this change of opinion was the fact that Russia has non-aggression pacts with several countries, with Italy, France and Poland, for instance. In each of them is a clause stiplating that if the other party resorts to aggression against a third country the Soviets are left free to act and the pact is voided.

If the German-Russian agreement is concluded on these lines it would leave Russia free to help Poland if Germany moved against the Poles.

In any event Whitehall sees no reason to suppose that staff consultations in Moscow between Britain and France and the Soviets will be abandoned as a result of the German agreement. On the contrary they may be accelerated with a three-power pact emerging just that much quicker.

Effect on Eastern Europe

Official circles declined to comment on the developments pending more exact information. At present only the press communiques issued in Berlin and Moscow have been received.

Despite tactical disadvantages presented in the idea of Poland locked between Germany and Russia, sources close to the government insisted Britain's position would remain "steadfast and unaltered".

Force Not Countenanced

These sources said she would welcome a settlement of the Polish-German dispute by negotiations acceptable to all parties, but would countenance no attempt to alter the status by force.

(The Havas News Agency quoted London political circles to the effect that Parliament would be called into session Thursday.)

SCHOOL PROPERTY DISTURBED BY ENTRY

Whether they were over-zealous to return to school and studies or otherwise may never be disclosed, but teen-aged boys are said to have broken and entered S.S. No. 3 in Sidney Township yesterday. No particular damage was reported after Provincial Police were notified and investigated, but the authorities stated an example would be made of persons continuing the practice of entering public buildings during the vacation period. Although nothing was reported stolen, school property was disturbed, however.

HEIFERS STRAYED FROM PASTURE FIELD

There was considerable concern on the farm of Fred Chase, ex-Reeve of Ameliasburg Township early today, when it was discovered that two 7-months' old heifer calves were missing from the cattle herd. Mr. Chase immediately notified the provincial police believing cattle rustlers might have been responsible for the disappearance of the calves. Provincial Constable W. E. Smith investigated and in company with Mr. Chase subsequently found the lost heifers strolling in an adjacent field, to where they had escaped from pasture.

VIRGINIAN TAKES REAL SOUVENIR HOME

A large moose head carried in the fender well of an automobile bearing Virginia licence plates parked near the city post office this morning attracted the attention of curious passersby, many of whom wondered if the hunting season had commenced in Canada.

Closer investigation proved the head a mounted one, a bit scuffed and worn with age.

To a questioner, a feminine occupant of the car explained:

"We were stopping at a lodge near Bon Echo last week, and my husband took a fancy to the head for his den. The proprietor was glad to sell it and that's all the story there is.

"We don't see moose heads down in Virginia, and neither do you Canadians very often, judging by the surprised looks we've been getting since we started carrying it."

GERMANY FAR AWAY TO LOCAL RESIDENTS

Tension over Europe lately has not resulted in any noticeable increase in mail being received from or despatched to Germany or other continental points with Belleville address, it was stated at the local post office this morning.

Comparatively few letters are despatched to Germany, particularly from Belleville, barely more than three or four a week, it was estimated.

LARGE RED DEER SEEN AT MILLTOWN

Leading his horses to water on the south bank of the Salmon River near Milltown yesterday afternoon, Allan King of the village blinked in surprise at the sight of what was at first believed to be an unusual appearing cow standing on the opposite bank of the stream at a distance of some two hundred feet.

A second look verified the fact it was a large red deer which calmly surveyed man and horses for an appreciable length of time before turning slowly and sauntering into a nearby thicket.

It is the second time this year deer have been reported observed in the Shannonville district, apparently unafraid of the busy traffic on nearby roads.

CONDITIONS IDEAL FOR FALL PLOUGHING

Fall plowing is being carried on in the district under ideal conditions of moist soil and cooler weather, a combination which has made the work easier for both farmer and horses, it was stated by Eli Thompson of Rawdon this morning.

Plenty of rain has been received through the county during the past week or so, and the land is in excellent shape for the plowing and late seeding to follow ,it was reported.

CITY WORK LIST AT STEADY LEVEL

Mainly engaged on the construction of the new College street roadway, weed cutting, and other seasonal work of the department, a force of twenty-five workers, with an additional gang of twelve relief laborers is being given work this week by the city department of works. Considerable improvement has been effected by the construction of the new College road which had become badly worn and rutted.

Brockville Operator Has Finest Voice

Operator Blanche Woods of Brockville, was crowned the "Girl with the Golden Voice" for the Kingston district, which includes the Belleville area, in a competition held by the Bell Telephone Company to choose the girl with the best speaking voice and personality over the telephone.

Ethel Dack of Belleville, was second in the competition and Evelyn Patterson of Kington was third place for best operator's voices.

Eight contestants, four from Kingston, three from Belleville, and one from Brockville ,entered the final round of the competition for the highly prized honor of being chosen No. 1 operator. Dr. William Angus of Queen's University, Thomas Warner of CFRC radio station and Bell Telephone officials acted as judges.

The voice competition was but one part of the program of the convention held in Kingston and attended by operators from throughout the district. Skits were enacted by various groups of girls at switchboards to illustrate the right and wrong way of answering calls and replying to customers. This was part of a new program to have the operators put more of their personality into their voices and get away from the stereotype phrases now used.

Following the announcement of the winner of the Golden Voice award, a social time was held at the Cataraqui Golf Club.

WORK PROCEEDING ON S. A. CITADEL

Excavation of Site Nearly Completed as Work Proceeds on Schedule

Excavation of the site of the new Salvation Army citadel which will be sunk to a depth of four feet below ground level, started this week and is proceeding satisfactorily, Mr. Thomas Adams, contractor, stated this morning.

Workmen have now reached the depth to which the basement will be dug, and today were preparing the gravel for forms in which the cement walls will be built. These will be erected some eight feet above ground level, giving the basement plenty of room for Sunday School rooms, songster and band rooms which will be built in this part of the building.

The new building will be thirty-six foot frontage on Pinnacle Street with a depth of sixty feet.

The construction program is proceeding according to schedule Mr. Adams stated. Eight men are now employed in the preliminary work. The cement floor which will be laid in the basement will be placed above three inches of cinders. This allows for absorption of any moisture that might accrue, Mr. Adams stated.

The actual laying of the floor however, will not take place for some time as the contractor at present will go on with the work of construction of walls and brick work. Asked for an opinion as to when Mr. Adams smiled and shook his head. "It's a bit early to prophecy anything as broad as that at this time," he said, "but the work is going ahead on schedule, and at this rate we expect to have the building erected in good time, providing the weather man gives us a smile during the early construction stages."

Hobo, Cat Breakfast Together

To paraphrase a well-known proverb, travelling the broad highways makes strange "meal-fellows".

This morning near the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge where the waters of the harbor lap on the stony shore, a happy hobo, whistling a gay roundelay, merrily brewed a tin can of tea. Nearby lay a crust of bread and a large cucumber, the gift of a generous city market vendor.

As the gay one munched his sandwich and quaffed his steaming brew, there came a squeal, and a flurry of threshing bodies.On a rocky ledge about ten feet away a large cat had caught a husky rat that had inadvertently left its lair on an early morning foraging sortie.

Not the slightest bit perturbed by their proximity, both cat and hobo finished their morning meal while a couple of interested spectators looked on.

Peterboro Lady Gets 4 1-4 lb. Bass

Mrs. Percy Latta, attractive young Peterborough matron was the proudest women in the city over the week-end. For by the simple expedient of hauling a four and one-quarter pound small-mouth black bass from the waters of Lake Ontario near South Bay on Saturday, she relegated herself to the top-notch ranks of woman anglers.

Mrs. Latta stated the big fellow gave her a strenuous battle before she succeeded in hauling it into the boat, and this fact plus the one that it is the first time Mrs. Latta ever caught a fish larger than a minnow reflects great credit on her angling ability. The big fellow left for Peterborough this morning

Mrs Latta is a sister of Mrs. Ernest Martin, 214 Church street, and Mrs. Jack Clark, North James street, this city.

Girl Falls from Bike And is Badly Cut

While alternating at pushing each other along upon a bicycle on the city streets, the bike went out of control and crashed through a window at Dutton's shoe repair shop on Station street yesterday afternoon, inflicting minor lacerations upon the arm of a girl named Finn, who resided nearby, city police were told yesterday. The Finn girl, in company with Gwendolyn Dewey, Bettes street, was riding on a bicycle that was being pushed along the sidewalk by the Dewey girl, when it suddenly toppled over into Dutton's display window. The Finn girl's arm was quite badly lacerated when it struck the jagged glass of the shattered window.

Entries at Belleville Fair Will Show Breeders Turn to Blooded Cattle

All Records in Exhibits of Herds Will be Broken, Fair Officials State

Featured among the many attractions that will go to make Belleville's Fair this year one of the outstanding exhibitions of its kind in Eastern Ontario, will be the Fair's own "blue blood" visit.

Not the purple and ermine of royalty as we know it, but blooded strains of livestock proud of their lineage.

From the far-flung sections of the district, these proud scions of the best in blooded stock that the country can produce will come. From faraway farms of the province, the stately Ayrshire, the proud Holstein the demure Jersey and the stocky sturdy beef breeds, will converge here in a cattle display that for entries and quality alone will please the eye of the most critical appraiser of this form of livestock.

According to Secretary R. H. Ketcheson, the entry list thus far has been productive of the most convincing proof that district and provincial breeders are more and more turning to blooded cattle as their chief source of milk and beef production.

Breeding of these fine strains, supplemented by the importation of sires from the best overseas and domestic herds has increased during the past few years by leaps and bounds. Each year sees more and more breeders turning to one or more of these breeds, with the result that the general calibre of stock being raised in this particular district is regarded as being very high.

Ample proof of this will be seen at the Fair. The entry list is steadily increasing and by the time the list closes ,officials feel sure that all records will be broken. Many outstanding breeders of the province have signified their intention of showing their prize herds, or representatives at the Fair here Aug. 29-30-31st.

POLICE COURT

His Worship Magistrate Ambrose Shea of Kingston presided at today's local sittings of the City Police Court in the absence of Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., who is vacationing at present.

Mike Donato, Trenton, appeared on a charge of allegedly forging a cheque, to the amount of $100.80. Before a plea was requested, Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C., informed the court that the charge would have to be changed to that of "making a false document, to wit a cheque".

Frank Cushing, local barrister appearing for the accused, requested an enlargement until Sept. 1, which was granted by His Worship before any plea was taken in the matter. Donato was later admitted to bail.

Sixteen-year-old Archie Hill of Trenton, appeared on a charge of the theft of two dollar watches, allegedly taken over the week-end from McCurdy's jewelry store. This case was also enlarged at the request of Chief Kidd. "There is another boy said to be associated with Hill and who failed to appear today after we permitted him out on his own bail last Saturday," revealed Chief Kidd as he asked for a warrant for the second boy's arrest. Hill was allowed to return home after being instructed to return and face the above charge on the 29th instant.

Two habitual inebriates found themselves facing a second offence intoxication charge and following pleas of guilty each was sentenced to two months in the common jail, after they intimated they were unable to pay the assessed fine of $50. and costs. A speedster also contributed to the court funds after pleading guilty to driving at an excessive rate of speed in Belleville.

MELONS FEATURE CITY MARKET

Prices Fairly Good According to the Quantity Offered

Featured produce at the city market today took a decided turn in favor of watermelons and canteloupe as heavy stocks of these fruits made their appearance. Prices were fairly good according to the quantity offered with canteloupe selling at from five cents each while watermelon of good size offered from as low as ten cents.

Other produce was fairly heavy with a good variety of farm and garden truck on display. Home-grown tomatoes took a decided drop in price despite the fact that canning factories of the district started preserving operations today. Bushel lots were quoted at seventy-five cents each with basket lots offered at twenty cents.

Potato prices were firm with good quality "spuds" selling at twenty-five and thirty cents the peck. New vegetables were plentiful and sold at week-end prices.

Imported peaches and plums again headed the fruit display with the former selling at forty and forty-five cents the basket. Plums were offered at forty cents in the most places. An occasional box of red raspberries was noticed that were offered at fifteen cents each.

Harvester apples were offered at twenty cents the basket with other varieties selling at similar prices.

Whitefish was quoted at seventeen cents the pound.

SHUTTLE SERVICE

Will Send Reinforcement

Answering recent sneers in the German press that Britain and France would not and could not give material aid to Poland, British officials indicated the Royal Air Force is ready to send vital warplane reinforcements to Warsaw.

An air ministry spokesman said: "For a start our Wellington bombers can fly to every capital in Europe with full bomb load and return without refueling. Their range is 3,200 miles, their top speed 265 miles per hour. Berlin, naturally, is within easy striking distance of London."

Officials will not say how many planes Britain has or what is an average bomb load, but the Air Ministry spokesman emphasized the 1,300 planes participating in last week's defence manoeuvres "are only a part of our force." They will not discuss strategy, but they emphasize "counter-offensive" is the major feature of Britain's air policy.

RUSSO-GERMAN

Moscow, Aug. 22—(AP)—Unofficial Soviet sources said today the impending Russian-German non-aggression pact would not exclude negotiation of a mutual assistance agreement with Great Britain and France.

British and French quarters, however, were gloomy over the announcement that Berlin and Moscow were coming to an understanding.

It was uncertain whether the British-French staff talks with Soviet military leaders would be continued today. The British and French missions sought instrutions from their governments.

A terse communique on front pages of morning newspapers told Russians, who have been brought up to think of Germany as a potential enemy, that the German Foreign Minister, Joachim von Ribbentrop, was coming here to conclude a "no war" pact.

Not a newspaper commented on the announcement.

British and French quarters held hopes the long delayed mutual assistance pact with Moscow might still be forged. In these circles, the belief was expressed that the Soviet government was using the German negotiations to pay concessions from London and Paris.

Pact Startles Europe

Berlin, Aug. 22—(AP)— Nazi Germany rushed today toward conclusion of a non-aggression pact with Soviet Russia—a diplomatic "putsch" that startled all Europe.

The move upset the whole structure of the tense middle European situation, apparently nullified four months of effort by Great Britain and France to bring Russia into their bloc of nations pledged to resist aggression and greatly weakened the position of Poland, on whose frontier German troops were massing.

Disclosure that Germany and Russia—long proponents of rival political systems—were preparing an agreement not to fight each other was made in Berlin and Moscow late last night by brief announcements of the respective official news agencies.

"The government of the Reich and the Soviet government have decided to conclude a non-aggression pact with each other," said the German news agency, DNB, in Berlin.

Von Ribbentrop to Moscow

"The Reich Minister of Foreign Affairs, (Joachim von Ribbentrop), will arrive in Moscow Wednesday to conclude the negotiations."

(The statement by Tass, Soviet official news agency, said there was a desire of the two nations to "eliminate the threat of war and sign a non-aggression pact" and added that Von Ribbentrop was coming to Moscow "for the purpose of negotiations.")

Von Ribbentrop was on his way today and Nazis expected him to conclude the negotiations tomorrow.

It was stated here that little remains to be done except to sign the accord—that the preliminary spade work has been thorough.

Meanwhile, big guns—some of which astonished foreign military attaches when they were first shown in Berlin recently—continued to roll toward the Polish border.

Press Warns France

And the Berlin press, as if by command, devoted many columns today to warning France that the Siegried Line on the western frontier is very strong.

Officials of the press, appraising the decision to sign a pact with Russia, called Germany "the invincible exclamation point."

The move was described by diplomatic observers to be Adolf Hitler's master stroke.

Hitler's Voelkischer Beobachter spoke of the negotiations as "Germany's secret" and declared that the calm behavior of Germany and Italy amid worry elsewhere had been due to the knowledge they had a surprise up their sleeve.

Germany's position toward Poland was believed here tremendously strengthened and Warsaw, to German eyes, suddenly became small and comparatively insignificant.

Polish Situation

Whether culmination of the Polish problem would be speeded up remained a question. Observers said Germany certainly would not take any final action in the direction of Poland for a day or two.

Once signatures are affixed to the non-aggression pact with Russia, however, Germany will have one less reason to fear involvement with other nations over Poland, it was said.

"Polish threats," about which the agitated German press manifested great concern for several weeks, became a minor worry.

While there was no official comment, and the possibility remained there might be unsuspected conditions attached to Russia's promise of non-aggression, the informal German motion was that the "way to recover Danzig without danger" is now open.

Exact Details Unknown

But the precise terms of the agreement were not disclosed.

It was an outgrowth of the important trade deal with Russia, announced Sunday, under which Germany obtains access to Russian oil, timber and wheat.

Germany is convinced that the so-called "encirclement policy" of the western powers has been smashed.

There was jubilation also over the apparent failure of the British and French military talks in Moscow and the many weeks of negotiation by which France and Britain sought to coax Russia into their bloc.

"What will the British cabinet have to talk about this afternoon?" was a question frequently proposed by one smiling Berliner to another.

"Our troubles are over in the east," said the press. "We can devote undivided attention to the west, and prospective invaders better beware."

Paper Speaks to French Poilu

The Lokal Anzeiger after describing the Siegried Line and pronouncing it unconquerable addressed itself directly to the individual French soldier, saying:

"And you should storm that, poor poilu?"

Continuing its remarks to the French fighter, it said:

"No, French soldier, here all your bravery for which we have the greatest respect is useless.

"Why should you go into this fire because, for instance, a German town wants to return to Germany, and because Englishmen occupied with their business are opposed to giving justice to this town?"

The official German news agency called the Siegfried Line 'a new German miracle in comparison with which the great pyramids are children's toys."

Although the effect the new agreement would have on Germany's promises to Japan under terms of the anti-comintern pact could not be known immediately, German sources stated "you may be sure that angle has been taken care of."

Italy is also is a signatory of the anti-comintern pact.

WORK PROCEEDING ON S. A. CITADEL

Excavation of Site Nearly Completed as Work Proceeds on Schedule

Excavation of the site of the new Salvation Army citadel which will be sunk to a depth of four feet below ground level, started this week and is proceeding satisfactorily, Mr. Thomas Adams, contractor, stated this morning.

Workmen have now reached the depth to which the basement will be dug, and today were preparing the gravel for forms in which the cement walls will be built. These will be erected some eight feet above ground level, giving the basement plenty of room for Sunday School rooms, songster and band rooms which will be built in this part of the building.

The new building will be thirty-six foot frontage on Pinnacle Street with a depth of sixty feet.

The construction program is proceeding according to schedule Mr. Adams stated. Eight men are now employed in the preliminary work. The cement floor which will be laid in the basement will be placed above three inches of cinders. This allows for absorption of any moisture that might accrue, Mr. Adams stated.

The actual laying of the floor however, will not take place for some time as the contractor at present will go on with the work of construction of walls and brick work. Asked for an opinion as to when Mr. Adams smiled and shook his head. "It's a bit early to prophecy anything as broad as that at this time," he said, "but the work is going ahead on schedule, and at this rate we expect to have the building erected in good time, providing the weather man gives us a smile during the early construction stages."

Hobo, Cat Breakfast Together

To paraphrase a well-known proverb, travelling the broad highways makes strange "meal-fellows".

This morning near the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge where the waters of the harbor lap on the stony shore, a happy hobo, whistling a gay roundelay, merrily brewed a tin can of tea. Nearby lay a crust of bread and a large cucumber, the gift of a generous city market vendor.

As the gay one munched his sandwich and quaffed his steaming brew, there came a squeal, and a flurry of threshing bodies.On a rocky ledge about ten feet away a large cat had caught a husky rat that had inadvertently left its lair on an early morning foraging sortie.

Not the slightest bit perturbed by their proximity, both cat and hobo finished their morning meal while a couple of interested spectators looked on.

Peterboro Lady Gets 4 1-4 lb. Bass

Mrs. Percy Latta, attractive young Peterborough matron was the proudest women in the city over the week-end. For by the simple expedient of hauling a four and one-quarter pound small-mouth black bass from the waters of Lake Ontario near South Bay on Saturday, she relegated herself to the top-notch ranks of woman anglers.

Mrs. Latta stated the big fellow gave her a strenuous battle before she succeeded in hauling it into the boat, and this fact plus the one that it is the first time Mrs. Latta ever caught a fish larger than a minnow reflects great credit on her angling ability. The big fellow left for Peterborough this morning

Mrs Latta is a sister of Mrs. Ernest Martin, 214 Church street, and Mrs. Jack Clark, North James street, this city.

Girl Falls from Bike And is Badly Cut

While alternating at pushing each other along upon a bicycle on the city streets, the bike went out of control and crashed through a window at Dutton's shoe repair shop on S-tion street yesterday afternoon, inflicting minor lacerations upon the arm of a girl named Finn, who resided nearby, city police were told yesterday. The Finn girl, in company with Gwendolyn Dewey, Bettes street, was riding on a bicycle that was being pushed along the sidewalk by the Dewey girl, when it suddenly toppled over into Dutton's display window. The Finn girl's arm was quite badly lacerated when it struck the jagged glass of the shattered window.

Entries at Belleville Fair Will Show Breeders Turn to Blooded Cattle

All Records in Exhibits of Herds Will be Broken, Fair Officials State

Featured among the many attractions that will go to make Belleville's Fair this year one of the outstanding exhibitions of its kind in Eastern Ontario, will be the Fair's own "blue blood" visit.

Not the purple and ermine of royalty as we know it, but blooded strains of livestock proud of their lineage.

From the far-flung sections of the district, these proud scions of the best in blooded stock that the country can produce will come. From faraway farms of the province, the stately Ayrshire, the proud Holstein the demure Jersey and the stocky sturdy beef breeds, will converge here in a cattle display that for entries and quality alone will please the eye of the most critical appraiser of this form of livestock.

According to Secretary R. H. Ketcheson, the entry list thus far has been productive of the most convincing proof that district and provincial breeders are more and more turning to blooded cattle as their chief source of milk and beef production.

Breeding of these fine strains, supplemented by the importation of sires from the best overseas and domestic herds has increased during the past few years by leaps and bounds. Each year sees more and more breeders turning to one r more of these breeds, with the result that the general calibre of stock being raised in this particular district is regarded as being very high.

Ample proof of this will be seen at the Fair. The entry list is steadily increasing and by the time the list closes ,officials feel sure that all records will be broken. Many outstanding breeders of the province have signified their intention of showing their prize herds, or representatives at the Fair here Aug. 29-30-31st.

POLICE COURT

His Worship Magistrate Ambrose Shea of Kingston presided at today's local sittings of the City Police Court in the absence of Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., who is vacationing at present.

Mike Donato, Trenton, appeared on a charge of allegedly forging a cheque, to the amount of $100.80. Before a plea was requested, Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C., informed the court that the charge would have to be changed to that of "making a false document, to wit a cheque".

Frank Cushing, local barrister appearing for the accused, requested an enlargement until Sept. 1, which was granted by His Worship before any plea was taken in the matter. Donato was later admitted to bail.

Sixteen-year-old Archie Hill of Trenton, appeared on a charge of the theft of two dollar watches, allegedly taken over the week-end from McCurdy's jewelry store. This case was also enlarged at the request of Chief Kidd. "There is another boy said to be associated with Hill and who failed to appear today after we permitted him out on his own bail last Saturday," revealed Chief Kidd as he asked for a warrant for the second boy's arrest. Hill was allowed to return home after being instructed to return and face the above charge on the 29th instant.

Two habitual inebriates found themselves facing a second offence intoxication charge and following pleas of guilty each was sentenced to two months in the common jail, after they intimated they were unable to pay the assessed fine of $50. and costs. A speedster also contributed to the court funds after pleading guilty to driving at an excessive rate of speed in Belleville.

MELONS FEATURE CITY MARKET

Prices Fairly Good According to the Quantity Offered

Featured produce at the city market today took a decided turn in favor of watermelons and canteloupe as heavy stocks of these fruits made their appearance. Prices were fairly good according to the quantity offered with canteloupe selling at from five cents each while watermelon of good size offered from as low as ten cents.

Other produce was fairly heavy with a good variety of farm and garden truck on display. Home-grown tomatoes took a decided drop in price despite the fact that canning factories of the district started preserving operations today. Bushel lots were quoted at seventy-five cents each with basket lots offered at twenty cents.

Potato prices were firm with good quality "spuds" selling at twenty-five and thirty cents the peck. New vegetables were plentiful and sold at week-end prices.

Imported peaches and plums again headed the fruit display with the former selling at forty and forty-five cents the basket. Plums were offered at forty cents in the most places. An occasional box of red raspberries was noticed that were offered at fifteen cents each.

Harvester apples were offered at twenty cents the basket with other varieties selling at similar prices.

Whitefish was quoted at seventeen cents the pound.

SHUTTLE SERVICE

Will Send Reinforcement

Answering recent sneers in the German press that Britain and France would not and could not give material aid to Poland, British officials indicated the Royal Air Force is ready to send vital warplane reinforcements to Warsaw.

An air ministry spokesman said: "For a start our Wellington bombers can fly to every capital in Europe with full bomb load and return without refueling. Their range is 3,200 miles, their top speed 265 miles per hour. Berlin, naturally, is within easy striking distance of London."

Officials will not say how many planes Britain has or what is an average bomb load, but the Air Ministry spokesman emphasized the 1,300 planes participating in last week's defence manoeuvres "are only a part of our force." They will not discuss strategy, but they emphasize "counter-offensive" is the major feature of Britain's air policy.

RUSSO-GERMAN

Moscow, Aug. 22—(AP)—Unofficial Soviet sources said today the impending Russian-German non-aggression pact would not exclude negotiation of a mutual assistance agreement with Great Britain and France.

British and French quarters, however, were gloomy over the announcement that Berlin and Moscow were coming to an understanding.

It was uncertain whether the British-French staff talks with Soviet military leaders would be continued today. The British and French missions sought instructions from their governments.

A terse communique on front pages of morning newspapers told Russians, who have been brought up to think of Germany as a potential enemy, that the German Foreign Minister, Joachim von Ribbentrop, was coming here to conclude a "no war" pact.

Not a newspaper commented on the announcement.

British and French quarters held hopes the long delayed mutual assistance pact with Moscow might still be forged. In these circles, the belief was expressed that the Soviet government was using the German negotiations to pay concessions from London and Paris.

Pact Startles Europe

Berlin, Aug. 22—(AP)— Nazi Germany rushed today toward conclusion of a non-aggression pact with Soviet Russia—a diplomatic "putsch" that startled all Europe.

The move upset the whole structure of the tense middle European situation, apparently nullified four months of effort by Great Britain and France to bring Russia into their bloc of nations pledged to resist aggression and greatly weakened the position of Poland, on whose frontier German troops were massing.

Disclosure that Germany and Russia—long proponents of rival political systems—were preparing an agreement not to fight each other was made in Berlin and Moscow late last night by brief announcements of the respective official news agencies.

"The government of the Reich and the Soviet government have decided to conclude a non-aggression pact with each other," said the German news agency, DNB, in Berlin.

Von Ribbentrop to Moscow

"The Reich Minister of Foreign Affairs, (Joachim von Ribbentrop), will arrive in Moscow Wednesday to conclude the negotiations."

(The statement by Tass, Soviet official news agency, said there was a desire of the two nations to "eliminate the threat of war and sign a non-aggression pact" and added that Von Ribbentrop was coming to Moscow "for the purpose of negotiations.")

Von Ribbentrop was on his way today and Nazis expected him to conclude the negotiations tomorrow.

It was stated here that little remains to be done except to sign the accord—that the preliminary spade work has been thorough.

Meanwhile, big guns—some of which astonished foreign military attaches when they were first shown in Berlin recently—continued to roll toward the Polish border.

Press Warns France

And the Berlin press, as if by command, devoted many columns today to warning France that the Siegried Line on the western frontier is very strong.

Officials of the press, appraising the decision to sign a pact with Russia, called Germany "the invincible exclamation point."

The move was described by diplomatic observers to be Adolf Hitler's master stroke.

Hitler's Voelkischer Beobachter spoke of the negotiations as "Germany's secret" and declared that the calm behavior of Germany and Italy amid worry elsewhere had been due to the knowledge they had a surprise up their sleeve.

Germany's position toward Poland was believed here tremendously strengthened and Warsaw, to German eyes, suddenly became small and comparatively insignificant.

Polish Situation

Whether culmination of the Polish problem would be speeded up remained a question. Observers said Germany certainly would not take any final action in the direction of Poland for a day or two.

Once signatures are affixed to the non-aggression pact with Russia, however, Germany will have one less reason to fear involvement with other nations over Poland, it was said.

"Polish threats," about which the agitated German press manifested great concern for several weeks, became a minor worry.

While there was no official comment, and the possibility remained there might be unsuspected conditions attached to Russia's promise of non-aggression, the informal German motion was that the "way to recover Danzig without danger" is now open.

Exact Details Unknown

But the precise terms of the agreement were not disclosed.

It was an outgrowth of the important trade deal with Russia, announced Sunday, under which Germany obtains access to Russian oil, timber and wheat.

Germany is convinced that the so-called "encirclement policy" of the western powers has been smashed.

There was jubilation also over the apparent failure of the British and French military talks in Moscow and the many weeks of negotiation by which France and Britain sought to coax Russia into their bloc.

"What will the British cabinet have to talk about this afternoon?" was a question frequently proposed by one smiling Berliner to another.

"Our troubles are over in the east," said the press. "We can devote undivided attention to the west, and prospective invaders better beware."

Paper Speaks to French Poilu

The Lokal Anzeiger after describing the Siegried Line and pronouncing it unconquerable addressed itself directly to the individual French soldier, saying:

"And you should storm that, poor poilu?"

Continuing its remarks to the French fighter, it said:

"No, French soldier, here all your bravery for which we have the greatest respect is useless.

"Why should you go into this fire because, for instance, a German town wants to return to Germany, and because Englishmen occupied with their business are opposed to giving justice to this town?"

The official German news agency called the Siegfried Line 'a new German miracle in comparison with which the great pyramids are children's toys."

Although the effect the new agreement would have on Germany's promises to Japan under terms of the anti-comintern pact could not be known immediately, German sources stated "you may be sure that angle has been taken care of."

Italy is also is a signatory of the anti-comintern pact.

Lackadaisical Attitude Of the Western Nations Criticized by Speaker

"The great compelling, almost tragic need today is for a better, more sympathetic understanding between nations, peoples, and classes and the willingness to cooperate with and put ourselves in the other fellow's shoes in order to see his point of view." Dr. Percy Thornton, Winnipeg, told members of the Belleville Rotary Club in a dynamic address at their weekly luncheon yesterday

The speaker levelled sharp criticism at the lackadaisical attitude of the western nations. "We are too lazy to do much about creating a better understanding," he charged.

He deplored the fact that the League of Nations had proved a failure. "It was the embodiment of that very spirit of co-operation that the world so badly needs today," he said. "It was a new attempt to sit together with our feet under the same table, and the failure of the League was the greatest loss the world has sustained within the last twenty-five years."

Failed Badly.

"We failed, and we failed badly. We expected spiritual fruitage when we were too lazy to provide spiritual rootage. We knew more about baseball leagues than we wanted to know about the League of Nations, and because we were too lazy to do much about it, it failed."

The speaker was in Manchuria when new flag was raised in that country. Members of the Lincoln Commission warned what would happen if "this thing went through. Watch history for the next few years," they said. The Japanese put the thing through. China was in the balance, and as events have proved the whole world was in the balance. The present international situation is as it is because we were too lazy to do anything about it.

Better Understanding Needed.

The spirit of better understanding is sadly needed in our church life, Dr. Thornton declared. "How can we expect nations to co-operate if we cannot cooperate as denominations. One of the greatest divisor forces in the small towns of today is denominational littleness and jealousy."

"If we have that kind of religion and relations in our denominations, no wonder we have war. We are promoting a little war within ourselves," he said.

The speaker deplored the attitude of some politicians in their lack of broadness in fighting their platform battles. "They think too much, far too much," he said, "of tirading their political opponents that they do for the good of the nation."

International relations, he said, was a tremendous subject. "I will say this," he declared, "that I wish Chamberlain had gone to sit with the Germans around the table seven years before he did."

Canada Will Increase.

Canada could not always expect to be a country of ten or twelve millions of people, Dr. Thornton pointed out, referring to the new Canadians that are coming or will come to this country. "They will be either a liability or an asset, for they see the worst of us generally and the best of us seldom. They have a hard time here because they do not understand, and the things we do not understand are the things that fill us with fear."

If they are put under good influence here, when they go back to their own countries they will say that Canada is a good democracy, the speaker said. "We have got to get that feeling of understanding, the spirit of cooperation working so that the peoples and the nations of the earth will enjoy everlasting peace."

The speaker was introduced by Rotarian Jack Deacon while club appreciation was expressed by Rotarian Archie Cameron and passed to the speaker by President Howard Clarke.

HITCHHIKING BIRD

The belief held by some that the humming-bird is not adverse to hitch-hiking on the back of some larger bird has never been conclusively established. Generally, ornothologists credit them with making the passage from the tropical glades of the Amazon to the alpine meadows of the Rockies under the power of their own stout little hearts and powerful wings. It is upon this return flight that the "hummers" are now embarked.—Calgary Herald.

Madoc W. I. Hears Fine Address on Traffic Laws

Madoc, Aug. 22.—On Friday, Aug. 18, the Madoc Women's Institute met at Mrs. B. B. Tanner's home and entertained members of Ivanhoe W.I. Mrs. C. Whytock, past president, presided over the meeting and for a while community singing was very heartedly entered into, concluding with the opening Institute Ode. After reading and disposing of minutes, communications were read announcing officers' rally at Ivanhoe. Meat cookery class held at Madoc and the training school or girls project leader at Stirling. By a motion of Mrs. A. Smith seconded by Mrs. J. Reid, the institute will sponsor a girls' project again this year, project being "The Club Girl Entertains". A committee namely president, secretary and Mrs. C. Whytock was formed to look for place, etc., for meat cookery class. Mr. A. Dymond, provincial police, addressed the meeting on "Traffic Laws", their enforcement, rules, etc. This proved very instructive as many ladies are car drivers and all can well afford to keep in mind traffic rules. Mrs. William Shaw of Ivanhoe read a very interesting editorial on work. "The Habitant" was ably read by Mrs. Clifford. Mrs. Kilpatrick spoke on the 12-day tour of the Scottish Women's Institute members throughout Canada climaxing at New York World's Fair. Mrs. J. Benson read a beautiful poem, "Autumn". Mrs. C. Sills, past district president, moved a vote of thanks to the local institute for the occasion of their visit to Madoc. The roll call "What public office can be held by women" showed 45 present. A contest was given by Mrs. L. Ashley after which the National Anthem closed a very enjoybale and instructive meeting. A lovely lunch was served by the assisting hostesses.

Mr. Walter Salisbury and Miss Edna Salisbury visited relatives in Kingston during the past week.

Miss Marion Henderson of Iroquois Falls is visiting her grandmother, Mrs. L. O'Hara.

Miss Breakall is visiting relatives in Oshawa and Toronto.

Mrs Mabel Ford of Toronto is spending a few days with Mrs. Embury.

Mr. and Mrs. Rodney Brink of Seattle, Wash., spent a few days with friends at Hawthornden, Madoc.

Mr. and Mrs. John McCaffrey spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Walter Campbell, Bloomfield, P. E.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Whytock spent Sunday with Miss Jean Whytock, Kingston.

GOV'T REWARD FOR INFORMATION STILL UNCLAIMED

Galt, Ont., Aug. 22—(CP)— The Ontario government's offer of a $5,000 reward for information leading to the conviction of the person or persons responsible for the murder Saturday of John Milroy, 77, and his aged sister, Annie, remained unclaimed today as police pressed investigations.

Attorney-General Gordon Conant announced the reward last night as search parties continued their concerted man-hunt in swamp-land near Hespeler, where the Milroy's abandoned automobile was found Sunday.

Earlier in the day Inspector W. C. Lougheed of the Ontario Criminal Investigation Department said "nothing new" had turned up to aid police.

The couple were found slain by a blunt instrument in their farm home near here Saturday. It is believed the guilty party stole their car, abandoning it later near Hespeler. A blood-stained axe found near the bodies bore hairs from the heads of both slain persons.

Sent For Examination

Milroy's blood-soaked shirt and trousers were sent to Toronto for examination by Dr. E. R. Frankish, Ontario Government medico legal expert.

Announcing the reward, Attorney-General Conant described the crime as "most dastardly, jeopardizing every farm home and, in fact, every home in the Province of Ontario." He said every resource would be used to "effect speedy and sure punishment."

"This is offered in accordance with our purpose to leave absolutely nothing undone to apprehend the criminals," the Attorney-General said. "We already have a substantial force of Provincial Police working on the case and hope that the offer of the reward will supplement their efforts so that the criminals may be brought to justice.

"They can have all the police they want down there. We'll put the whole force in action, if necessary."

Mistake Made in Not Giving Sufficient Consideration to Russia

Geneva Park, Lake Couchiching, Ont., Aug. 22—(CP)—Some European powers have made a mistake in failing to give sufficient consideration to Russia, Dr. Hans Simons of the New School for Social Research at New York said last night in an address to the Canadian Institute on Economics and Politics.

"The Soviet Union should have been asked to take part in the Munich conferences and it should have been invited to take part in the peace front conferences," said Dr. Simons, a former member of the German Soial Democratic party and former head of a school of political science in Germany.

The dismissal of Litvinoff from the post of Foreign Minister of the Soviet was brought about by the non-success of the policy of collective security and indivisible peace, Dr. Simons said. He said the fact that it took France nearly a year to ratify the mutual assistance pact with Russia, while the Soviet government passed it immediately, indicated the disinclination of the western powers to deal with Russia.

Dr. Simons expressed a belief that if war should come in Europe the United States would participate, actually as well as through economic assistance. The United States' policy, he said, "tends to show that the United States will stand with all its might behind the aggressed nation."

CALM IN FACE OF CRISIS

The people of the world are crisis-minded again, thanks not to themselves but to the arch militarist of Germany, the maker of crises of the now well-known pattern.

The courts of the nations are witnessing unusual military and diplomatic activity. Diplomacy has to work hard these days. Nations depend on their diplomats in such emergencies.

How far will Hitler go? everyone is asking. Is this emergency like other crises, for it bears resemblances to them and will it lead to new "bloodless victories?" Or will it mean a backdown of the German Dictator before a resolute Poland and her friends? Never before in the relations with Germany were there such binding obligations as link. Britain, France and Poland. Poland has to be satisfied she is receiving justice whether Hitler likes it or not.

Is the German army to be used merely for bluff, or is there the faintest possibility it might be used for another dire purpose of which men and women hate to think?

Late news yesterday was a statement from Count Csaky, Hungarian Foreign Minister, in which he declared "an independent and strong Hungary is an indispensible factor in the political balance of Central Europe." He also remarked that "those who try to loosen old and intimate friendships are working against the maintenance of peace and against the life interest of Hungary." Opinion in Budapest was that the meaning of the latter words was not clear but it was pointed out that the oldest and most intimate relationship of Hungary is with Poland. The Count also asserted that "neither in Germany or Italy was anything asked or demanded or begged from the Hungarian Government or the Foreign Minister. Nothing was even suggested." Count Count Csaky was spending the day reporting on his talks in Rome and Salzburg with German and Italian foreign ministers.

Whatever the future holds the attitude of Britain is that of quiet determination. There shall be an end to aggressions.

YOUTH AND AGE

Youth may be restless today in the face of the economic and political situation, and in the presence of building new ideas which are permeating society, but to many wonder remains that youth is still so steady and reliant.

Even those of great years, those in their eighties and nineties, generally hold this view towards the young, who find themselves in a restless world. The aged find youth stable. And more is the wonder in these days.

These views should reassure those who have fears of the ways of youth. Age represented by large numbers of people of today is kindly and benevolent. It is wise in its calmness and its steady view on life.

It must be remembered that those who are now old came through days of trial and hard work and they did not weaken. They have seen the world change around them, a new mechanized civilization spring up and still they do not lose their faith in the people and particularly in the young in whom is the future and to whom the future belongs.

Age therefore as well as youth has a lesson in this present trying period and that lesson is the importance of sympathetic understanding.

VIKINGS AND CANADA

A race of men who made themselves famous all over Europe in the Middle Ages were the Vikings or Norsemen. A sea-faring race, these bold rovers of the ocean used ships that were small, sharp-prowed, open vessels. With these they ravaged the coasts of the British Isles and northern and western Europe from the eighth to the eleventh centuries. England knew them as Danes and Eastmen. To the Baltic, the Mediterranean countries and Orkneys, Hebrides and Northern France they were Northmen or Norsemen and where they made permanent settlements they were known as Normans. They explored Greenland and Leif Ericson, legend says, in 1002 visited the coast of North America. They were a vigorous race, these Vikings, whose leaders were known as sea-kings. Scarcity of food and crowded populations in Northern Europe led to their development. Besides they possessed a love of adventure.

There is an opinion held that they visited Canada as far inland as the Thunder Bay district. J. W. Curran, editor of the Sault Ste. Marie Star has compiled a book of his articles in the Star in support of this claim. This part of Canada would thus be the centre of Vineland. The claim is one that is pleasant to Canadians, for the world has a liking for these doughty adventurers, though they were hard folk to meet in their own day.

BACK TO THE FARM! BUT HOW? So much has been written about the drift from the farm to the city that it would seem there isn't very much that can be done about it. Unless the city dims its bright lights and the country brightens up the corners where they are the young folk will continue, no doubt, to get the white collar habit in the collegiates and pass up farming as a profession. 'Tis sad, 'tis true, but what are we going to do about it. We must have farms and farmers, or as William Jennings Bryan, the Great Commoner, said, the grass will grow on our city streets. On the other hand said Bryan, you can burn down your cities but they will spring up again as by magic because of the farm influence behind them. Owen Sound Times publishes the result of recent research in Grey County which is startling. Farming conditions have always been excellent in Grey County but the research worker found that the rural population of Grey County, had declined to 35,551 from 63,188 in 1881, a decrease of 37 per cent. From 37 persons living on the square mile in Grey County fifty years ago there are 19 now. In the same period the urban population has jumped from 7,351 to nearly 24,000. Looks like we'll have to cease educating the youth from the farms for city jobs. Lets have more agricultural education and more glorification of agriculture as a profession including, of course, cheese and butter making, stock raising, fruit culture, etc.

Some years ago we read of an experiment in keeping the children down on the farm in Michigan which had good results. The farmer formed a joint stock company and took the childnen into the company giving each an interest in the business with the result that the farm was better worked and the children grew up on the farm without any desire to bury talents in city hall bedrooms and put up with skimpy meals in one-arm restaurants.

TEN RULES

According to the philosophy of Old Bill, in his Dunnville Chronicle Column, there are ten rules for happiness:

1. Make up your mind to be happy. It is largely self-hypnotism.
2. Make the best of your lot.
3. Do not take yourself too seriously and imagine that everything that happens to you is of vital importance.
4. Do not take others too seriously, nor worry too much over their opinions.
5. Do not borrow trouble or worry about the future. Enjoy today and meet tomorrow when it comes.
6. Do not cherish enmities and grudges.
7. Keep in circulation. Go around and meet people.
8. Do not hold post mortems over mistakes you have made or sorrows that have befallen you.
9. Do something for someone less fortunate than yourself.
10. Keep busy.

If only half of the ten were observed, a lot of grief would be saved many people.

GOSH ALL HEMLOCK! Them was swell races at Goshen, the little town in New York State with the big ideas, which has become the harness horse Mecca of the world. "Peter Astra" and his driver, Dr. Parshall, certainly made good on advance notices and ditched the theory that a "Sure Thing" never wins. What burned us up, however, was certain radio announcers attempt to put Gosh in Goshen. Goshen, if we know our Goshen, is pronounced Go as the starter pronounces GO, so it is GOshen, not GOSHen as in By Gosh, so GOSHen is a misnomer, and GOshen is the way the natives down that-away have been in the habit of calling their town these many years......unless we have bats in our belfry ,and we don't think it's bats.

TAG END HOLIDAY

Teachers who have been taking the summer courses as required by the Department of Education are now home to enjoy the tail end of the holiday period.

One of their favorite stories concerns the lady teacher who died and went to heaven, where presumably all teachers eventually go, when one considers their lot on earth.

Duly escorted through the pearly gates by St. Peter, she was surprised to find many people she had known on earth wandering around the golden streets twanging their harps. There were salesmen and doctors and clerks and nurses and carpenters and many others . . . but she saw no teachers!

"Where are all the school teachers?" she asked.

"Right this way," replied St. Peter, and he led her over to a group of tumble down shacks on the outskirts of heaven. The shacks were completely deserted; there was no visible sign of life.

"I still don't see any teachers," she insisted. "Don't any of them ever get up to heaven?"

"Oh yes, there are plenty of teachers here," the saint replied, "but this is July and they're all away just now down in Hell going to summer school."—Kincardine News.

THE ENGLISH SPARROW

Most ornithologists call this feathered cosmopolitan (the English Sparrow) an unmitigated pest or worse, and ordinary citizens as a whole look upon him with hearty disfavor. Ironically enough, the bird was imported into this country to combat foliage-eating caterpillars. Eight pairs, having been brought from England in 1850 by directors of the Brooklyn Institute, were liberated in Brooklyn the following year.

During the next 20 years colonies were established also in St. Louis, San Francisco, Cincinnati, Philadelphia and other cities. He now thrives in nearly every part of the country. Indeed, this sparrow of European origin (his native country does not seem to be known) is probably the most numerous of any land bird in the world and the most widely distributed.—New York Sun.

BIRDS AND CATS

The world may roughly be divided into those who like cats and those who don't. It isn't the kind of thing that one is indifferent about, like bustles or the way a wife does her hair. A Mr. Haushalter of Wiscasset, Me. apparently lacks enthusiasm for cats. He has developed his lawn into a sort of bird sanctuary, and supplies food and water. In the normal course of events young birds come along, to which "prowling cats", he says, become a danger. Mr. Haushalter has solved his problem in a neat way of his own and has taken pen in hand to write to the Times about it: "I find that small Fourth of July torpedoes are effective. One thrown at a cat, exploding, scatters small pellets against the marauder, who never returns." This sounds effective, if a little on the austere side, but it raises a nice question as to Mr. Haushalter. If high school German serves me reliably, Mr. Haushalter's name literally means "housekeeper". To live up to his name he must keep a mouseless house. And what bird will keep Mr. Haushalter's name as a housekeeper untarnished? He may some time rue those fire-crackers, and even have to pay a Piper.—N.Y. Times.

THE SURGEON'S FEE

Velpean, the eminent French surgeon, successfully attended a five-year-old child, and the grateful mother called upon him and said: "Monsieur, I do not know how to express my gratitude. May I present you, however, with this pocketbook, embroidered with my own hands?"

"Madam," said Velpean, "my art is not merely a matter of feeling. My life has its necessities like yours. Allow me to decline your charming gift and request a more substantial remuneration."

"But, Monsieur, what do you wish? Fix the fee yourself."

"Five thousand francs, Madam."

She quietly opened the pocketbook, which contained ten one thousand franc notes, counted out five, and politely handed them to Velpean.—Christian Science Monitor.

A HEAVY LOSS

A woman went to Blackpool market to buy a cabbage.

She chose one—a big one—and put down her bag for a moment to take the cabbage from a shop assistant with both hands.

When she put out a hand to pick the bag up again it had gone.

And it contained two £100 notes, twenty-three £10, a £5 note and 365 £1 notes—£800 in all.

The loser was Mrs. Mary Hodgkinson, ob Breck-road. Most of the money belonged to her eighty-year-old mother, a local boarding-house keeper.—London Sunday Express.

Plainly the Lord was with us.—Field Marshal Hermann Goering, describing the rise of the new German air force.

Recognizing Tendency to Tuberculosis and So Preventing it

When we learn that the death rate in 1900 from tuberculosis was 160 per 100,000 of the population and in 1936 it was but 36, it would seem that our tuberculosis specialists would be satisfied. As with all research workers, however, we find that they are not satisfied but believe the day will come when there will be no cases of active tuberculosis in our midst. And their reason for believing this is logical as we study the report of the work done by Dr. William Ogden and nine associates at the Toronto Western Hospital as recorded in the Canadian Medical Association Journal.

Instead of waiting until there are definite signs of tuberculosis present as found by examination of the chest and Xray, these workers during the past fifteen years have been making tests of cases which have been in contact with cases of tuberculosis and whose test by tuberculin is positive. The blood serum of these "positive" cases is now tested and they are grouped as in the case of the Wassermann test (for syphilis), that is from 4 plus down to 1 plus, doubtful and negative.

What happened in these cases thus tested? Tuberculosis signs and symptoms were found at some time after the tests were made in 43 per cent of individuals who had given a positive or questionable reaction to the blood serum test. "Heretofore, without these tests we had no means of discriminating amongst the contacts unless or until they showed positive sputum, positive Xray, symptoms or signs, and then actual disease is present and it is too late for prevention."

Dr. Ogden points out that as long ago as 1911, Dr. A. H. W. Caulfield, one of his associates advocated the examination of the blood serum which would detect a stage before tuberculosis actually occurred.

By giving advice as to food and rest (mental and physical) to these "positive" cases, a great number of cases of active tuberculosis was prevented.

"In an observed and large controlled series of 1300 contacts in 15 years, the number of cases of tuberculous disease was 4 per cent compared with 20 per cent in uncontrolled series."

"In an observed and largely controlled series of 400 normal individuals, not a single case of tuberculosis developed".

NO ROYAL TRAIN

No Royal train will be available to the Duke and Duchess of Kent because of variable railway gauges. Queensland and Tasmania have 3 feet, 6 inches, New South Wales 4 feet, 8 inches, and Victoria, 5 feet, 6 inches. Western Australia has two of these widths and South Australia has all three.

Therefore special trains will be made up in each state and everywhere they go they will be preceded by pilot trains. Precautions not usual when Governors General travel will be taken, such as special guards on crossings and bridges, and the suspension of shunting.

It will not be possible to add special coaches to Victoria's streamlined, air-conditioned flyers-de-luxe which handle the inter-capital traffic, but if it is desired to use them, sections will be reserved and on the Duke will be conferred the Freedom of the Footplate if he desires the thrill of some really fast driving.—Australian Press Bureau.

SHIP'S SUICIDE

Men of the sea always affectionately refer to a ship as "she". To those who love ships, they are alive. They are made of dead lumber and steel, but once articulated into a whole, they take on personality and life.

At Antioch, Calif., lay the Hesperides, a three-master which had outlived her usefulness and was condemned to be burned as a menace.

The other night she broke her moorings, drifted up the San Joaquin river channel without a pilot, poked her tall masts into high-tension wires, caught fire and burned to the water line.

Suicide, the old men along the waterfront called it, no less. Nonsense, rejoin we landlubbers from our fireside chairs.

And yet—there is something about a ship — more than planks and plates.

These are the very things we lump together and call coincidence.—New Glasgow News.

THE $2.00 RIDDLE

Alex Borschuk, the handsome young Windsor boy who fights under the name of "Al Delaney" and who, when last heard from, was getting all set for a bout with the redoubtable Max Schmeling, has gone Hollywood.

From Stonehaven Apartments, North McCadden Place, Hollywood, he pleads: "How about a little help? This is a little story I heard a few weeks ago. Three chaps walked into a hotel, rented a suite of rooms. The clerk charged them $30 and each paid $10. Later the clerk noticed he had overcharged them so he sent the kid upstairs with a $5 bill.

"The kid couldn't figure out how he was going to divide $5 among three men, so he put $2 in his pocket and gave each of the trio $1. So then each man now had paid $9, making a total of $27. The kid kept $2, and that makes $29. What happened to the extra buck?"

In case the problem is still worrying Alex, it's all quite simple. The hotel got $25, the kid $2. What could be more simple, eh?—Windsor Star.

Newspaper Men in the Real

If the movies gain by getting closer to the facts of life, then the report from Hollywood that a new type of newspaper man is being demanded by the Hays office should be a reform in the right direction. In making suggestions about the script for a proposed film, Joseph I. Breen sees "a very important question of industry policy" involved in the "characterization of newspaper men as drunkards who go about "cadging" drinks and generally conducting themselves in a thoroughly offensive and unethical manner."

It has always come with a shock of surprise to newspaper-men to see how they were portrayed on stage and screen. While they secretly enjoyed thinking of themselves as not quite like other men, the picture drawn in Hollywood was a little too strong to stomach with complete pleasure.

Even to such sections of the public as never knew a newspaper man or visited his office, there must have been something faintly unbelievable about the riotous manner of life which was offered. Newspaper men themselves have been partly at fault in allowing this unreal picture to flourish; they have not been so energetic as they might have been in making it clear that the usual day of the newspaper man is perhaps not much more exciting than some other office worker's day. A fair number of reporters and editors lead lives at work and among their families that are based on catching the 8.03 in the morning and returning home on the 5.19 with their lives wholesomely devoid of any special frenzy or dissipation. Today's standards of quality, the competition within a newspaper's own staff, and from other papers demand a constant alertness, accuracy and competence that a zigzag journalist cannot supply.

Newspaper men know there is plenty of drama in their work. Every day is different touches new lives, new events, and makes necessary a persistent struggle to record this action swiftly and well on the printed page. Newspaper men will await with interest a sincere effort by Hollywood to present a picture that they can recognize as lifelike.—New York Times.

It's Hard Work Running a Farm

The other day we threshed the first of the oat crop. Not enough had gone through the machine to permit of even guessing at the actual yield per acre, although it is fairly certain that the yield will be a reasonably good one. The quality of the grain is the very best, and the yield would be considerably higher except for the fact that this particular field lies between the bushland and an old pasture field.

Grasshoppers from these sources made a picnic-ground of the oat field. There were hordes of them, and their principal sport was to cut the small stem that supported a number of oat kernels right at the stalk. Unshelled, the grain fell to the ground, while the hopper got busy at another stem. The loss on this field was probably 20 per cent. Fortunately the other fields were not nearly as badly affected.

Now we have said that the crop is a good one, though sometimes we question the sanity of farmers who spend good money on fertilizer and seed grain and till their fields, to find at the end of the season that they would have been better off to have taken a vacation and allowed the fields to remain idle.

We have been told of several fairly large lots of Ontario oats per bushel. We would like to know how anyone can afford to sell grain at such a low price? Will history repeat, and will livestock prices follow grain to the low levels they did ten years ago.

A few weeks ago we marketed a number of hogs. The price then was 12 cents (dressed weight, of course). There were a few other hogs in the pens, not quite ready. Had we sent them out, we should have been docked a dollar on each hog. The other day we shipped these at 10 cents per pound, and we figure we would have been $1.50 to the good on each hog had they been marketed light.

We have read much about the proper weights. In order to hold that British market, so essential to the bacon-producing industry and to our whole country, we must have them. We lost about $10 on those last few hogs. Perhaps we should enter it in our books as money invested in loyalty to the bacon industry and the country at large. It sounds better than to state the plain truth and admit tha we were fools enough no to market when the price was good. Call it patriotism, loyalty or just foolishness, the fact is that we are out ten good dollars that we needed rather badly.—Rusticus in Stratford Beacon-Herald.

'Sophisticated Off the Earth'

We are being sophisticated off the earth. This is a common complaint among elderly or old men. Old men of the Victorian type must, in fact, flock by themselves to get any satisfaction out of life, and even then they come under condemnation because, as is quite natural, they spend their time finding fault with things because they are not as they used to be.

Not long ago a writer pointed out that golf, which used to be an excellent game for any ordinary man, is now become a vested interest, and cannot be played except on a special course where the wrinkles are all smoothed out and natural hazards eliminated in favor of artificial ones. Instead of one club one must have a bagful and a caddy to carry them and a lot of etceteras besides.

Other games have gone swing in the same way. Shinney is no longer possible. That excellent game, formerly called rounders, has become an expxert, highly paid and expensively equipped show at which the public sit and yell for the lives of those they dislike among the performers, with murder in their hearts for the abject individual known as umpire. A bicycle was formerly a thing of joy, but no sane man would risk his life on one on the roads of the present day with motors whizzing round corners at sixty miles an hour and gigantic trucks blocking the roads and the view with a ruthless purpose of putting everything smaller to flight.

There used to be a stock amusement known as the theatre. Alas! it has vanished and people who talk about actors who used to be household words are greeted with melancholy but sympathetic glances such as are bestowed upon the imbecile. Books are still read, but not the old books. Nobody at present appears ever to have heard of Dickens or Thackeray, and Scott, if you ask about him, is mistaken for a new make of motor car. Shakespeare, we understand, is being rewritten at a place called Hollywood and will eventually be turned into a revue with jazz accompaniments.

The general impression among the old men is that the earth is in a state of decadence.—A.E.S. in Hamilton Spectator.

Can the House Cat Reason?

Sir: Do you believe that cats reason? I do.

I have a cat six years old — a plain alley cat—not really plain, as he is well marked. He is particular in his choice of friends, so there is a little clique, a real cat coterie, and often its members come over to visit me and have a milk cocktail and a liver hors d'oeuvre.

Last summer the cat across the hall lost his home; the family moved and left him with the superintendent of the building. The cat was well cared for, but was most unhappy and eventually disappeared.

x x x

Shortly after that I began packing for a vacation. I was to leave the cat in his own home with a friend of mine, but from the moment the bags came out he was a different cat. He seemed to sense something wrong and followed me everywhere crying. Not only I but my friends also noticed his disturbed conduct. He knew I was going away; he recalled the distress of his friend across the hall. He was distressed during my absence and not until I returned did he resume his normal carefree and happy life.

Last month two families in our apartment house went away for the summer, boarding out their cats. My cat and the two cats left behind missed their mistresses and spent most of their time in a huddle.

Last week I got things ready for my moving day. At once my cat changed; he followed in my footsteps and cried when I left him even for a minute. He ate scarcely anything. Instead of sleeping half the day he would jump in my lap or sit as close to me as possible; at night he slept in my bed. Never have I had so much attention from him. To my disconcertment he even brought a mouse he had caught and laid it at my feet as much as to say: "See, I have good stuff left in me yet." It then dawned on me that he knew what had happened to the other cats and was afraid the same thing would happen to him.

The moving day was a trying one for both of us, but once in our new apartment and settled my cat became himself again. He went back to his seemingly indifference and I could come and go as before without sign of uneasiness on his part.

x x x

There is no doubt in my mind that he and his friends talked things over; maybe some of the homeless cats outside told him their stories. All the cats in the building knew moving day was a day of danger for them.

Cats know more than we realize. My cat does unbelievable things, and if he could talk I know I would be amazed at his knowledge and I am sure he would say cats have a first-class system of communication.

GUN TOTIN' EDITOR

The editor of a Kansas paper says he picked up an Winchester rifle one day recently and started up the street to return it to its owner. The delinquent subscribers got it into their heads he was on the warpath and a number of them he met insisted on poying him what they owed him. On his return to the office he found a load of hay, 15 bushels of corn, 10 bushels of potatoes, a load of wood and a barrel of turnips had been brought in. — Walkerton Herald Times.

STRICTLY HONEST

On a visit to Ottawa, towards the close of the session, one found the most honest member of Parliament; he would not use his parliamentary frank for anything but parliamentary business. He had a substantial business correspondence during the session, for he is not rich enough to devote all his time to politics. Council Turns Down Motion To Purchase Fire Equipment At Special Meeting of Body

Rules Not Suspended to Introduce Motion to Buy Equipment

OTHER BUSINESS

All Departments in City Hall to be Co-ordinated Under One Head

Taunts of "liar" and other unparliamentary language were bandied across the floor of the Council Chamber on Monday night, when the City Council in special session defeated a motion introduced by Alderman Laurie Lewis, Chairman of Fire, and recommended by the Fire Chief "That a Bickle quad truck be purchased from C. R. Clapp at a price of $6,700" and for the time being at least, there will be no new fire fighting equipment purchased by the City Council. The session ended with a quick call for adjournment, when the discussion became exceedingly warm and personalities were injected into the proceedings.

The recommendation to purchase new equipment was tabled in the committee of the whole of which Ald. McLean Haig was chairman but the members thought this should be a report from the Fire Committee and not a recommendation and that it should be brought in under the head of motions. This was agreed to by Ald. Lewis and accordingly under the head of motions, the above motion, which was subsequently defeated because of failure to secure the suspension of the rules to introduce the motion, was brought to the council. As the suspension of the rules could not be obtained, it requiring a two-thirds vote of the members for this procedure, the motion was never put and the council members moved out of the chamber without having accomplished the purchase of new equipment.

Mayor Gives Opinion

Mayor Jamieson Bone, speaking as a member of the Fire Committee, told the members that the committee should be absolved from all blame should a serious conflagration hit the city. "I don't think there is any more need for a Fire Committee to function in this council. We received the report of the Fire Chief and he strongly recommends the purchase of new equipment, yet when we bring the matter to the council, it is turned down," stated His Worship. "The members want to pry into every little detail if the committee brings a recommendation to Council and I don't think I will attend any more meetings of the committee for it is a waste of time. The Fire Chief has said we need new equipment and he specifies the kind that he wishes and the majority of the committee agrees with him and then it is brought to council and turned down."

Ald. Takes Exception

Alderman Haig: "I don't like those remarks and I don't think the members of the council feel that way about it. It is merely a question of price and if the equipment has to be purchased why should we spend $1,200 extra. This motion has put the council members in a bad position. There are many here who wish to suspend the rules to allow this motion to be put but still are unwilling to vote for the measure. We asked for specific specifications and received the same and we find a machine ready to be sold to us for $5,500 and yet there is a motion to buy a machine for $6,700 introduced. I cannot see why we should spend an extra $1,200. I am ready to accept the Fire Committee's report that more fire fighting equipment is needed in this city but I am not prepared to vote for the extra expenditure and therefore I cannot vote for the suspension of the rules to introduce the motion."

Ald Logan: "I am of the opinion that the Lafrance job for $5,500 will give us all the service that we require. There are some advantages that the Lafrance have got that is not in the Bickle job and we can get service on the Lafrance job in short notice. There are three reliable firms behind the Lafrance job, the company itself, the Ford Motor Car Company and the Dominion Bridge Company and I can't see the reason for paying the higher price." Shortly after this discussion the vote was called for the suspension of the rules and it was lost, by a large majority.

Asks Question

Ald. Kennedy: "Here we have spent $140 of the taxpayer's money to pay our salaries for two special meetings and what are they going to say?"

Ald. Lewis: "The Public Works Department purchased a new roller and had an old one repaired at a total cost of nearly $3,200 and of course that was all right."

Ald. Kennedy: "I never did ask for a new roller, all I asked was that the old roller be repaired. The Mayor asked for the new roller."

Ald. Marshall: "Let us finish this thing tonight. I cannot see why a recommendation was not brought to this council 'that new fire fighting equipment be purchased and I think every member is agreed that something should be done along this line. We could then have had a definite line to work on and we could then have voted on what job we wanted."

Ald. Thompson: "I was of the opinion that the money placed in the budget amounting to $1,500 was for fire hose or the prospective new fire building but not to purchase new equipment."

Ald. Lewis: " That is the prize joke of the night." At this point Ald. Lewis asked one of the representatives to tell him where there were in Canada any Lafrance jobs mounted on a Ford chassis and the representative said, Chippewa, Kapuskasing and one in Nova Scotia.

At this point personalities began flying across the chamber and Alderman Lewis and Alderman Thompson became engaged in a heated argument with the word "liar" and "little baby" being heard. Ald. Harvey called for order or the police but Mayor Bone restored order and Ald. Rollins jumped to his feet to have his say. He stated he was surprised at the attitude of the two Aldermen and believed the matter could be amicably settled. "I have always been against buying a pumper," said Ald. Rollins, "But I believe the city is in need of a new hook and ladder and hose equipment. I know some of our ladders are too heavy and unwieldy and if a recommendation comes to the floor for this equipment I am prepared to support it but I am certainly against any motion to buy a $6,700 pumper."

Wanted Expert Opinion

Ald. Allin: "I believe every member of this council is sincere in wishing to protect the citizens from a serious conflagration and I think a compromise can be effected. Why not secure the services of an expert engineer to go into the question of what is required and bring it before the Council in concrete form and then make a recommendation to that effect.

Ald. Thompson: "We do not have to go out of Belleville for an expert as we have one in the person of Mr. O. H. Scott." Ald. Rollins and others agreed with that suggestion.

Ald. Butler: "I think we are talking about something we do not know the first thing about. At first I was satisfied we needed a quad but now I don't know. We are only laymen trying to discuss a technical question and we will never get a full agreement on the question because of so many different opinions."

Ald. Jennings: "We said we would accept the recommendation of the Fire Chief, yet when the motion from that committee is laid on the table the members flatly turn it down."

Permission Granted

Representatives of the Kiwanis Club appeared before the council asking permission of the Council to close off Front street from Bridge street to Victoria Avenue on the nights of September 20th and 21st for the privilege of holding a Street Carnival. George Griffin, secretary of the Club was the spokesman for the delegation and presented a petition from the merchants along that frontage stating they had no objections to the request asked. The council looked with favor on the request and a recommendation was presented granting the request of the Kiwanis Club.

J. W. Imlah, appeared before the council asking permission to establish a Funeral Home in the property now owned by C. M. Reid on the southwest corner of Bridge and George Street. Mr. Imlah stated there would be no unloading of caskets at the front door but under cover at the rear and there would be no large Neon signs but only a small suitable plaque showing the location of the funeral home. "I intend to beautify the grounds and make it a beauty spot for that section of the city if my request is granted," said Mr. Imlah.

Mayor Bone: "Have you heard any objections to placing this Funeral Home in that location?"

Mr. Imlah: 'No I have not and some in the immediate neighborhood have stated to me they have no objections."

Ald. Speaks to Question

Ald. Marshall: "I have heard objections. We have a by-law and this area is restricted and the by-law will have to be changed if the Funeral Home is established. We have also completed our audit and assessment and there are many things to take into consideration." The matter was referred back to the committee.

John Lazenby appeared for the Army and Navy Veterans respecting the taxes on the Memorial Hall and before he began to speak the Mayor informed him that the matter was under advisement of the council and a committee would be appointed to meet the veterans respecting this question.

A resolution to pay the firm of auditors $1,200 was passed and seats will be arranged at convenient places in the city for bus patrons. Fireman F. H. Post was raised to class "A" and his pay increased $4 a month as from September 1st of this year.

A sum of $10 was voted J. A. Kerr, R.R. 8 as city's share of fence erected between two properties near 328 Dufferin Avenue. A sum of $300 was voted to further work in filling in the raceway at the upper end of Front St. A recommendation "That preference given for employment by the Public Works department to unemployed property owners of the city of Belleville, who are at the present time in arrears of taxes and that consideration also be given to unemployed tenants who occupy city property and tenants, who are in arrears in rents to property owners, who are residents of the City, especially those property owners, who are in arrears of taxes on said properties provided these workmen have the ability to carry out the necessary work to the entire satisfaction of the City Engineer and that the Tax Collector be instructed to collect 50 per cent of wages earned by these workmen and apply to arrears of taxes as mentioned," was unanimously passed.

Report Received

A report of a special committee to coordinate all department under one head in the City Hall was read to the council and unanimously adopted. The report is as follows:

Your committee appointed to investigate ways and means of coordinating the various departments in the City Hall beg to herewith submit an interim report.

We are unanimously of the opinion that the first and most important step towards the co-ordination which in our opinion is so desirable is to have a person in charge of the following departments: City Clerk, City Treasurer, Assessor, Tax Collector, Market and City Property, City Engineer and all city departments. Such a person should also have control of all purchasing for the various city departments.

Your committee could enumerate many advantages that would accrue from this step but we intend at a later date to submit a more complete report outlining in greater detail definite objectives and recommendations designed to accomplish them. We believe that the appointment of such an official and the many advantages which will accrue from the co-ordination of the departments affected will be of great advantage to the City as a whole. It should result in an improved efficiency and greater economy in city administration. The committee also feels that it will also eventually improve the status of the several city officials and employees. As already stated a subsequent report to Council will outline in greater detail several changes in methods, routine and procedure to be recommended which can follow after the appointment of such an official as is herein recommended.

We unanimously recommend that the City Assessor, Mr. Harold D. Bateman, be appointed as and from October 1st, 1939, in charge of the several departments above enumerated in addition to his duties as City Assessor, and that the City Solicitor be instructed to prepare the necessary by-law for this purpose.

It is also recommended that Mr. Bateman be asked to sit in on subsequent meetings of your committee and that Aldermen Jennings and Cushing be added to the personnel of the Committee.

All of which is respectfully submitted, A. Kennedy, Laurie Lewis, E. O. Butler, Thos. Cushing, Burton F. Jennings, A. McLean Haig.

A resolution was introduced respecting the Beaches Association and passed by the council. Ald. Allin asked when the vote was taken if the council was unanimous in accepting the resolution and all members stated they were in accord. The resolution follows:

RESOLUTION

WHEREAS the council of the Municipal Corporation of Belleville has from time to time gone on record and in other ways indicated their approval and support of the project undertaken by the Belleville Beaches Association in beautifying and increasing the water front of the City of Belleville.

AND WHEREAS the Council of the Municipal Corporation of the City of Belleville for the year 1939 looks favorably upon the work done to date by the Belleville Beaches Association, and are anxious, without adding to the city's debt, to aid in any possible way the culmination of plans which have been formulated and proposed by the Belleville Beaches Association in beautifying the water front of the City of Belleville.

AND WHEREAS at a regular meeting of the City Council held on June 12th, 1939, a Committee of the Council consisting of Aldermen Butler, Allin and Lewis was appointed for the purpose of investigating the advisability of making the Beaches improvement a relief project, said Committee to report at the next meeting.

AND WHEREAS as a result of the efforts of the said Committee permission has been received from the Department of Welfare to allow the City of Belleville to proceed with the Bathing Beach Project by requiring relief recipients to work out their relief on the three day maximum basis under whatever supervision the City provides.

AND WHEREAS it is felt that in view of the aforesaid permission that there is now no reason why relief labour cannot be given as set out above to the assistance of the beach project.

NOW THEREFORE, The Council of the Municipal Corporation of Belleville hereby approves as follows.

1. THAT relief labour be sent to the Belleville Beach directly from the Relief Office at the rate of six men per day and that for the present time such men be under the supervision of William King at no cost to the City, and that William King spend at least eight hours per day in the supervision of the said relief labour at the Belleville Beaches.

2. THAT the men to be sent to the Belleville Beaches be picked from the rolls by Miss Lynch, Relief Administrator, from time to time and be directed by her.

3. THAT at some future date this Council consider a proper resolution dealing with proper supervision of the relief labour working at the Beaches, the questions to be considered in regard thereto being.

(1) Whether or not the costs in full or in part are to be borne either by the City or the Belleville Beaches Association.

(2) The naming and appointing of such person to supervise relief labour at the Beaches.

Under inquiries Ald. Marshall was told that the money was ready to complete the settlement with the Stephen Adamson Company. Ald. Logan asked if something could not be done to prevent these nickle musical machines playing after midnight on Front Street and the Mayor promised the matter would be attended. Ald. Thompson reported that nearly 50 percent of the trees planted this year were living. A by-law allowing the Bell Telephone Company to do certain work in the city was passed through the various stages.

Paid High Price

Many diplomats were of the opinion Hitler had paid a high price for the Russian move, and that a definite understanding which may change many frontiers in central and eastern Europe must have been reached.

Some thought it might lead even to a partition of Poland and the annexation of the Baltic States by Russia.

They thought it also might spell the doom of Rumania, with Russia regaining Bessarabia; Hungary, under German domination, regaining Transylvania; and Bulgaria, under Italian-German influence, regaining Dobruja.

Since it appeared certain the axis was as strong as ever and that the German action was taken with the whole knowledge and cooperation of Mussolini, diplomats assumed he also had assurances Italian interests would be advanced through it.

Turn to Yugoslavia

Some thought he might turn towards Yugoslavia. Italy's occupation of Albania gives her a foothold in this direction, and she has historic claims on the Dalmation coast.

All such conjectures were based naturally on the supposition that Great Britain and France, deprived of any chance of Russian aid, as they now appear to be, would feel hopeless to aid Poland Rumania.

Diplomatic quarters conceded, however, the possibility of a much different reaction in Britain and France and did not regard the danger of a European war growing from the development as being excluded.

Weddings

AUGER—SHANNON

Marmora, (Special) — Sacred Heart Church, Marmora, decorated with pink gladiolii intermingled with white phlox and other summer flowers was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Saturday morning at nine o'clock, when Josephine Agnes Shannon, daughter of John Joseph Shannon and the late Mrs. Shannon, became the bride of James Herbert Auger, of Perrin, Quebec, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Auger of Marmora.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and was beautifully gowned in white tulle over white taffeta, with a waist length veil of white tulle held in place by white gardenia buds. She carried a bridal bouquet of Sweetheart roses and lily of the valley. She was attended by her sister, Rose, who was daintily gowned in pink tulle over pink taffeta and a shoulder veil of pink tulle held in place by a coronet of pink roses and carried a nosegay of summer flowers. The groom was ably assisted by James Crawford. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. P. Healey assisted by Rev. H. J. Farrell. John Clairmont and John Shannon served at Mass.

The wedding music was played by Miss Reta Deacon and during the offertory Miss Genevieve Shannon sang "O Salutaris'. At communion Harold Auger sang "After Communion" and during the signing of the register, Mrs. James McGrath sang "Ave Maria".

After the ceremony a dainty wedding breakfast was served at the home of Mrs. Agnes Crawford, aunt of the bride, at which forty guests were present. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold locket and chain, to the bridesmaid a pearl rosary and prayer book, to the groomsman a pen and pencil set, to Mrs. McGrath, Miss Shannon and Miss Deacon, silver flower holders, to Harold Auger, a silver penknife, to the ushers ties and to the altar boys, linen handkerchiefs.

The couple left on a honeymoon to Montreal and Quebec City, the bride travelling in a Regina blue tailored suit with navy accessories. They will return to Marmora before taking up residence in Perron, Quebec.

Posy Ring High Fashion

Here's another romantic fancy from the last century—a flower on your finger! Princess Eugenie, it's said, liked to romanticize her hands by wearing an artificial flower tucked through her ring.

This feminine fancy is revived by Peggy Sage in her new Posy Ring, matched to sentimental polish shades and the new Wicked White. The ring is adjustable, fitting any finger, and has a rhodium finish. Attached to it through a loop at the back is a costume flower, just large enough to make the hand look tiny, fragile and beguiling.

If you're the sentimental type, this summer is your heydey. You can't do too many things with flowers. If you're the sleek type, flower accents are a smart surprise. They'll spill in a spray from your white bag. You'll wear them attached to a childish white cord around your neck and wrists. An artificial flower mounted on a tiny comb will keep your hair back off the face for wind-swept driving. You'll go flower-decked even in mermaid moments, with rubberized nosegays.

With all of this, hands will be kept well to the fore. They won't be bronzed by too much sunning. They'll be protected or turned a gentle, golden-brown—and well creamed against drying out the skin. They'll be a symphony of color with a Posy Ring matching polish on the nails—heartbreak-pink before you suntan, goldrush or wicked white to set off a subtle brown.

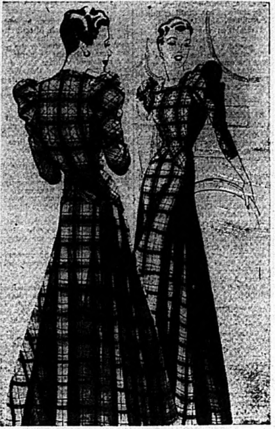
Plaid but Quilted



By PRUNELLA WOOD

IT'S GOING to be fun to lounge this fall. Those straight-cut wool robes which were once our only choice for October and after are now in the minority. Instead, we're shown dozens of good-looking housecoats and negligees, some tailored and others on the dressy idea, but all becoming. We can wear them as readily as silk to the dinner table provided the style's right.

Such a negligee is this tartan plaid with quilty top piped 'round the neck and peplum waist. Ball buttons in red fasten the bodice.

If you're one of those women who dislike the feel of even the softest wool, you should see the clan plaid robes in taffeta. One collarless model with short sleeves hangs full from the shoulders and is unbelted.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

Woes of an Amateur Boxer

Dear Miss Fairfax

I'm still in school, an amateur boxer, and considered manly. I loved a girl for a whole year without saying anything about it, but one evening when I took her to the movies she showed me my affection was returned. The next fall we found ourselves in the same class where she was a leader. But I saw her with another boy and I refused to speak to her.

After that she turned me down flat and when I told her how much I cared, she said her affections were elsewhere. But in school I catch her looking out of the corners of her eyes at me, and all her girl friends know me and speak. Now that school is over, I don't see her, and I am so miserable.

The other day I saw her behind the counter of a store. We were both embarrassed and I hurried away.

Bill

Don't despair, my dear Bill, even if the girl told you her affections were centered elsewhere. Girls often do that as a "come-on". If I printed all you told me about this affair it would take up an entire page of the paper, and the editor would call me down. But you've told me enough to convince me that you have every reason to hope.

Feels Things Are Stacked Against Her

Dear Miss Fairfax

About a year and a half ago my dear mother died and since then father has been going out "steady" with a lady. This troubles me very much although he still treats me well, the old companioship is gone.

My sister has a boy friend, and if I go out with them I feel dreadfully in the way, so I stay a good deal of the time at home alone, and am very unhappy. I've always kept pretty much to myself and haven't many school friends. When mother was living we were such pals and went around together. I've only been out with a few boys, but they never seem to come back or ask for another date. I'm 17 and so unhappy.

Disgusted

I don't wonder you feel disgusted at the turn things have taken since you lost your mother. You must try to make friends, which isn't the easiest thing to do when one has never tried to make friends. It may be a little difficult at first, as everything worth while is difficult-learning to sing, play the piano, talk on the radio or make good pies. But as the copybook adage tells you "practice makes perfect".

If you have some older woman friend, whom you like, and who has a human side, tell her how you feel and see if she won't help you to know some nice girls, or you may be acquainted through some of the young peoples' societies in your church, or join a class in the Y.W.C.A. or some similar organization. It's easier to know girls first, and then it's more than likely you will become acquainted with worthwhile boys. Avoid the cheap kind, who want to pet in parked autos. I see from your letter that you're not that type of girl.

Thinks Two Years Wasted on Her

Dear Miss Fairfax

A certain girl with whom I went for over a year led me to believe she loved me, and for a year she was very devoted to me and it made me very happy. All of a sudden she began to neglect me and seemed to be indifferent. All my family and my friends knew we were going to be married and now that she has left me I feel so humiliated. I received a letter from her rcently saying she felt it was only infatuation. And now I feel as if I've wasted two years of my life on a love that proved false. What do you think? We're in our twenties.

J. D.

I'm going to hand out something that is so old it has become a commonplace. Please let me say you're lucky the girl discovered it was infatuation before marriage rather than afterwards.

You are young, and the world is full of charming girls—many more of them than of marriageable men. Be thankful you're free to choose one who will really love you. In the meantime, if you take my advice you'll drop this girl who humiliated you and makes you feel so uncomfortable.

Broiled Beef Patties Creole Corn

Pickled Pears or Peaches
Caramel Pudding Tea With Lemon

Creole Corn -- Cut the kernels from four medium-sized ears of corn, wash one green pepper and cut in small pieces (two tablespoons). You'll also need one small green onion, cut in small pieces crosswise, and one tomato, peeled and cut in quarters. Melt three tablespoons butter in frying pan, put in green pepper and onion and fry for three minutes, stirring to prevent burning; add tomato and corn, and if corn seems dry, add one-fourth cup water. Cover over low heat until vegetables are cooked— about ten minutes. Season with onehalf teaspoon salt and a dash of pepper.

Pickled or Spiced Peaches or Pears—Brush fuzz off peaches and peel pears, but otherwise leave whole. You also may peel your peaches if you prefer. For seven pounds of fruit use three pounds brown sugar and one cup water and boil 15 minutes. Skim and add four cups vinegar and one of water, one tablespoon allspice, same of cinnamon, one teaspoon whole cloves. Boil all together for ten minutes, then add fruit and cook until it can be pierced with a wooden toothpick. Take fruit out and boil syrup down for an hour. Pack fruit into jars, pour boiling syrup over it and seal.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Cooperation Essential in Treatment of Impetigo

While impetigo is ordinarily just a skin disease and fairly easily cleared up, it can be very serious if it isn't treated. I have even known cases where death resulted from complications following on a bad case of impetigo.

I remember one case in particular. I was called to see this youngster, a boy of about five or six. He really had a bad case of impetigo, and I'm not so sure there wasn't a bit of exzema mixed in with it. He was just a mass of sores, and the disease had apparently been going on for some time.

I treated him for a few days and then found that he was scratching continually. Well, there wasn't any use trying to cure him as long as he kept scratching, so I finally was driven to tying his hands so he couldn't scratch. I know it sounds pretty hard-boiled, but it wasn't as bad as it sounds. I just pinned his hands down to the mattress with strips of cloth.

When I did it I could see that the mother wasn't very happy about it. She even looked angry about it, but I went ahead. However, apparently as soon as I had left the house she undid his hands, and he went ahead scratching. Well, he absorbed so much poison that he developed a nephritis of the kidneys and died. I still think if that mother had co-operated and left those hands fastened, so he couldn't further poison himself with his scratching that child would be alive today

Probably the most difficult place impetigo can be located, as far as treatment goes, is in the scalp. When this happens the hair becomes matted and the skin is ulcerated. So, before you can do anything with the patient you must cut away the hair.

The treatment of impetigo falls roughly into three parts. First, the rash that is present must be cleared up second, the infection must be prevented from spreading to other parts of the body, and lastly, other members of the household must be prevented from becoming infected.

The first task in treating the rash is to remove the crust. This forms very rapidly, and so it has to be removed frequently. The best method I know for removing this crust is a mixture of boracic acid and water. The water should be slightly warmed and the acid dissolved in it. This mixture is then rubbed over the area with absorbent cotton. Be sure and don't use any rough material for this rubbing, for that might harm the skin. The bathing of the area must be done very gently, so that the crust is dissolved rather than scraped away.

This treatment must be repeated at least three times daily oftener if possible. Your doctor will give you an ointment to put on the areas, and if this ointment is to be effective, the sores must be properly cleaned first and free from crust.

This ointment which your doctor will give you is a thick, yellowish-white paste. It must be spread generously over sores thickly enough so that when first put on the rash cannot be seen at all. It should also be spread out well beyond the affected areas on all sides. Each time you wash the diseased parts, this ointment is washed off, of course, and must be replaced when the cleansing is completed.

How Do You Rate in Sportsmanship?

"For when the One Great Scorer comes to write against your name,
He marks —not that you won or lost
—but how you played the game".

Grantland Rice

True Sportsmanship . . . a perfect sportsman and sportswoman . . . . "being a good sport". These are proud words, glorious words, heads high.

Lack of sportsmanship . . . a poor sportsman and sportswoman . . . "being a poor sport". These are mean words, shorn of glory, bywords of reproach, wearing a halter round their necks.

How do you play the game? Do you think the One Great Scorer would mark you a good sportsman or a poor sportsman?

The qualities we reveal in sports, in games, are inevitably the qualities we reveal when we play the game of life. If the pattern of our lives is based on honor, courtesy, courage, sincerity, self-control, we will show these qualities in our sports behaviour.

Let's consider some of the etiquette highlights in the world of sports:

Courtesy, to the spirit of the game, to your partner, to your opponent.

Respect for and observance of, the rules and regulations of the game.

Fair play. Don't take unfair advantage of your opponent.

Scrupulous cooperation with the conventions of the game.

Resourcefulness. Meeting every situation with ease and grace.

Courage. "Win like a man, and lose like a gentleman."

Good nature. Lock up your bad temper at home . . . . refuse to take it with you .Serenity of disposition is a supreme asset in sports.

Consideration. Be considerate of the interest of those who play with you, and those who play against you.

Generosity of spirit. Don't be so intent on your own game that you fail to comment on the good playing of either your partner or your opponent. Be a good loser don't gloat, don't sulk, don't protest, don't "explain". If you win, accept congratulations modestly .

Honesty. Don't pose as being a better player than you are. On the other hand, if you play a game poorly, say so quite honestly at the beginning, and let it go at that. Don't continue to apologize all during the game.

Respect for the decision of the judge and the referees.

All of these qualities are the essentials of sportsmanship. All of them are the essentials of good manners!

Invitations by Bride's Parents

Dear Mrs. Beeckman

My fiance's parents live in Europe. We are to be married soon, and have a problem about the invitations.

Should his parents' names appear on the invitations? If not, whose name should appear on them? My mother and father are living.

How should the invitations read?

Mary

In this country the names of the groom's parents do not appear on wedding invitations, and so you will have no problem about this. Since your mother and father are living; the invitations are sent out in their names. They are the hostess and host of your wedding, and therefore do the inviting of the guests. Your invitation should read:

Mr. and Mrs. George Allen Graham request the honour of your presence at the marriage of their daughter Mary
to
Mr. John Andrews Field
Tuesday, the twelfth of September, at four o'clock
The United Church
Newark, New Jersey

Courtesy Tip

When you use R.s.v.p. on an invitation (Repondez si'l vous plait, meaning "Answer, if you please") only the "R" should be capitalized, just as we would capitalize only the "A" if the English equivalent "Answer, if you please", or "Answer, please", were written.

Cincinnati Reds Get Break By Playing Weak Sisters Along the Atlantic Seaboard

May Build Up Sufficient Lead to Hold Them Against St. Louis Cards

ROOKIE WINS

Reds Given 4½ Game Lead by Niggeling Who Defeated Phillies While Cards Lose

(By Judson Bailey Associated Press Sports Writer).

Everybody is sitting back and waiting for the usual September scramble in the National Baseball League, but there is a fat chance the bunting will be stowed away this month while the contenders are cruising in the east.

The weak-sisters along the seaboard have been a lot softer touch for Cincinnati Reds than for St. Louis Cardinals this season. Therefore on the face of things the Reds have a chance to manufacture a lead in the next two weeks which will withstand any St. Louis squall, when the clubs get back home.

If the Reds can't protect or improve on their 4 1-2 game advantage against such opposition as the Phillies and the Boston Bees, for instance, world series customers might as well shoot their reservations to St. Louis right now and not wait for September.

Phillies Pummeled

Cincinnati pummeled the Phillies 7-0 yesterday while the red-hot Cardinals were cooled off 7-1 by Brooklyn Dodgers. The Reds' victory was their 16th in 17 games with the tail-enders and apparently proved that the well hadn't gone dry while the league-leaders were away.

John Niggeling, the 33-year-old rookie righthander Bill McKechnie picked up about a week ago, pitched seven scattered hits and seven strikeouts in earning his asecond big league triumph within seven days. Besides this Frank McCormick came out of his hitting slump with three singles, one of them with the bases loaded.

Warneke Shelled

In contrast, to Sunkel and Lonnie Warneke were shelled for 14 hits—at least one to every Dodger, who went to bat. Dolph Camilli led the parade with his 20th homer. Luke Hamlin, the hot potato burned, his fast ball past all the St. Louis sluggers and shut them out until the eighth inning to snag his 15th victory.

The game raised the Dodgers into the first division past the New York Giants, who were subdued by Lefty Larry French of Chicago Cubs, 4-3.

Shell 'Oilers' Claim Game By Default

Softball in Belleville sustained a severe setback last night when the first game of the City League final playoffs was claimed by the Shell-Aajmaa "Oilers" by default after the Point Anne "Cementmen" had failed to put in an appearance in an advertised game and at the scheduled time of play. The "Oilers" fielded a team and claimed their pound of flesh, victory as laid down in the rules of softball pertaining to forfeited games.

Facing this unpleasant task, President Clem Bowler ordered an emergency meeting of the City Soft-League executive to be held some time today at which time the actions of the Cementmen will be dealt with and the future of the City League finals determined.

The Oilers, favorites in the series advanced to the finals in a rather unimpressive manner, winning the semi-finals, while the Cement men surprised many by eliminating the Corbys A.C. in the other half of the semi-finals league playoffs to earn the right to meet the Oilers in the City Softball League finals.

The management of the Point Anne team gave no indications of their intentions of not fielding a team for the first game of the league finals last night. The Oilers took the field with Pitcher Johnnie Bawden tossing one pitched ball, following which Umpire George Clapper declared the Shell winners by a 7 to 0 score.

League officials were non-committal following the failing of the Point Anne team to keep their part of the schedule. Officials did say that Point Anne was scheduled to play a third game in the Provincial O.A.S.A. playdowns, which might have prompted their actions, but no pre-game intimation of the Cement men not appearing were in evidence.

Stratford Nationals may win the Intercounty Senior A Baseball title, but it isn't going to be as easy as it looked. Brantford Alerts proved that Saturday, trouncing the Nationals 11-3, behind Sam Reid's four-hit hurling, after losing the first two games of the final series.

Errors robbed Reid of a shutout, Stratford counting unearned runs in the first, third and seventh innings. Brantford showed the victory was no mistake by plastering the Nationals for 14 hits, three runs in the fourth, one in the fifth and seven in a big eighth frame,

New York, Aug. 22 (AP)— Mail box: General Phelan: One of the papers front pages a sensational yarn hinting Henry Armstrong will be "Jim crowed" out of his lightweight title tonight.....Bobby Jones, Pam Barton, the British star, says she became a tops player by memorizing your book on golf.

E. Lawson Page, who plays her best golf when the family ain't looking, figures she started the United States Women's championship with two strikes on her since both hubby and dad are in the cheering section.....The $10,000 guarantee Max Baer demanded to fight Babe Ritchie at Lubback Tex., Sept. 18, was put in the bank Saturday.

Says Paul Menton, Baltimore Evening Sun: "Unless Larry MacPhail decides it will be good promotion to buy Dizzy Dean from the Cubs, it wouldn't be surprising to see Diz drop out of baseball....He's getting too much money for any Major League owner to want him at his present effectiveness."

A Texas League game was protested because the Houston loud speaker blared out the "Beer Barrel Polka' while a Beaumont player was taking his batting stance.....Norm De Weese, the hilly farm hand who showed Morrie Arnovich the size bat to use to lead the N.L. in hitting, is in a terrible batting slump with the Slema (Ala) Clover Leafs..... Joe Anderson of Baton Rouge (La.) walked the first four batters on 16 pitched balls to force in the winning run.

Playoff Situation In Loop Muddled

(By The Canadian Press)

The playoff situation in the Canadian-American Baseball League was muddled further today with only one game separating the three clubs still in the running for the last two berths and Sept. 4, the final day of the long schedule, fast approaching.

A double defeat to Cornwall Bisons yesterday by the league-leading Amsterdam Rugmakers helped complicate matters. While the fourth-berth Bisons were losing two, third-place Rome Colonels also lost one and fifth-place Ogdensburg drew nearer to both by winning their single contest.

JERSEY GIANTS' LEAD NOW CUT TO SLIM MARGIN

Team Handed Double Defeat by the Baltimore Orioles

O'NEILL BANISHED

Buffalo Pilot Ejected from Game for Disputing a Decision

(By The Associated Press)

If any folks in Jersey City, or any other place, thought the Little Giants had a stranglehold on first place in the International League, they'd better hedge their bets and quickly.

The combination of Baltimore handling the Jerseys a double licking last night while Rochester Redwings mauled Buffalo tossed the whole pennant palaver back into the hopper.

Not since the time the Giants took over the lead June 25th has there ever been more than temporary contention for the first row —until now.

The Redwings' 7-4 triumph over the Bisons was their seventh in the last nine days and boiled the Giants' margin down to 1 1-2 games.

Mike Ryba pitched Rochester to last night's victory and gave only eight hits, compared with 12 his team mates collected from Ken Ash. Two of the blows off Ryba were home runs, but these were offset by the effetive clusters the Redwings put together.

O'Neill Banished

Manager Steve O'Neill of the Bisons was banished for an argument about a third strike called by Umpire Chuck Solodare in the ninth.

The sixth place Orioles went on a slugging spree in downing Jersey City, 5-4 and 7-5.

With the battle for first place tightening, the two Canadian clubs kept the circuit balanced with their own red-hot struggle for the cellar.

The last place Toronto Maple Leafs marooned the Montreal Royals, 4-1, on Carl Fischer's six-hit hurling and closed the gap between the clubs to two games. Four of the five runs were unearned.

Armstrong is Favored to Retain Lightweight Title Over Ambers

(By Whitney Martin Associated Sports Writer).

New York, Aug. 22 (AP)—They will crank up the little windmill again tonight, but whether the breeze once more will be stout enough to blow over the opposition is a question which will lure nearly 30,000 fight fans to Yankee stadium to see Henry Armstrong defend his lightweight title against Lou Ambers.

The bout is set for 10 p.m. E.D.T. and is scheduled for 15 rounds. The gross gate loomed between $120,000 and $150,000.

The anticipated heavy turnout is a tribute to the great battle put up by the little fellows in their previous meeting, when a weary Armstrong was awarded the decision and the championship after 15 rounds of furious milling.

Going into that earlier bout Armstrong ruled a 1 to 3 favorite, but he will be no such prohibitive choice tonight. He was quoted at 5 to 7 today.

Hammerin' Hank, victor in 46 straight fights, is up against a new Ambers' tonight. The singing, grinning, jitter-bugging lad from Herkimer invariably wins a return bout against a man who has defeated him and he is confident this will hold true.

If Ambers wins tonight it automatically sets the stage for a November welterweight championship fight between the two. The contract has been signed. Armstrong also holds that crown, and before he put on too much weight he held the featherweight title, being the only man in ring history to be champion of three divisions simultaneously.

THE BUNT FAILED

Alamada of the Brooklyn Dodgers is out at third as a bunt laid down by a teammate failed to advance him in the 10th inning of the drawn-out contest between the Brooklynites and the Boston Bees. The Dodgers lost 4-3 after 14 innings of play.

FAVORED TO WIN

Pam Barton, British links star, blasts her way out of a sand trap on the Wee Burn Country club links at Norton, Conn. Miss Barton is favored to win the American National Women's Golf championship.

ROUGHRIDERS TO BE 'STREAMLINED' FOR THE OPENING

Regina Squad Has Engaged Coaches to Diversify the Attack

FINE PLUNGING TEAM

Regina, Aug. 22 (CP)—Long the strong-arm machine of prairie football, Regina Roughriders are "streamlining" for the Western Interprovincial Union opener Friday night at Edmonton.

The tip-off is found in the coaching department where Leo Schweinfurt, successful coach of high school teams in South Dakota and Minnesota, and Doug Kerr, mentor of McGill University's 1938 Eastern Intercollegiate champions, are assisting head coach Dean Griffing.

Since Griffing came to Regina from Kansas State College in 1936 Riders have been defensive giants. But club officials felt big Dean was not getting the best out of good backfield material. Offensively Riders were about as dangerous as a blind mule. They scored only with an occasional kick.

Diversity Attack

Schweifurt was brought in to coach the backfield, attempt to diversity the attack and to act as bench coach while Griffing attends to his playing chores at snapback. Then Kerr agreed to spend two weeks with Riders in an effort to introduce the lateral pass and hipper-dipper as uncorked down east.

Obviously Riders hope to develop a crowd-pleasing attack and they'll pen up considerably. Nevertheless the plungers probably will be the "pay-off" men. Troy Scholl, a newcomer from Tulsa, Okla., is spoken of as a line-smasher and devastating as Leo Danaher, Kansan who is with Riders for second year.

Two Members Retire

The backfield has lost two 1938 members, Jim Farasey, who has returned to his Cincinnati home, and Bill Brokovski. But Scholl and Mickey MacDonald, Moose Jaw, Sask., boy who starred with University of Toronto the past two years, are replacements de luxe.

Howard (Highpockets) Cleveland and Jim Lander, both former Kansas State stars, ocmplete the regular backfield. Cleveland will be safety man and running back and Lander will do the blocking, throw pases, punt and act as general handyman.

Only Larry Hegan, who has retired and Alec Shelllogg have left the line. Replacing them are Carl Krienke from California and Clarence (Toar) Springstein, 230-pound youngster who helped Regina Dales win the unofficial Dominion junior title last Autumn.

Max Ambrozich of the Salida (Colo.) Mutos team, hurled three no-hit games in ten games . . . and Roger Dobbins of Marinette (Mich.) gave the striker-outers something to shoot at by whiffing nine consecutive batters on 28 pitched balls.

New York, Aug. 21 (AP)—Alice Marble resumes her night club warbling 'n a Beverly Hills spot Oct. 3. . . . Smart old Frankie Frisch said way last spring not to sell those Cardinals short.

Mike Jacobs has so many fights on the fire, he has had to hire his eighth press agent. . . . Fight manager Eddie Mead is feuding with Jack Dempsey who gave Lou Ambers private lessons.

NAPANEE WINS FIRST GAME OF PLAY-OFFS 7-5

Gibbards Play Errorless Ball to Win Over Picton

PITCHERS' BATTLE

Picton Had Chance in 8th When McQuade Tripled but Was Stranded

Napanee, Aug. 22—Shaking off a number one jinx that had hoodooed them for six losses over the season, Napanee Gibbards turned on the league-leading Picton team and pulled out a 7 to 5 win here last night in the first clash in the best-out-of-five series for the Bay of Quinte intermediate "A" baseball championship.

It was a hard fought game throughout, but the winners came through with a better defensive display and bunched their hits more effectively than the "Ghost Town" nine.

Spratt threw practically unbeatable ball over the lost five and two-third innings, only twenty-one men facing him and one getting beyond first, Napanee sewed up the game in the fifth when they blasted Dainard for five base hits to make three runs and set up a lead that was never threatened. Picton, sensing a rally in the eighth when McQuaid led off with a triple watched the runner held to third as the local infield pegged the first two outs. Wright, pinch-hitting for Evans, hit safely to tally McQuaid, but Dewitt, batting for Church, rapped out to first unassisted.

Dainard struck out five, and Spratt four, and the latter issued the only pass of the game.

The teams meet in Picton Wednesday for the second game.

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

with
Ken J. Colling

The failure of the Point Anne "Cementmen" to put in an appearance for the initial City Softball League final play-off game at the Falts last night was most uncalled for. We quite appreciate the fact the "Cementmen" were scheduled to play an important third and deciding O.A.S.A. play-off versus Deseronto tonight, but all "Buddy" Gaulin and Company had to do was to contact any member of the City Softball executive and request a postponement of last night's City League play-off and we feel assured such a request would have been granted. As it was the "Cementmen" merely ignored the City League and just forgot about the whole thing with the result that the Shell "Oilers" are rightfully claiming their pound of flesh and the game. The Point Anne softball moguls apparently forgot for the moment that it is through the Belleville Softball League they obtained so much good practice throughout the season, preparing them annually for the O.A.S.A. playdowns. That further action will be taken was not announced by President Clem Bower who is vacationing at present.

St. Louis Sporting News Farrington observes that Lou Gehrig is getting $227.00 per day for sitting on the Yankee bench and that it was Bill Dickey and not Branch Rickey who was the guy made Don Padgett stop, look and glisten as a catcher. It was at St. Petersburg, Fla. last spring Dickey had heard about Padgett's aversion to quitting the outfield and becoming a receiver....."Listen, son," Dickey told Padgett. "If they (meaning the Cardinal management) want you to catch—you go ahead and catch. You'll get big dough, if you make a go of it; you'll last longer because they don't pay so much attention to a catcher slowing up and you've got more chance to get a job as coach or manager later on".....Padgett heeded the advice and is coming along nicely.

Sam Breadon's biggest job when the trading deadline arrived was shaking off a $65,000 offer from Brooklyn for Padgett—as an outfielder, not catcher.. The Dodgers took Almada instead—for 25 grand.

Despite the fact the R.C.A.F. Flyers had three wins over the local Bay of Quinte entry as against two for Belleville, Bud Wilkins and his merry band of willow wielders feel they have a sight edge on the Airmen on the attack. In every game of the six played between these two teams, except the third and sixth, we outhit Coach Laut's aggregation and we feel that eventually our hitting strength will tell and that will be when the playoffs start this evening," predicted Skipper Bud Wilkins after practice last night. The locals held a light fielding practice, with a full hour of batting in preparation for this evening's game at the Fair Grounds

Although we imagine their team batting average is somewhat lower than .275, the official figures for some of the Belleville ballsters, who swing the timber in the Bay of Quinte League, is quite impressive and should perhaps be shown to pitchers Dole and Webb of the Air Force tonight. In 15 of the 16 league games played Russ "Ripper" Collins, the local second baseman, is pounding the pellet at a .525 clip. Doc Empson is hitting an even .500 and Lefty Weeks a cool .382 with Bill McQuaid and Mel Little getting in the coveted circle with identical averages of .333. Weeks and Collins have not been hitting to form of late, but may snap out of it during the series with the Air Force. Skipper Bud Wilkins used 23 players throughout the entire season, five of whom saw service on the mound.

Cy Young's Citizen juniors pry off the junior O.A.S.A. play-off lid at Oshawa this evening with the return game scheduled to be played in Belleville on Thursday. No doubt Steve Hook will get the local pitching assignment in the Motor City in an effort to win the initial game of the series.

Burleigh Grimes, the old National league pitcher, says signal-stealing is largely to blame for the many beanings in major league baseball. He states that the batter gets set for one type of pitch, and if the tip is wrong he is caught flat-footed with no chance to duck. However, the signal-stealing will go on just the same, for it is one trick in baseball that has won many ball games.

There's an old baseball saying that goes something like—"the time to win ball games is when they count most" and apparently Walt Gerow has been reading up his baseball encyclopedia of late because yesterday the Gibbards beat Picton 7 to 5 in the first game of Picton-Napanee Quinte loop playoffs. During the playing season the Gibbards lost six straight to Roly Rorke and company, but yesterday when the chips were down, Stan Spratt was the hero, besting Friday Dainard in a well-pitched tussle. Napanee played errorless ball behind Spratt while Picton booted the ball for three miscues, but Spratt was invincible in the clutches. After a period in retirement Ran Card returned to the Napanee lineup as an outfielder, which materially strengthened the Gibbards. Of course the Gerow-led nine practically had to win yesterday as the next two games are in Picton, but at that Walt's crowd now enjoy a slight edge, as they beat Dainard, Picton's ace hurler.

Yes, Mr. Terry—Brooklyn is still in the National League. As a matter of fact the 'Daffiness Boys' are in the first division and leading the Giants today, as the result of cooling off the heretofore red hot Cardinals 7-1 yesterday. The St. Louis loss saw the Reds get a breather inasmuch as Cincinnati beat the Phillies 7-0 and gained a full game on the Gashouse Gang. It was the third loss the Cardinals had sustained in their last 23 games. Luke Hamlin, former Toronto moundsman, was credited with stopping the onrushing Cards, scattering eight hits masterly. The Cubs edged out the Giants 4-3 at the Polo Grounds, the loss dropping the Terrymen down into the second division behind the despised Brooklyn Dodgers and a merry time is being had by all the National League clubs, except posibly the poor Phillies.

Sport Spice: Signs of Autumn—the Argos and Balmy Beach out to football practice and Eddie Schrieder talking junior football in Belleville.....They do say Harvey (Busher) Jackson, former starry Leaf rightwinger, is in the best condition of his career.....Tonight's Armstrong-Ambers fight has the boys really guessing—Armstrong is the favorite, while Ambers has the betters jittery, simply because he has the knack of never having lost a return bout, yet.....They expect a crowd of 30,000 on hand and the fight will definitely be broadcast over the trunk Canadian stations (plug for Charlie Meagher coming up).....The O.B.A. draws are out and we'll have something to say about them tomorrow The annual Belleville playgrounds track and field meet will be held today, after having been postponed from last Friday.

The Stars Say—

For Wednesday, August 23

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

VERY LIVELY conditions may be forecast from this day's astral influences, although these seem to carry certain doubtful or conflicting aspects. In business, in all pertaining to writings, publicity, promotions, law and speculation, there are fortunate auguries, but these are accompanied by omens of duplicity, subtlety or intrigues, imperiling profitable issues. There also may be need for sudden changing of plans in order to evade such subterfuge. With precaution and practical programs all should be well.

Those whose birthday it is may be prepared for a very lively year, with much of benefit in relation to writings, publishing, contracts, law or speculative enterprises, although these are beset by hidden dangers. Collusion, fraud, snares or other treacheries demand keen vigilance and aggressive action. New matters should flourish through quick and practical attack.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Captain Fury"

"Captain Fury," the picture now playing at the McCarthy Theatre, the story of a dictator who ruled in the days when Australia was but a struggling British colony, of the heroic efforts of an escaped convict who thought more of the country that sent him to jail than of himself, of his loves and daring recklessness in freeing the new continent settlers from the tyrannic arm of a small despot, makes just about as thrilling screen fare as has been seen here for some time.

Handsome Brian Aherne teams with the rugged Victor McLaglen in a story that fairly jumps from the screen at you with its thrilling moments, its dramatic denouements and a love thread that winds its way through the entire story with just the right amount of romance.

McLaglen is superb in the role of "Blackie" convict pal of Aherne. His light-fingered antics at times are uproarious, to say the least, while at the close his inability to control the urge to take that which is not his, proves his near undoing.

June Lang, brilliant young movie star, is cast in the romantic role with Aherne, and her dramatic ability as shown in the sterner moments of the picture marks her as one of the screen's promising young actresses.

You will see the arrival of a convict ship from England and the cruel treatment meted out to them by their "station" owners. You will see the downtrodden settlers of the vast districts that comprise Australia, and you will see Aherne's gallantly successful attempt to free them from the chains of tyranny.

"Captain Fury" is a picture that teems with dramatic action, hard-riding, deadly shooting and a general theme in which is incorporated sufficient comedy and love interest to make it the superbly balanced picture it is.

Don't miss this epic of the screen that brings you something different in motion-picture entertainment.

AT THE BELLE

"The Gorilla"

The Ritz Brothers have turned detective and you'll have the time of your life watching these three half-wit Hawkshaws tracking down a weird man-killing beast in "The Gorilla," the 20th Century-Fox screen version of the famous stage hit, which is now on the Belle screen.

The action takes place in a house that is a maze of sliding panels. The time is something close to midnight—in the midst of a raging thunderstorm. The host, Lionel Atwill, has just received a note from "the Gorilla" threatening him with murder at midnight!

Into this scene wander those super-detectives, Harrigan, Mulligan and Garrity—the Ritzes, of course—and from then on anything can happen—and it does!

It would be unfair to spoil the fun-and-fright feast that awaits you by revealing the story of the "cuillarious" developments that ensue when the Ritzes begin stalking the beast, which has been described as "so ugly that when snakes get drunk they see it!"

The Ritz Brothers are ably aided and abetted in this merry mystery by Anita Louise, as Atwill's niece; Patsy Kelly as a panicky maid-of-all work; Bela Calleia, as a skulking stranger; Edward Norris as Anita's sweetheart; and Wally Vernon, as a roving sailor.

Now, run down to the Belle. Here's grand entertainment. Don't miss it. It will scare you silly—with laughter.

"The Kid From Texas"

Dennis O'Keefe warbles hill-billy songs with Buddy Ebsen, pays whirlwind courtship to Florence Rice, invades the Long Island socialite polo set and becomes the sensation of a Wild West show in his fastest-moving role to date in "The Kid From Texas" second of the sports dramas in which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is featuring him and which is the companion feature.

The story deals with a Texas cowboy who learns to play polo through the newsreels, invades Long Island, and after adventures, mostly comic, finds his destiny in a Wild West show and his happiness with the society girl who casts her lot with him in the new west.

S. Sylvan Simon directed, with a cast including Anthony Allan, Jessie Ralph, Virginia Dale, Robert Wilcox, Jack Carson, Helen Lynd, J. M. Kerrigan and Tully Marshall.

Thrills include fast polo action with famous players and horses on famous fields, a thrilling dash after a speeding car, a rescue on horseback in the heat of a polo contest and the excitement of a Wild West show.

The popular Belle News of the Day will be exhibited on the same program.

1 KILLED, 20 INJURED AT AIRCRAFT CARRIER LAUNCHING

A woman was killed and 20 people were injured by hurtling baulks of timber when Britain's new 23,000-ton aircraft carrier, H.M.S. Formidable, broke away half-an-hour before Lady Wood, wife of the air minister, was to launch her at Belfast, and launched herself. The casualties were caused by the huge cradle, which did not move with the ship, but was rent to pieces and flung in all directions. Lady Wood and Sir Kingsley Wood, with Viscount Craigavon, the premier of Northern Ireland, had just reached the launching platform when the mishap occurred. H.M.S. Formidable is shown entering the water after its sensational journey down the slipways. In foreground can be seen shattered ruins of the cradle

"All the World May Stare"

AMY CAMPBELL

It was the glamorous night of their rediscovery. They had been interrupted in the garden and so were dancing again, two people who invited adoring eyes for their youth and meant just for each other.

He was vowing this time it must not be too beautiful to last with this woman who had been his wife.

He found himself mistaken in the thought that he had remembered how vivid, how utterly desirable she could be. Her gown, shimmering in the old mysterious way, reminded him of his loneliness the last empty year for just the intimacies of her belongings.

There was still that look of intercepted flight in her eyes. No one, nothing, had taken that away. It was so peculiarly hers he wanted it to stay forever.

At this instant, in a way that had once been most marked between them, their thoughts met contrariwise.

"This time you must clip my wings," she said with veiled rapture.

He hesitated. It was still difficult "You said they were powerless before." He spoke as if it were something he must now have only dreamed.

"I go over and over the things I said. How can you still care?"

"How could I not care? You are unconquerable in my heart." He appeared to be viewing mentally something over and quite apart from them both.

He was recalled by the bafflement in her eyes and remembered instantly how she used to say she never really knew what was back of his eyes when he looked away like that. Again there was her old demand in the glance she gave him, saying so plainly that she must know. It had the old effect of producing helpless silence on his part. This would not do.

He looked down at her in tender, anxious concern.

"Out in the garden you said..." she hesitated as if savoring something he might, under pressure, repeat.

There was a slight groping silence on his part.

"Say it again" she pleaded. This was very great condesension, from her. His very amazement made him powerless now to break a silence so seemingly imposed by some cautious angel.

"Oh now I know," she said, a gentleness breaking over the rebellion in her eyes as she lokoed up into his. "You always told in little continual ways. The big moments were very rare. Very waited for."

"Always wait, Tawny Lily," he begged, his voice rough with rushing tenderness. "So much can only be lived and looked."

People were watching them intently. It was the first time they had met since they parted. He saw that she was swiftly, cleverly, appraising what she read in eyes everywhere as they moved effortlessly through the crowds. Finally she said, "They think they are seeing an attempt to play with you again."

" 'All the world may share—' " he quoted with contagious sufficiency.

The misted meaning in her eyes made him forget to go on. Instantly, thrillingly, she took him off guard by continuing what he supposed she would have forgotten.

" 'You and I are bound together so!' "

There was suddenly a look of appalled surrender in her eyes before incredibly, her precious, proud head bowed swiftly on his shoulder. He was unprepared for the tears crowding under her lashes, as he guarded this, his great moment of pride, and hers of such complete surrender, by guiding her towards the garden again.

Secure in the dimness blurred with white cherry blossoms, she said:

"I'll never do that again. I've shocked even myself. Now there will be nothing piquant about me for you ever any more."

"It's wonderful to have you say things you don't mean when you shouldn't mean them," he told her gravely.

"I had to tell you."

"And I had to know!" He was thinking that she had always really been for him. She confirmed this with her next words.

"Now I have clipped my own wings, and gladly, for you. Always I've been a little afraid of the restlessness in them anyway."

He drew a branch of white blossoms down around her shoulders and then startled with the effect, looked at her intently.

"There will always be a bough waiting for the sweetest wild wings in the world. Only remember your way home, my dear!"

"And you would star it with flowers for me! I can see that in your eyes. Even after saying I was already too tired and frail to be windblown or streamline. That I should be yours."

With one hand he held the blossoms closer about them and with the other drew a sprig across her eyes for a moment to veil the sweetness there while he made a secret petition that it might always stay.

"There was one white petal fell on your hair as you kissed me. It is still there" she told him with a queer little sort of reverence."

"They would all fall on you if you were to kiss me—again," he promised.

"Red hair needs exquisite care. Let's prolong the process by letting the years make it white."

Little Benny's Note Book

My sister Gladdis and Harvey came over for bridge last night, and pop and Harvey started to talk about the condition of the world, both claiming they couldn't make heads or tales of it, and ma and Gladdis started to talk about the ladies in the bridge club, both claiming they could read them like a book, and ma said, Do you know, Gladdis, I think this room needs a little rearranging.

That's what I've been thinking ever since the last time you rearranged it, ony I hesitated to say so because I thought I might be taking out of turn, Gaddis said, and ma said, Now I think that's just lovely, we'll compare notes this minute while the 2 men are here to do any necesserry little shoving and lifting.

Hay, what 2 men? pop said, and Harvey said, I thought I came here for a little effortless bridge.

First and foremost the bookcase should be at more of an angle, ma said, and Gaddis said, Yes, and the big picture shoud be more to one side, nothing is worse than a studied geometrica effect.

I think the rug should be turned up with an effect of unstudied carelessness at 2 corners at least, what do you say, Harvey? pop said, and Harvey said, Splendid, nothing is worse than unrelieved monotony, unless perhaps it's monotonous relief. What would you say to the 3 cornered chair on top of the table instead of shoved in the corner like a naughty child? he said.

Swell, you should of been a decorater, I'm glad you're here, it wouldn't be difficult to break a couple of window panes for a sort of Bohemian effect, pop said, and ma said, Now Willyum, are you ever going to set up the bridge table?

With alacrity and releif, pop said. Wich he did.

FROM DISTANT PLACES

From returns made to the Department by its officers, it is noted that one hundred and seventy cars, hailing from sixteen countries other than the United States, were entered through Canada's frontier ports under 60-day touring permits during the month of June. Six of these visitors from distant lands came from the Philippine Islands, and one from China, Straits Settlements, Dutch West Indies, Porto Rico, Brazil and Venezuela. Fifty-four cars came from Hawaii, 37 from Mexico, 27 from Panama, 14 from Cuba, 12 from the United Kingdom, 7 from Alaska, 5 from France and 2 from Newfoundland. In addition to these thirty-day visitors, 12 cars received permits to remain in Canada for a period up to six months. These were issued as follows: cars from the United Kingdom 6, Panama 3, Hawaii 2, Australia 1.—National Revenue Review.

A GOOD SPORT

It is a fine thing to have, or to cultivate, an imperturbable spirit in playing the game. Winning or losing a game is less important than the manner in which one loses or wins. It is a valuable index to character.

A short time ago we read of a young clergyman who was watching two girl friends of his playing tennis. He was "interested" in both of them and was turning things over in his mind. One was good looking and the other was what is called "homely". The good looker won easily and left the court with a look of contempt for her opponent. The loser walked off with a wide grin on her face. That decided the matter for the young minister. He felt that the girl who could take a beating with good grace was made of the stuff which could measure up to life's difficulties — and he married her.

A good "sport" is likely to be a "good sport" in everyday life. — Stratford Beacon-Herald.

WALL ST.

New York, Aug. 22—(AP)— A shift in the foreign news touched off a rally in the stock market today that lifted leaders 1 to more than 3 points at the start.

The list got off to a ragged start but large-scale buying quickly turned the tide upward. The turnover in the first hour comprised many blocks of 1,000 to 3,500 shares. There was a subsequent slow-down, however, and peak prices were reduced a third in many cases near the fourth hour.

Germany's announcement of a non-aggression pact with Russia brought considerable initial confusion.

Prominent stocks on the forward brush were U.S. Steel, Bethlehem, Chrysler, General Motors, Westinghouse, Dupont, Johns-Manville, Great Northern, Texas Corp., Union Carbide, Loft, Celanese, Kennecott, U.S. Rubber, Montgomery Ward and Western Union.

Of major fractions in the Canadian group were Dome, Hiram Walker and Lake Shore. Distillers, however, inched ahead. Fair demand appeared for Dominion 4s in the bond market.

IRON SKIRTING TORN OFF BRIDGE

Motor Car Crashes Into Side of Bridge Attempting to Pass Car

Attempting to pass another automobile on the Sucker Creek bridge, two miles south of Marysville on Highway No. 2, a motor car driven by William Nixon, Timmins, Ont., crashed the side of the bridge and tore the entire iron skirting completely off shortly before noon today.

Mr. Nixon was proceeding southerly at the time and apparently misjudged his highway distances as he attempted to pass another motor car on the bridge. The entire left side of Mr. Nixon's car was shorn off, wheels and doors, as the vehicle crashed into the east ditch a complete mass of wreckage. Four passengers in the car miraculously escaped with only minor bruises and skin abrasions.

Motorcycle Patrolman Sam Ervine investigated and later stated was at a loss to understand how the occupants of the car escaped without more serious injury and perhaps death. "The entire framework of the steel bridge across Sucker Creek was left in a tangled mass of steel while the motor car was the worst wrecked vehicle I have seen this season," was the investigating officer's remarks after investigation.

The new charge was one of the "several" which District Attorney William Campbell said would follow the $5,548, 384 indictment, the largest criminal tax case on government records.

One official in the Balkans said "Poland might just as well lay down her arms" immediately, adding that "at least she can escape physical annihilation in that manner". Complete shifts in Europe's opposing camps were seen as a likelihood.

Some observers looked for an ultimatum from Hitler to Poland either next Sunday in a speech at Tannenberg, or at the Nuremberg Nazi Party conference which opens September 2.

Asks Parliament Be Called

The Daily Herald (Labor), urging that the Cabinet now recall Parliament from vacation, called Russia's action "A bigger betrayal of peace and of European freedom even than Munich".

The Star (Liberal) also commented on the possibility that the projected non-aggression pact was a device to bring Britain and France "into line". The Star added:

"The delays and wobblings of our government must be held partly responsible for the new situation. . . . . Yet such an excuse cannot palliate the apparent duplicity of the secret negotiations with Berlin which must have been taking place side by side with the peace front talks in Moscow."

Russian Isolationism

The Evening Standard said "This change marks the final step towards a policy of Soviet Isolation".

"Russia's Isolationism, if that be the true meaning of this announcement, will lighten Britain's burden in the Far East by splitting Japan from the Axis while increasing the weight of our commitments to the poles", it added.

Arthur Greenwood, acting leader of the Opposition, who discussed the situation with Mr. Chamberlain last night, issued a statement today appealing for calm and firmness as the only way to maintain peace.

"It is not yet too late for sane counsels to prevail", he said.

Talks To Continue.

Paris, Aug. 22 (AP)—French Foreign Office officials announced today the Anglo-Franco-Russian military conversations in Moscow would continue despite the announcement of the German-Russian non-aggression pact negotiations.

The announcement preceded a cabinet meeting which is to put the finishing touches to a chain of military decrees enabling France's armed forces to meet any eventuality. The superior war council met briefly.

Many military precautions, routine in time of crisis, already have been taken. Number of men under arms remained a war ministry secret.

In connection with the Berlin-Moscow development, an official spokesman said Russia may have found that it suited her plans to help Germany shock the British and French, thereby making both Paris and London willing to grant any Russian demands in exchange for conclusion of the tripower pact.

"A non-aggression pact as such may mean little or nothing," he added.

Japan Aroused

Tokyo, Aug. 22.—(CP-Havas)— Authoritative sources tonight said the Japanese Cabinet today decided a "fundamental" revision" of Japanese policy in European affairs was necessary as a result of the proposed German-Soviet Non-Aggression Pact.

These sources said the Foreign Office plan for strengthening the Anti-Comintern Pact would bo scrapped as a result of this new development.

Nichi Nichi was the only Japanese newspaper to comment on the impending agreement between Berlin and Moscow today and it warned that the new pact "might well constitute a violation of the Anti-Comintern Pact signed by Germany, Italy and Japan".

Warsaw Unruffled

Warsaw, Aug. 22. — (CP-Havas) —Joseph Lipski, Polish Ambassador to Germany, conferred with Foreign Minister Joseph Beck here today on the implications of the impending German-Russian Non-Aggression Treaty.

While the news came as a surprise, political quarters maintained that it proved what they had been saying all along—that the Soviet Union has no desire to meddle in European affairs at this time, due to its own domestic situation and its far Eastern troubles, and that it hopes to see the Communist International profit some day from a European war.

President Trolls Down Gulf Stream

Aboard U.S.S. Lanz at sea, Aug. 22—(AP)—President Roosevelt decided today to try what he thought was an innovation of fishing—trolling down the Gulf Stream from Canadian waters to the Virginia capes.

The President told reporter that so far as he knew, no one ever had followed for fishing purposes the warm current which sweeps up from the south. He planned to troll both from the cruiser Tuscaloosa and small whale boats, if the weather permitted.

Mr. Roosevet said he had no idea what kind of fish he might catch—if any.

"The GLASS SLIPPER"

by MIGNON G. EBERHART

Eight or ten men were in the dining room; they were talking, and one of them was writing on a report blank, and another held shorthand tablets in his hand. They paid no attention to Rue's entrance although all of them saw her; she stood, waiting, and Guy beside her waited also, while a tall thin man with pale blue eyes as remote as ice and deep lines like scars in his cheeks (Lieutenant Angel, he proved to be) finished what he had to say to a brother detective. The face of Oliver Miller appeared in what was to Rue a blur of faces. Then Lieutenant Angel looked directly at him and said: "All right, Mrs. Hatterick. Sit down. Where's that statement, Murphy?"

The man with the shorthand tablet flipped back a few pages and began to read rapidly and in a sing-song voice while Rue sat at her own table and listened. Guy made himself extremely comfortable in a chair near her and nodded to Lieutenant Angel and spoke to him y name, and glanced recognizingly at one or two other men sitting and standing about them. Rue realized with a start that the man Murphy was reading a statement that Brule must have made. She listened.

" '....and I was reached at the hospital by the message from Mrs. Hatterick. I hurried home and met Doctor Crittenden at the doorstep; he had got the message too. But the girl was dead, and we could do nothing. I called the police because it was obviously a violent death. Question: You knew it was murder? Answer—' "

Lieutenant Angel stirred and murmured: "Just read the answers."

"Yes sir. 'Answer: I didn't know. My wife said the girl came unexpectedly and asked for her and was shown up to her room. When Miss Garder entered she seemed confused and said she'd had a cocktail. Mrs. Hatterick thought the cocktail had affected her and ordered tea and gave the girl a cup of tea. She was trying to make her swallow the tea when the girl became unconscious and died. She telephoned at once for me—' "

"That'll do, Murphy. You subscribe to all that, Mrs. Hatterick?"

"Yes." How small and faint her voice sounded; she must speak in a more assured, less frightened way.

"I understand Julie Garder was a friend of yours."

"We trained as nurses together."

"Yes, I know all about that. She was one of the nurses on the case when the first Mrs. Hatterick died. You were the night nurse."

Angel leaned forward. "Mrs. Hatterick, your husband says, and you agree, that you told him Julie Garder was confused and said she'd had a cocktail. What else did she say?"

Rue swallowed hard, and Guy said nothing. Rue replied: "She was confused; she talked a little in a rambling way; nothing that made sense."

"What'd she talk of?"

"She—she repeated my name and her own; she mumbled something about a cocktain—pink; something about coming to see me—oh, there was nothing sensible and clear."

"Had you invited her to come to see you? I mean to come today specifically? Had you an engagement with her?"

"No."

"You were on sufficiently friendly terms for her to call without an invitation?"

"Yes, certainly."

"Did she come here often?"

"No."

"Why not?"

"Julie was busy." He seemed to wait for her to amplify it, but something very quiet about Guy seemed to warn her to say no more than was necessary.

"Then you and Miss Garder were still on good terms?"

"Yes, certainly."

"Can you think of anything else she said?"

Guy stirred. "She's told you everything she knows. It's been a shock for Mrs. Hatterick. She's doing well to let you question her at all. Later, if you find the girl's been murdered, Mrs. Hatterick can be questioned more at length."

The lieutenant looked at Guy, and Guy looked blandly back at him.

"All right, Mrs. Hatterick, I appreciate your willingness to be of help," said Angel. "But there's one or two points that I'd like to know more about right now. Whatever the autopsy proves, we'd like to know how she got in the house and how long she was here before she was announced. Your butler says he didn't let her in. That he found her waiting in the drawing room, having evidently been admitted to the house some time previous. Who let her into the house and when?"

"I don't know. I didn't know she was in the house. I heard nothing."

"You didn't see her downstairs?"

"No."

"You didn't know she was in the house at all?"

"No."

"Think carefully, Mrs. Hatterick. Did she take anything while in your room—any capsule or pill?"

"No. I'm sure of that," said Rue and was instantly aware of Guy's disapproval.

The lines in Angel's thin long face deepened.

"There's just one more question." He leaned back a little in his chair, holding Rue's gaze with his chill blue own; all at once the room held only silence and watchfulness. This was the real question; this was the sum, the crux of the whole inquiry.

Guy shared Rue's intuition, for he was suddenly as deadly still as a crouching animal. And the question came:

"Tell me this, Mrs. Hatterick. What did Julie Garder know of the death of the first Mrs. Hatterick?"

Guy got to his feet.

"She doesn't need to reply to that, Lieutenant. She doesn't——"

"Let the lady speak, Cole. How about it, Mrs. Hatterick?"

Guy said: "She doesn't have to reply; but I will for her. The girl told her absolutely nothing, of course. She told her nothing of the facts of Crystal Hatterick's death."

"Do you subscribe to that, Mrs. Hatterick?"

"I——"

Guy answered again. "Look here, Angel; you've had your answer. Tell him, Rue, that I answered correctly. It may as well go on the record."

"Y-yes," faltered Rue, confused by Guy's demand.

A telephone rang in the hall; Angel, disbelief in his cold eyes and another question on his tongue, stopped to listen. They heard the murmur of a voice from the telephone, which was in the recess near the dining-room door. It was one of the detectives; he said yes, and no, and after a pause: "You don't say! ....Okay!"

He appeared at the doorway, eyes seeking Angel's. "It's the doc," he said. "Says it's poison all right. Lethal quantity of some synthetic poison, he doesn't know what yet. Probably a barbituric acid derivative. Can't tell till he runs some more tests. Says it looks to him like murder all right. But he says there's an awfully funny thing. The girl's hands have turned green: bright green on the——"

"Cary! That'll do! All right, Cole, you and Mrs. Hatterick can go. That's all except hold yourself ready for further inquiry. Now then, Cary. Her hands——. Close that door."

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

The door closed behind them. Someone had hung up the telephone. Rue turned, bewildered, to Guy.

"What do they mean? Julie's hands?"

His eyes met her own; they were wide, blue, dewy-looking. "I don't know what they meant," he said slowly.

The door of the music room opened, and they both looked that way. Alicia and Brule appeared in the doorway, outlined clearly against the lighted long room behind them. Brule apparently had opened the door, and as he did so both appeared to pause for another word. They didn't note the presence of Guy Cole and of Rue in the hall. For Alicia turned suddenly to face Brule, said something low and put her head in an affectionate gesture against Brule's shoulder. It was a small gesture, barely sketched, so brief was it. But there was the most definite air of accustomedness about it.

Guy cleared his throat abruptly.

"Come along, Rue," he said. "Green hands—want to know what Brule thinks."

Andy was waiting in the library. Andy, who had said he loved her. She followed Guy toward the library, and the couple at the door of the music room saw them and came toward them.

"Green hands!" said Brule. "Did you say green?"

Guy shrugged his bulging shoulders. "That's what the fellow said. Then Angel shushed him and put us out and had the door closed so we couldn't hear any more. Green hands."

"But that isn't so," said Brule. "When I looked at the girl there was nothing like that." He turned to Andy. "Did you see anything of the kind?"

Andy shook his head.

"No. It sounds—fantastic. Is there any poison, Brule, that could have such an effect?"

"If an internal poison had the effect of color on the skin after death, it wouldn't confine itself to the hands; the whole circulatory system would have been affected: and that certainly not after death, but before. Anyway...." Brule walked over to the mantel and stood with his back to it. "I'm inclined to think it's something the fellows in the laboratory have done—accidently, like as not; they are no more immune to mistakes than the rest of us. It does sound fantastic. But there are chemicals...." He left it at that.

And as always, they accepted Brule's word as final.

Alicia rose and went to the telephone on the long desk.

"How much longer will it be, do you suppose?" she said to Brule. "I had promised the Sidneys——"

A maid came into the room with a tray and was followed by the upstairs girl with another; the trays contained coffee and sandwiches and both girls were pale, with excited eyes, and cast rapid, curious glances about them.

Brule poured coffee, and Andy brought a cup of it to Rue. Alicia was talking over the telephone, and Steven had asked Brule some question and Brule was replying. Andy spoke in a low voice, inaudible to the others.

"I've got to see you alone, Rue," he said. His fingers touched her own as she took the cup. His eyes warmed. "I love you," he whispered. "Remember...."

No one could possibly have heard. He turned away. It was several moments before Rue became conscious of Madge's oddly fixed and thoughtful regard. She looked at Madge and Madge stared back at her, steadily and inimically. But she couldn't have heard what Andy said. And suppose she had, what of it? If there was no affection between Rue and Brule, there could, at least, be honesty. But nevertheless that cold stare in Madge's dark eyes made her uneasy.

They could all hear Alicia's silken excuses over the telephone. She put it down at last. "She'll never believe me again," she observed to no one but so they could all hear it. "I felt perfectly well when I left her house this afternoon—just before I came here—and Winifred Sidney knows it."

It was said a little too carefully. Brule glanced at her quickly, and Andy said:

"Oh, you came straight on here from Sidneys'?"

Alicia nodded. "I arrived just at the time the thing occurred. I came to see Madge. She hadn't got home yet, and as I settled down to wait for her I heard something like a scream. So naturally I went to see what had happened. The door to Rue's room was open. Rue was bending over the nurse. I thought at first, of course, she'd only fainted."

Andy looked at Rue, and Rue put down her cup. "Yes, I—I think I screamed. And Alicia came in just after Julie died. But I didn't know Alicia was in the house——"

Alicia continued quite as if Rue had not spoken at all.

"I trust this interest in my doings doesn't mean that I am suspected of having anything to do with the death of a girl I never even saw before."

Steven looked up.

"You've seen her, Alicia," he said mildly. "Lots of times, when Crystal was sick."

The jet-and-white line of Alicia's eyelids rose and fell once rapidly.

"Oh yes, I suppose I saw her then. But I wouldn't have remembered the girl. I assure you I didn't put poison in her tea, if that's what you mean. Let me have some coffee, Brule."

"I didn't mean that, Alicia," said Steven apologetically. "You know it wasn't in my thoughts at all."

"A synthetic poison," said Brule thoughtfully, pouring coffee for Alicia. "That can mean anything."

Andy said: "You think yourself that it's murder. Is that right, Brule?"

"I don't know what to think," said Brule. "But I'd like to know exactly who wrote those letters to the police. I want to know because I'd like to ask why. Because whoever wrote them must have had some reason for believing Crystal was murdered. Therefore if we can discover what that reason was we might get a long way toward getting this thing satisfactorily settled."

A detective appeared in the doorway and said they were ready now to take general statements from each person in the house, and they would then call it a day, and Miss Pelham and Crittenden could go home.

The general statements were taken then and there.

Steven said briefly that he'd been working all day in the studio; he didn't know that Julie Garder had arrived at all; the first he knew of the murder was when Gross came to tell him; and that he knew nothing at all about it. Mrs. Hatterick and Miss Pelham had been in the room when he reached it. The body had been on the rug before the hearth; a tea tray was on a small table. Yes, he remembered the dead girl but only vaguely. No, he knew of no reason for her suicide or murder.

Alicia's statement was even briefer; she'd just reached the house and was waiting downstairs for Madge to return from school when she'd heard a scream upstairs; she went upstairs and found Mrs. Hatterick bending over her friend (Guy cleared his throat just there, and Alicia flashed a look at him but amended it quickly). "I mean, Julie Gander." She said nothing that openly cast suspicion upon Rue, however.

Andy, next, said he'd come at once when Gross told him over the telephone what had happened. The girl was dead when he and Dr. Hatterick looked at her. Dr. Hatterick had called the police.

"Did you notice anything unusual about the body?"

"Nothing," said Andy. "Except that it seemed a case of violent death. So far as we knew the girl was in good health."

The detective's eyes retreated.

"Miss Madge Hetterick?" he said.

Madge, as if she had been waiting her turn, said instantly,

"I am Madge Hatterick. And I want to tell you something."

She stood up as if to speak with more authority; her face seemed suddenly mature and very determined with its square jaws and bright dark eyes. She pushed her dark hair back and looked straight at the detective in a poised manner that belied her dark blue school uniform with its demure lines. Brule looked startled; he went to her and said to the detective:

"My daughter is barely fifteen. She knows nothing of this, and I would appreciate it if you—question her as little as possible. I cannot imagine her testimony being of any possible value; she's only a child—"

"All right, all right, Doctor," said the detective, watching Madge. "Let the young lady speak. She seems to have something on her chest."

"But you don't understand," said Brule. "She's really a child, she knows nothing of——" He looked at Guy, who strolled nearer.

"Now, now, Madge," said Guy. "Don't let yourself get hysterical."

"I'll say what I have to say," said Madge; "you can't stop me. I may e young, but I have eyes, and there've been things happening in this house. Things you ought to know——"

Brule was white. He put one hand on Madge's shoulder and held it so tightly that Madge winced but stared defiantly back at him, his living counterpart. Except—hadn't Steven said?—she was like Crystal inside.

"You're in love with her," she said to Brule in a furious voice. "You're in love with Rue. You can't see how wicked and cruel she is. Who killed my mother? Tell the police who murdered my mother. Tell them——"

"Madge!"

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

"I won't listen to you. I'll tell them. I'll tell them who was alone with my mother before she died. I'll tell them everything I know," Madge continued.

Guy was for the first time concerned. "Stop that, Madge. You don't know what you're saying. You're a silly child. Look at me, Madge, I've known you since you were a baby. I'm your godfather; have I ever been unkind to you, or have I ever lied to you? Answer me. Have I? No, look at me, don't look at Rue or the detective or anyone else. Look at me."

He pushed Brule aside and put one hand under Madge's chin. Unwillingly she met his eyes. Guy smiled.

"There now, my dear. Listen to me; when you say anything you must be sure it is the truth; it must be something you could prove if you have to. You can't accuse anyone of anything at all just because you don't like that person. You—"

"All right, Cole, all right. I've got to have a statement. Now then Miss Hatterick, go right on talking. What do you know about this? Did you know Miss Garder?"

Madge hesitated. Guy took her hand and linked her arm around his own in a sympathetic way. Madge started to speak, stopped, said sullenly: "Yes. She was my mother's nurse. One of them. The other was Rue."

"What time did you arrive home this afternoon?"

"About five-thirty. I was late; we were rehearsing at school."

"In fact, the police were here when you arrived?"

"Yes."

"That's enough," said Brule. "Isn't it? I mean, it's evident that my daughter knows nothing of it. And she—she is under age; I mean you can't accept——"

Guy interrupted quickly. "That's a good girl, Madge. Anything that's the truth, remember." He looked at the detective. "You haven't a statement from me yet. I was here before the police. Doctor Hatterick telephoned to me at once. I came in the side door and——"

"What side door?"

"The door into Steven's studio; I crossed through the back yard from my own house."

"Was that door unlocked?" asked the detective.

Guy blinked. "I—why, yes, as a matter of fact, it was."

The detective looked at Brule.

" Is that door always unlocked?"

"Why, I don't know. The room belongs really to my brother-in-law, Steven Hendrie. How about it, Steve?"

Steven, looking ill and tired and disheveled, still in his sweater with his hair rumpled, looked up wearily and said he didn't know.

"It's usually locked at night. I don't know whether it was unlocked today or not."

The detective looked thoughtful.

"There's a back way into the place. Where were you, Mr. Hendrie when the girl died?"

"In my studio, I suppose. I'd been there all day. Certainly no one came into the house that way; I would have known it."

"Mr. Cole, here, came in that way."

"That was afterward," said Steven. "I'd gone upstairs."

"Then while you were out of the room anyone could have left the house?"

Steven's face brightened a little. "Yes. Yes, certainly. Yes, of course."

"And anyone could have got in the same way," said the detective. "However....Well, I guess that's all for the moment, Doctor Hatterick."

Steven broke the silence the detective's departure left.

"Does that mean they think it really is murder?" he asked Guy.

"They're darn certain of it," said Guy and sighed and drew his thin, colorless eyebrows together. "One good thing; they're not making any arrest tonight; that'll give us time to see where we stand. They want to be pretty sure of themselves before they make it hot for a man of your position, Brule. So far they've been pretty decent. Didn't even separate you as witnesses; didn't threaten arrest. Only room in the house they've really set off and searched is Rue's room; they practically looted the medicine cupboard in your bathroom, Rue."

Her room! They were looking for poison, of course, in the medicine chest; it wasn't a nice thought. She reviewed rapidly in her mind the little stock of cold preventives and headache tablets that must have been in the cupboard; nothing that wasn't in every medicine cupboard and, as a matter of fact, an extremely small and scant supply. Except—what had she done with her nurse's bag containing a large supply of sedatives, left over from her nursing equipment—large and almost untouched and including almost every sedative procurable at the supply druggists'? What had she done with it. She couldn't remember, and Guy must have seen alarmed recollection in her eyes, for he said:

"I'll see you tomorrow Rue, and talk things over. I'll see you all. But don't worry too much," he added with a cheeriness that rang false in Rue's ears. 'I've seen funny breaks before now when everything seemed to be sewed up tight. I gather you want to retain me, Brule?"

"By all means!"

"Okay. Now then, Alicia...."

Alicia rose and stood with her arm around Madge's shoulders. "I'm going home," she said. "They can't stop me."

"Please don't go, Alicia. Stay with me," cried Madge. "Please Alicia."

Something twisted in Rue's heart; she'd have been so unutterly glad if Madge had turned to her. But Alicia was looking down into the child's adoring face, smiling a little sadly.

"I can't stay, dear; your father's here, and Steven. You needn't be afraid."

"I'm not afraid," said Madge, "but I—I just want you to stay; please, Alicia. You can sleep in my room, and I'll sleep on the couch in my dressing room. Father, ask her to stay with me."

Alicia looked at Brule, and Brule looked at Alicia.: Alicia's glance went almost instantly away again, but Brule's remained steady and impenetrable.

Brule said, addressing Madge: "I'm sure she'll stay if you want her."

And Alicia looked at Madge, hesitated, smiled and shrugged lightly. "If you need me," sh eagreed. The manner of her agreement hinted that she, Alicia, was always at the beck and call of any of the Hattericks; the family friend, the present help in time of trouble. There was an odd little smile on Brule's lips; Madge said quickly: "Come with me, Alicia, I'll show you——"

It was in the little confusion of Madge and Alicia leaving the room, and of Brule being called to the dining room with Guy bouncing along beside him, and of Steven wearily and quietly disappearing somewhere, that Andy was for a moment alone with Rue. He had been upstairs to get his coat and came back into the room, hat in his hand and coat over his arm.

"Rue," he said, and put down his coat and hat and came to her. "You're alone? Lord, what a mess! Listen, Rue, tell me quickly; I thought I'd never get to see you alone. Exactly what did happen? Nobody can hear. Brule and Guy are talking to the police, and nobody's in the hall. What did Julie tell you? What happened?"

Rue leaned her head wearily on the back of the chair and looked up at him. It seemed years since the previous night—when he had taken her in his arms and told her he loved her and had loved her for a long time. He was remembering it too; his eyes sought into her own deeply; he took her hand with a boyish, anxious gesture and said, low:

"Poor darling. Oh, my sweet, why didn't you go with me last night? We'd have been far away by this time where none of this—this horrible sordid affair coud slo much as touch the hem of your skirt. I was afraid it would be bad; but I never thought of anything as bad as this. Rue——"

"Don't, Andy, I'm so—tired."

"I know, darling." He glanced at the door. "Tell me about it; hurry, Rue. What did Julie know?"

"I don't know, Andy. She—what she said was confused, as if she were drunk. I thought she was drunk. She tried to tell me something but kept saying she mustn't, that she couldn't trust her memory, that it was something I knew too. But I don't—at least I can't think, I can't remember. It was something she expeced me to know but I—I don't, Andy. Who could have killed Crystal?"

"Do you think Julie knew?"

"I—I'm afraid so," said Rue, almost whispering. "It's—there's no other reason for her death. Julie wasn't the kind to commit suicide, she had too much sense."

Andy pulled up a footstool and sat down near her. "Now, Rue, tell me exactly what she said: words, phrases, everything. Quick."

She told him, wearily, but in detail. It struck Rue as rather curious that when she'd finished he said almost what Brule had said.

"Be sure, Rue. don't tell anyone what she said. You haven't, have you? I mean Julie was murdered. We can't escape facts. And if anyone has reason to believe that you know what Julie knew——"

"That's what Brule said. No, I didn't tell the police. I——"

"Brule!" said Andy. The queerest look came into his face; he said after a moment, "You mean you told Brule all this?"

"Why, yes. Yes, of course."

"He—asked you?"

"Yes, naturally. Why not?"

Andy stared at the floor. "No reason," he said finally "Only—be careful, Rue. If Julie was murdered ot keep her from telling anything she knew, you——Oh, Rue!" He turned swiftly and impulsively and took her hands and held them to his face, caressing them as one would a child. "If I could only be with you. All the time. Every moment. You—you must be protected, Rue. You are so—so sweet," said Andy, and kissed her fingers.

It was just then that Brule came to the door. They heard his footsteps, and Andy released her hands but was still sitting at her feet when Brule entered.

He gave them a quick look; it was a lok that revealed nothing. He said quietly: "Your taxi's waiting, Andy. See you in the morning."

"Right," said Andy and rose. "Goodnight, Rue. 'Night Brule."

DESPITE BRITISH WARNING HITLER STANDS FIRM

WAR MEASURES ACT EFFECTIVE SAYS PREMIER

Act Gives Government Emergency Powers for Defence, Mr. King Says in Statement

PARTY HEADS INFORMED

Mr. King Will Call Parliament if Efforts to Preserve Peace Likely to Fail

Ottawa, Aug. 23—(CP)—Should it become apparent efforts to preserve the peace of Europe are likely to fail "parliament will be summoned immediately, Prime Minister Mackenzie King declared in a statement issued today. But for the presence on the statutes of the War Measures Act of 1914 parliament would be summoned at once to enact such a measure which gives the government extraordinary powers in the event of war "real or apprehended," the Prime Minister said.

The War Measures Act, properly titled "an act to confer certain powers upon the Governor-in-Council in the event of war, invasion or insurrection," was passed by parliament after the outbreak of war in 1914 and was never repealed.

While indicating the government would take advantage of powers conferred under this act the Prime Minister declared the belief of the government that "there is nothing in the difficulties that have arisen between Germany and Poland which would justify the use of force involving a European, war with all its tragic consequences."

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Ocean weather! Voyaging on the Atlantic in September has somewhat more spice than in the summer months. While cyclonic gales will have increased in frequency along the ship lanes to Europe, the chances are greater for fair weather than for foul. In the southern latitudes the hurricane season has reached its peak, but even at that the average for September is only three such storms, and in some years there are none in September. These storms may occur anywhere over the entire est Indian region. Many of them proceed to northern waters, invading the steamship routes. Fog will be less frequent from New England to Newfoundland, but there will be an increase north of the Azores.

JOHN R. COBB SETS NEW RECORD OF 368.85 M.P.H.

London Fur Broker in His 24-Cylinder "Railton Red Lion" Smashes All Land Speed Marks

NEW KILOMETRE MARK

Travelled So Fast Machine Overshot North Stopping Point by a Half Mile

Bonneville Salt Flats, Utah, Aug. 23—(AP)—A new world land speed record of 368.85 miles per hour — better than six miles a minute — was set today by John R. Cobb, London fur broker, in his 24-cylinder "Railton Red Lion."

Cobb, who shot his turtle-shaped car over the first lap at the phenomenal speed of 370.75 miles per hour, struck an average on two runs over the measured mile far above the previous mark of 357.5 m.p.h. held by another Briton, Capt. George E. T. Eyston.

Cobb also smashed Eyston's kilometre record with a speed of 369.74. Eyston's kilometre record was 357.34.

Export of Essential War Materials To Europe Prohibited

London, Aug. 23 (CP)—The Board of Trade tonight issued an order prohibiting the export of essential war materials from Great Britain.

The order followed a decision taken at yesterday's Cabinet meeting.

WHEAT JUMPS 5 CENTS

Roosevelt Drops Plans for Holiday

Aboard U.S.S. Lang at sea, Aug. 23—(AP)—Gravely concerned over the European crisis, President Roosevelt abandoned plans today for exploration of the Gulf Stream on a fishing trip and ordered the cruisers Tuscaloosa and Lang to speed to Sandy Hook, New Jersey.

(In White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., State Secretary Cordell Hull, saying he felt it necessary to "keep abreast of fast-changing international conditions" broke off today a two-weeks holiday and returned to Washington).

VON RIBBENTROP IN MOSCOW

Moscow, Aug. 23—Adolf Hitler's Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop, landed here this afternoon by special plane to conclude a non-aggression treaty with Soviet Russia.

Hitler's special pilot, Hansi Baur, was at the helm of the four-motored "Renzmark" Condor plane which carried Von Ribbentrop and his entourage.

U. S. Plans to Rush Nationals Home If War Breaks Out in Europe

Washington, Aug. 23—(AP)—Amid renewed discussions of neutrality policy for the United States, plans were being perfected today to rush home thousands of American Nationals if war breaks out in Europe.

Merchant ships will be relied upon to transport the majority of Americans from danger zones, officials explained, but they added that more than a score of naval vessels in the Atlantic squadron could help if necessary.

The subject was among those considered late yesterday at a meeting of representatives from five United States government departments, who canvassed various neutrality problems without disclosing and decisions.

There was a widespread belief in the capital that President Roosevelt would call congress into a special session in event of a major war. This led to speculation that the non-aggression talks between Germany and Russia might force the United State government to re-examine its proposals for revising the four-year-old neutrality law.

Count Jerzy Potocki, the Polish Ambassador, told reporters yesterday that announcement of the non-aggression talks between Germany and the Soviets had not changed Poland's determination to resist Nazi demands.

His country will fight to defend her independence.

"The latest developments," Potocki said, "have proved the accuracy of the Polish attitude and of Poland's opposition to the idea of permitting Russian troops to cross Poland's territory."

A state department report at the start of the year showed 2,569 Americans living in Poland.

President Roosevelt is expected to reach Washington Friday after his holiday cruise up the New England and Canadian coasts.

Arthur Greiser
Marjan Chodacki
Karl Burckhardt

Once again the attention of the world shifts to central Europe, where German claims on Danzig and reported border clashes with the Polish sets the stage for what may well be another Nazi attempt at conquest. The principal players in the tense international drama are Germany's Fuehrer, Adolf Hitler, himself; Poland's premier and "strong man." Josef Beck, and Professor Karl Burchhardt, Danzig representative in the Leage of Nations, who has conferred with both sides. The Polish commissioner general to Danzig, Marian Chodacki, has returned to Warsaw where he is believed to have received new instructions on negotiations with Arthur Grieser, Danzig senate president.

ITALY SPEEDS UP PREPARATIONS TO ASSIST THE AXIS

Hail With Delight "The Collapse of Anglo-French Encirclement"

CALL MORE TROOPS

Rome, Aug. 23—(AP)— Italy speeded up her military preparations today while Fascist newspapers exulted over the projected German-Russian non-aggression pact as marking "the collapse of Anglo-French encirclement."

The press termed the Russian-German decision a major victory for the Rome-Berlin axis, but many Italians expressed the opinion it might precipitate war.

At the same time, a law was published giving the government drastic power to requisition merchant vessels for war use. Other preparations to make the country's armed forces ready for quick action went ahead.

FRANCE, BRITAIN READY FOR WAR, VIEW IN PARIS

Story From Berlin is That Germans Plan to Occupy Strip of Corridor

CRISIS MOST SERIOUS

Paris, Aug. 23—(AP)— France was reported today to have dispatched 'strong' instructions to her Ambassadors in Europe while thousands of reservists, taking up front posts, raised estimates of the number of men under arms to more than 1,000,000.

Contents of the diplomatic notes were not disclosed by government sources which told of their transmission, but it was believed generally they reasserted France and Great Britain were prepared to go to war, if Poland saw fit to resist a German attack.

London Crowds Calm, Comment 'We're Ready' 'We've Given Our Word'

'It's Up to Us Now, but We Have Been in Worse Holes Than This. Remember Spring of 1918,' is Feeling—People More Silent, Theatres Jammed

London, Aug. 23—(CP)— While cabinet ministers troop to Whitehall and Europe's armies are put on the alert, London's millions cast a wary eye to the clear blue skies.

Bank clerk and bus driver, pub owner and the printer's devil, farmer and housewife, all seem to have the same idea: Britain has been betrayed by Russia, left to face an expanding Germany with France and Poland as her major allies.

"It's awful, but we're ready," is a popular comment.

Through all the conversations runs a vein of humor—references to "old comrade Hitler" abound — which cannot hide the feeling that: "It's up to us now, but we have been in worse holes than this. Remember the spring of 1918."

The speaker was a bus driver. As he spoke he glanced at the passengers. Usually the buses and subway trains in from the suburbs are loud with conversation. There was none. The passengers just read their papers.

A Kent farmer on his way home from market let his horses stand idle at a traffic light, wiped his seamed face and said: "There isn't anything we can do now but wait. We gave our word to the Poles; we don't go back on our word, we don't."

The usual "crisis crowd" jammed narrow Downing Street yesterday and today. It was, as always, good natured. Idlers, shoppers from the west end and solid "city" business men stood shoulder to shoulder talked in low tones and chuckled when newspapermen boiled out of the door in a rush for telephones.

Last night the movies and the theatres were jammed. Pictures of the French and British military missions arriving at Moscow were greeted with silence. Two days ago when the pictures were shown there was scattered applause.

Newspapers are snapped up as soon as they appear on the streets. The crowds that hurry out of Charing Cross Station exhausted about what's in them. They seem to think talking won't do any good.

Except for the silence—even the crowds that teemed Leicester Square and Piccadilly last night were quiet—London seems to have taken the events of the last 48 hours in stride.

Nursemaids still wheel the babies in Hyde Park a stone's throw from the anti-aircraft batteries.

POLISH WOMEN DIGGING TRENCHES

Brief Frontier Clash Between Polish and German Troops Reported

Warsaw, Aug. 23—(AP)—The Polish telegraph agency today reported a brief frontier clash between Polish and German soldiers at Kluezno, facing Breslau, north of Silesia.

This report said three German soldiers in full uniform crossed the frontier in pursuit of German deserters. Entering a windmill 150 yards from the frontier they were seen by Polish soldiers, who ordered them to halt.

Shots were exchanged, with the Germans starting the shooting, according to the Polish report, which said the Germans escaped and one apparently was wounded.

Other reports from the frontier said Polish peasants are busily engaged in assisting in the construction of trenches and defence fortifications. In Kepno, Posnania Province, all women, old and young, dug trenches.

POLICE COMBING OTTAWA VALLEY

Two Prisoners at Campbell's Bay Slug Turnkey and Escape

Campbell's Bay, Que., Aug. 23—(CP)—Provincial police combed the Upper Ottawa River valley today for two prisoners who manhandled two jailers and escaped from the county jail here last night.

Taken from their cells for a short time by Turnkey Aleric O'Connor, Robert Smith and Walter Piche, suddenly slugged the Turnkey and slammed him against a wall. Before he could recover, they dashed through a door. C. A. Merleau, jail governor, attempted to head the fugitives off, but they struck him over the eye and escaped. Neither O'Connor nor Merleau was seriously hurt.

Smith was brought here a few days ago from Burwash, the Ontario prison farm, to face robbery charges, while Piche was convicted of two counts of robbery to Bryson, Que., near here, and was awaiting sentence on Aug. 30.

Fuehrer Demands Return of Danzig, Polish Corridor

Also Demands Re-Arrangement of Polish-German Relations Much Along Same Lines of the Protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia — Determined to Settle Dispute With Poland in One or Two Ways

IF WAR, POLAND PARTITIONED

British Guarantees to Poland Do Not Count Hitler is Reported to Have Told Sir N. Henderson, British Ambassador to Germany, When He Informed Hitler Britain Intended to Keep Her Pledge to Poland

Berlin, Aug. 23—(AP)—Reliable sources declared this afternoon that Fuehrer Hitler told Sir Nevile Henderson, British Ambassador, Germany could not modify her demands or vital rights because of the British guarantee to Poland.

These demands and "vital rights," it is understood, were:—

1. Unconditional return of Danzig to the Reich.
2. Return of those sections of Poland which were once German, namely, Pommerellen, Pomorze and Polish Upper Silesia.
3. A re-arrangement of Polish-German relations much along the lines of the protectorate of Bohemia and Moravia.

Hitler, according to advices considered reliable, is determined to settle the dispute with Poland in one or two ways.

Either Poland yields to these demands peacefully, in which case there will be no bloodshed;

Or she fights, in which case Germany will see to it that a new partition of Poland occurs.

These terms, it is understood, have been communicated during the past 24 hours not only to the British government but by special couriers to most governments of Europe.

Berlin, Aug. 23—(AP)—Adolf Hitler has sent a detailed memorandum on Germany's uncompromising position regarding Poland to Prime Minister Chamberlain, usually well informed sources said today.

Mr. Chamberlain's reply was taken to the Nazi leader at his Berchtesgaden chalet today by the British Ambassador to Germany, Sir Nevile Henderson.

Hitler was believed to have told Mr. Chamberlain that Germany insisted on having Danzig and a full settlement with Poland.

Hitler was further believed to have declared that if Poland resisted the German claims and took to arms it would mean partition of Poland.

London Papers Reflect Cabinet's Resolve to Stand by Its Pledge

By PAT USSHER
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 23—(CP Cable) — Editorial comment in Great Britain's morning papers today reflected the cabinet's firm resolve to stand by its pledge to Poland in the present European crisis.

The Daily Herald (Labor) expressed the fear that the proposed Russo-German pact may alter the complexion of international affairs seriously but added "one thing remains unaltered. That is the firm pledge to come to the support of Poland, in the event of an attack upon her, given by Great Britain and France."

The Times (Independent) said the "freedom of Europe is a matter of deep concern to this country....where her pledge has been given she will of course redeem it if the call should come.

"Great Britain has taken her stand and she will not now draw back."

The Manchester Guardian (Liberal) puzzled by the projected Moscow-Berlin pact said that if the Russian action is confirmed "would it not amount to precisely that abandonment of principle which Russians have hitherto made their chief indictment of the other?"

The Daily Sketch (Independent) said "we gave an unconditional pledge to Poland....nothing that has happened since has weakened the validity of the pledge or our determination to keep it, or our means of keeping it."

The Nottingham Journal (Liberal) was confident parliament would give the government the powers it requested "nor can there be any reason to fear they will be employed for other than emergency purposes."

The Glasgow Herald (Independent) asserted: "We are accepting what may be almost an immediate challenge to war. But in doing so we are taking the only action which may be possible to preserve the peace of Europe."

The Birmingham Post (Conservative) said 'our 'obligations to Poland' stand whether Russia does or does not come into the peace front."

The Edinburgh Scotsman (Conservative) commented that even if Britain and France reached an agreement with Russia "it would be worse than valueless since no faith can now be reposed in Russian cooperation."

Awarding of First Prize in Art Show To Negro Woman Starts Major Row

Sedalia, Mo., Aug. 23—(AP)— A college professor gave first prize in the state fair art show to a Negro woman's "Primitive" and started a major row in Missouri art circles.

The prize went to 'Farm Life' by Mrs. Percy Lewis, who painted on muslin because she had no canvas and used big dabs of aluminum shellac as well as oils.

Carefully trained Kansas City and St. Louis artists who lost out to Mrs. Lewis grumbled that her work was "primitive art."

"Exactly" replied Austin Faricy, Professor of Esthetics at Stephens College for Women, Columbia, Mo. "It is the finest piece of primitive art I have ever seen."

As visitors were admitted to the gallery crowds gathered in front of Mrs. Lewis' picture. And how they did argue! The museum is doing the best business at the fair.

The lack of perspective of Mrs. Lewis' picture is startling. Cats and dogs roaming the barnyard are all the same size. It appears she painted from a high tower, for there are only two inches of sky.

The scene shows a log cabin, a Negro couple, a hunter and his dog, a manure pile and pitchfork, livestock and a Negro boy and girl drinking at a well.

GREEN FEED BLOAT TAKES HEAVY TOLL

Recent heavy rains have been responsible for considerable livestock loss through the Belleville and Prince Edward County areas, it was reported in the city today.

The rains have been followed by a record growth of a new alfalfa crop which new fodder has resulted in the death of many animals through bloat caused by overeating the green food. Two and three sows have been lost by some owners, while at one farm in Prince Edward County four were lost early this week, according to a statement given a local hide dealer.

"The alfalfa has grown so fast that it literally 'jumped' out of the ground", stated one Prince Edward resident. "Farmers had better be careful and not let animals into it until it dries out a little."

Variety of Interests to Appeal To Crowds at Belleville Fair

Keen Competition in Exhibits and High-Quality Program Provide Appeal

SCIENCE AT EXHIBITION

In a few days Belleville district will be marking another milestone in the success of its annual fair. Fairs have had a long and noble record in this city (and town before it became a city) and in the district, such dating almost as early as the settlements were made by the pioneers. Today the Belleville exhibition is a worthy descendant of the fairs which were held hereabouts generations ago.

On Tuesday, August 29th., the gates will open for a three-day fair. Through the gates that day will pass the people of the city of the fine countryside in which Belleville is set for entertainment, sightseeing and education in the progress which agriculture and industry have been making. The winners of prizes at the annual exhibition will be subject to the keenest competition for the fair draws from a wide district, fine exhibits, smart competition, crowds and programs uniting to make an irresistible appeal to both exhibitors and the people of this section.

To take Belleville Fair out of the city and rural calendar would be a loss which could not be repaired. The stalwart backers of the exhibition throughout the year are proof of that.

Young Farmers

One of the appeals of the fair is the attention it gives to the young farmers in its junior department. This has been a feature for some years and has now become a fixture of the fair. Nothing cheers the agriculturist more than the enthusiasm and zeal of the boys' and girls' of the farming section whose practical knowledge in farming is a surprise to those who do not live on the farm. These young people show that the rural population of the future is solidly trained and thoroughly fitted for the primary task of a country, providing with foodstuffs not only the population of a country but also the outside world.

Entomology Appeals

More and more attention is being paid to entomology in its relationship to the farm. Belleville fortunately is the seat of the Dominion Laboratory of Entomology and people hereabouts have first hand knowledge of the modern science of parasitic control in agriculture. The Department of Agriculture of the Dominion will therefore have an insect exhibit at the fair.

A special exhibit from the Dominion Experimental Farm at Ottawa is to be shown at the fair. Farmers and city-dwellers never miss opportunities to see these exhibits.

In the branches of livestock the 1939 exhibition will, it is confidently expected, be the best the patrons of the fair have ever seen. In this section of the exhibits will be found one of the secrets of the success of agriculture in the Bay of Quinte district. Livestock have played and are playing no small part in that development and progress which are observed in Eastern Ontario.

Dairy Interests

In dairying is another example of the vitality and importance of agriculture and its position in the financial and social fabric which is known as eastern Ontario. The wealth which cheese, butter and milk mean to this section hundreds of thousands of dollars needs only to be mentioned. There will be an important dairy exhibit naturally at the fair.

The fine arts, ladies' work, floriculture, domestic science will attract hundreds of patrons to the exhibition.

The entertainment program is wide in its range and appeal. It should be one of the greatest factors making for a successful exhibition.

Air Raid Precautions On 'War Basis' Tonight

London, Aug. 23.—(CP)—The Home Office took steps today to place air raid precautions on a "war basis", effective tonight.

Arrangements were made for immediate extinguishing of London's street lights "at any time it is considered necessary".

Birmingham's A.R.P. department issued notices calling upon householders to erect their air raid shelters, darken their windows and see their gas masks are clean and ready for immediate use if the occasion should arise.

Bata Co. Begins Production Of Shoes at Frankford Plant

50 Young Workers Turn Out First Bata Shoes in Canada

KEY-MEN ON JOB

The thin end of the huge production wedge planned by the Bata Shoe Company of Czecho-Slovakia for its Canadian plant at Franford, Ontario, made itself known yesterday when the first production of the Canadian plant got under way.

Twenty-five young men and the same number of young women engaged from Frankford and its vicinity swung into production activity under the keen eyes of expert Czech keymen in one of the buildings of the old paper plant in which machinery had been installed.

The inaugural activities of the company insofar as the production is concerned are more of an instructional nature than for actual production quantity. The fifty em-employees who today are standing at machines and benches are working under the instruction of Czech keymen with a view to actually acquaint them with the workings and system of manufacture than for the output of shoes.

The plant in which machinery has been installed and in which the first Bata shoes ever made in Canada are now being produced, is said to be of a temporary nature, although an authoritative source confirmed this morning, the building will likely be maintained as one of the main production centres of the plant. This plant will likely be running at full capacity by the end of this month.

In the meantime extensive alterations are being made to other buildings of the old paper mill now owned by the company while plans for the main production plants of the Canadian unit are being drawn up.

Sites have already been made and test-holes to ascertain the nature of the terrain on which the new buildings will be erected have been sunk.

Finds Bottle Thrown in Lake 19 Months Ago

Thrown into Lake Ontario off Point Petre in December, 1937, by Nelson Moore, resident of that district of Prince Edward County, a bottle containing a note was discovered on July 30, exactly nineteen months later, on the shore at Oswego, N.Y.

The bottle contained a note written by Moore, enclosing his address and the date, the bottle was thrown into the lake.

Richard Rollin, Oswego, while on a picnic with a group of friends, discovered the bottle on the beach, smashed it, and found the enclosed note. He wrote to Moore as requested, stating the date the bottle was found.

CITY WORKMEN NOW FILLING-IN OLD RACEWAY

Visions of Roadway Along East Bank of Moira River Entertained

PLENTY OF FILL

Visions of a roadway along the east bank of the Moira River, that will extend from an entrance near the Belvidere Hotel and emerge on Front Street near the Smith Hardware Company's buildings were entertained by residents of that vicinity and Coleman Street as city workmen progressed at the filling-in of the old Walker Foundry raceway that parrallels the Front Street buildings between these two points.

Dank undergrowth, broken masonry and other unsightly debris, that at present constitutes the raceway is being filled in with gravel and stone taken by workmen from the adjacent river bed. Handicapped by existing conditions the men are forced to load wheelbarrows and convey the fill along planks laid down from the river bed to the raceway. As progress is made, however, and as conditions permit, trucks will be used. It was stated this morning.

Obliterate View

The fill will be placed approximately thirty feet from the rear of the Front Street buildings, and will completely obliterate the unsightly view that the raceway now affords. Sewage that formerly emptied into the raceway, has been diverted by laterals which convey it to a main sewage pipe.

The roadway, which may or may not materialize, will afford a pleasant view from both the rear of the Front Street buildings as well as to residents across the river. It will facilitate entrance and egress to city parking lots at various points, and will also provide a detour to heavy trucks and other vehicles desirous of avoiding the heavy Front Street traffic.

Plenty of Fill

Hundreds of tons of gravel forming an island in the river at the rear of the Hotel Belvidere, will provide plenty of material for not only filling in the raceway but also for road construction. The natural "island" that emerges some five feet above the centre of the river was formed by spring flood and ice-movements it is stated.

Residents of the city living in this vicinity have already passed many laudatory comments regarding the activities of Aldemen Andrew Kennedy, chairman of the city Public Works Department, and Burton Jennings. Chairman of Regional Planning, also the city council in the efforts to clean up what was stated by one citizen "to be a black spot on our fair city".

G. ROWE, ORONO, DROWNS IN LAKE NEAR PRESQU'ILE

Went to Rescue of Companion Who Fell in Lake From Dinghy

BODY NOT FOUND

When he went to the rescue of his friend and chum, who had fallen overboard from a sailing dinghy, 19-year-old George Rowe, of Orono, was drowned in the rough waters of Lake Ontario off Presqu'Ile Point yesterday afternoon. Despite the efforts of searchers the body had not been recovered at noon today.

In company with four other young men, all members of the Presqu'Ile orchestra band, Rowe was sailing in a dinghy on Lake Ontario during a heavy squall yesterday. In some manner Edgar Vandewalker, Oshawa musician, fell overboard, but in so doing his foot became tangled in the mainsail rope and he was being dragged behind the boat in the water. Rowe seeing the plight of his companion, jumped into the water to assist him, but those left on board were unable to halt the progress of the craft and it continued towards shore dragging the helpless Vandewalker behind and leaving Rowe some three-quarters of a mile in the lake. Later those in the craft succeeded in hauling Vandewalker into the boat without serious results.

Went to Assistance

Kenneth Hann, another member of the party then went to the assistance of Rowe, but the waves were rolling at such a height that Hann's efforts proved futile and he swam to shore where he fell exhausted. The boat finally beached itself near Presqu'Ile.

Provincial Constables Mennie, Cobourg, and Carruthers, Campbellford, in company with County Constable Atkinson of Brighton, organized a search party and dragged the waters of Lake Ontario in an effort to locate Rowe's body, but with no avail. The sea was rolling waves fully three feet high making recovery efforts practically impossible. The search continued today, Constable Atkinson stated at noon.

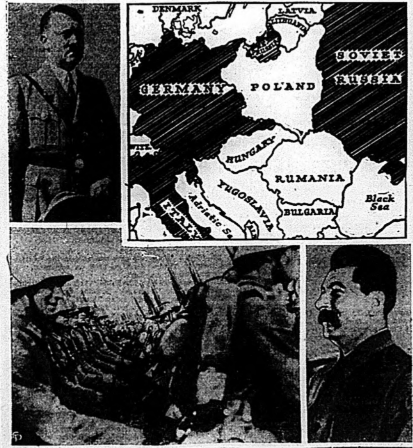
Roads Out of Germany Jammed by Foreigners

Berlin, Aug. 23.—(AP)— All avenues of travel out of Germany were jammed today with French and British citizens and other foreigners fleeing for fear of war.

No seats in airplanes could be obtained after early morning. Trains ran throughout the day with corridors filled.

British and French citizens were advised by their local diplomatic officials to leave Germany. The French step followed upon a direct order transmitted from Paris to the French Ambassador, Robert Coulondre.

HITLER AND STALIN TO SIGN ANTI-AGGRESSION PACT



A bomb shell was thrown into European power-politics with the announcement that Germany and Russia were preparing to sign an anti-aggression pact, which would leave Poland encircled by Nazis and their allies, as shown on the ABOVE map, on what many observers feel to be the eve of a settlement of the critical Danzig question. Coming during Soviet-Franco-Anglo military talks now taking place in Moscow, the announcement of an anti-aggression pact between the Soviets and Nazis is reported to have come as a complete surprise to England and France as well as to Germany's partners of the anti-Communist pact, especially Japan, which considers Russia her enemy in the struggle for the mastery of the east. In the meantime German troops are reported to be continuing to pour into Slovakia to take up

HESPLER LABORER CONFESSES CRIME OF SLAYING PAIR

Reginald White, 35, Held on Nominal Charge of Vagrancy at Kitchener

STATEMENT TAKEN

Alleged by Police Man Refused Recommendation by Aged Farmer

Kitchener, Ont., Aug. 23—(CP)—Authorities here awaited word from Attorney-General Gordon Conant at Toronto today regarding future action against Reginald White, held on a tentative vagrancy charge in Wellington County jail as the allegedly confessed killer of John Milroy, 78, and his sister, Annie Milroy, 73.

Inspector W. C. Lougheed of Ontario Provincial Police credited with solving the double killing less than three days after it was perpetrated, went to Toronto last night to confer with the Attorney-General.

Crown Attorney W. P. Clement of Kitchener announced that White, a 35-year-old Hespeler laborer, had admitted responsibility for the deaths of the aged pair Saturday in their farm home at Branchton, four miles south of Galt. The Milroys were found brutally beaten to death on the parlor floor, apparently by an axe found nearby.

Refused Recommendation

Police Chief William Hodgson of Kitchener, one of many district authorities who joined with provincial officers in the widespread investigation, said White confessed he attacked the farmer when Milroy refused to give him a recommendation for employment, and then turned on Miss Milroy when she went to her brother's aid.

White is a member of a family that came here from the Upper Ottawa Valley, where they engaged in trapping. He was employed by Milroy about seven years ago, later working in a Hespeler factory and for his father in a scrap metal business. Single, he has two brothers and one sister.

Whether an attempt will be made to claim the $5,000 reward offered by the provincial government in the event of White's conviction could not be learned.

Things moved quickly when Inspector Lougheed turned to White's trail late Monday night. With other officers, he dashed to Hespeler to make the arrest.

Late into the following morning White was questioned. After further grilling at the county jail, the vagrancy charge was laid and he was remanded summarily for a week.

Offers No Comment

Inspector Lougheed would not comment when asked if it had been established that White was the man who visited the Milroys on Saturday morning a week before the killings and represented himself as a man named "Devine," another former employee of the Milroys.

"I remember Reginald White very well," said Mrs. William Oliver, neighbor of the Milroys, who discovered the crime Saturday. "He left the Milroys' employ under somewhat peculiar circumstances, but I do not wish to comment on that at the moment. White worked for John and Annie all of one summer, but I cannot remember the year."

It was reported police were looking for an Indian seen in the district of the Milroy farm the day of the double killing, although it was not determined whether the authorities believed more than one man was implicated in the crime.

Hundreds of district residents attended funeral services for the pair yesterday at a Galt funeral home.

"The pain is that they who offend others so little in their lifetime should suffer such grievous offence in their death," said Rev. J. D. Smart of the simple pair.

EDUCATING CHILD COSTS $5,000

Educationist Claims Parents of Unborn Child Should Post Bond

Geneva Park, Lake Couchiching, Ont., Aug. 23—(CP)—Young couples seeking a marriage licence should be required to deposit a $5,000 bond as proof of their financial ability to educate a child, Dr. C. E. Phillips of the Ontario College of Education, Toronto, said today.

Discussing public education before the Canadian Institute on Economics and Politics, Dr. Phillips said their should be a way of insuring the education of an unborn child just as many adults provide for their futures through life insurance.

"If a child is to have an average education, it will cost $750," he said. "Education to the end of high school costs $1,050. A university degree costs some $3,200 to obtain. And the total cost to the parents until a child is self-supporting is probably $5,000."

"Assured of an adequate education," Dr. Phillips remarked, "a really smart 'minus-one-year-old' would consider he had an even chance in life, that is, after we had cleared up another little matter of $7,000,000,000 in public debt. You wouldn't expect him to assume that of his own volition."

Dr. Phillips said it is no wonder that "the birth rate is high where the intelligence is low." As things are, he remarked, "it is a wonder that anyone with brains consents to be born at all."

CRISIS AT HAND

With the German-Russian non-aggression agreements, now revealed, events are moving swiftly in Europe in the latest crisis which has disturbed the world. Chancellor Hitler has informed Prime Minister Chamberlain that Germany will have Danzig and will settle her differences with Poland. Tactics of the past few days on the part of the inspired German press and on the part of Hitler are typical German tactics as revealed one year ago at the time of the Czechoslovakian crisis.

Britain stands resolute in the face of the crisis and France stands with her. There is no doubt of Poland's determination to resist any aggression against her sovereignty.

What startles the world almost more than the Hitler moves is the Russo-German rapprochment in the face of the talks of Britain and France with Russia. But this news confirms what was remarked a year ago when Russia was not called in at Munich which would indicate that there was doubt of Russia.

Germany and Russia are both dictatorships and a natural comradeship might be expected. Both call themselves socialist, and they are both set against established institutions. How far the non-aggression pact will go is not known except to Stalin and Hitler. Does it mean Russia has problems of her own which she must solve, while Europe goes its own way as long as Russia's European borders are intact?

NATIONAL GALLERY

The National Gallery at Ottawa has told a story of expansion year after year for the past eighteen years, and this is significant of the cultural and educational growth of the Dominion, it is pointed out in the annual report of the board of trustees. The development has been greatly accelerated in the past five years particularly.

In the past year several works of unusual interest have been added to the great master section and the Canadian section has been augmented by new accessions.

It is pointed out that "it is significant that the past year saw the foundations of what it is hoped will grow to be a worthy collection of drawings for Canada. Drawings of the Italian, Flemish, French and British schools, ranging over a wide field and covering a period of some three hundred years, have been added to the collection."

There were 52 loan exhibitions during the year of which 49 were held in Canada and three abroad.

The need of a new gallery building is again impressed as it has been for many years. No less than ten times the storage that is available is needed to handle the amount of work done for the public. Even the simplest conveniences are lacking.

"In public galleries across the Dominion Canadian children have been gathered together to open their minds to artistic expression and to create with paint and brush, with clay and other interesting materials, pictures of their environment, their doings and imaginative thoughts. Gradually formal education is responding to this movement and the art gallery is likely to be called upon to play an increasingly important part in it."

The National Gallery is serving as the centre of the art movement across the Dominion and so is playing a role of no small importance in education.

For a long time it has been seen what is the cause of economic hesitancy—the uneasiness and critical situation in Europe. Where the world would exactly have been, had it not been for the building up of vast forces by Germany and Italy to dictate international policy, no one can tell. But life would have been happier without crises, business would have been good and no doubt many men now out of work would have been reabsorbed into industry. That much seems certain.

That is what the arming of Germany and Italy has meant up to the present. What it means to the months and years ahead only time can tell.

Every business man with a wide experience says that it is the lack of assurance today which is holding back development. If the shadows of these crises would definitely pass there would be a business resurgence of phenomenal proportions, they say.

"After seeing what Europe has done, I am going to sit down and design a plane that can do 600 miles an hour."—Alexander de Seversky.

FOLKS FROM "THE LAND OF THE FREE AND THE HOME OF THE BRAVE" are not always well posted on the laws of other countries as was evidenced by a scene on Front Street, Belleville, one day this week. An automobile party from the United States were enjoying a light lunch sitting in their car and for liquid refreshment had a case of beer in full view from which they helped themselves as the spirit moved them. No one bothered them and no doubt by now they have included Canada, especially Ontario, in the home of the brave and the land of the free.

IRVIN S. COBB, NEWSPAPERMAN, AUTHOR, ACTOR, is recovering from a serious illness in a San Francisco hospital. Interviewed by reporters he sat up in bed "like a bullfrog in a pan of milk," one of the reporters said. "I can't say that the X-ray pictures flatter me," remarked Mr. Cobb. "One of them looked like a plaster cast of Madame Perkins, (U. S. Secretary of Labor), I am having them retouched," said he. Mr. Cobb's greatest complaint, however, had to do with his eating and drinking and smoking, and it can be expected that when he is back in circulation again the familiar ever-present cigar may be missing from his frontispiece, because, said he: "Now I have to quit eating anything fit to eat, smoke nothing, drink nothing, and go to bed at 7 p.m. This is calculated to make me live at least five years longer, but what the h—l for I don't know."

Memories of the Floradora Girls of 1900 were revived by news of the recent death in Los Angeles of Mrs. Marie MacGillvray, aged 57, one of the original Floradora Sextette, who sang that ditty in ruffled petticoats with parasols. Tomorrow is catching up with yesterday.

WHEN THE PURITANS LANDED ON PLYMOUTH ROCK in New England they brought a militant Christianity with them, with ministers, expounding the faith that in them was in long sermons and dire warnings of the wrath to come. Folks had to hew close to the line in New England in those days to get by and not get hung or burned as a witch or placed in the stocks as a frivolous person, or worse. Recently some one has been digging up the old hell-fire sermons of the Pilgrim Fathers and they are being repeated in various pulpits on state occasions and attracting considerable public attention despite their long-windedness. However, folks are attracted from the novelty of the occasion and not from fear as in the days of the Pilgrim Fathers when to be absent from church on Sunday meant being present in the stocks all day Monday.

TO LET

He was putting the finishing touches to his picture.

He had chosen a lovely old Yorkshire cottage for his brush, and the picture was satisfactory. No one was living in the cottage; but that did not matter, for the artist had put curtains at the windows and a thin wisp of smoke curling up from one of the stone chimneys.

Presently a Yorkshireman came up.

"That's my property," said he, pointing with his stick at the cottage. "So you've made a picture of it, eh? What will you be doing with it, if I might ask?"

"Oh," said the artist, "I shall send it to one of the art exhibitions."

"Aye! And will many folk see it?"

"A good many I expect."

"They will, will they? Well, then, look here, just paint a notice-board, will you, and make it say, 'To let for summer months'?"

Last evening at the Fair Grounds one of the fastest baseball games of the season was played between the Red Sox of Belleville and the Trenton National intermediates. The final score was 5 to 1 in favor of the Red Sox and it was a well earned victory. The Belleville battery, Coon and Cook, were right on the job. Coon had 16 strikeouts in seven innings and was very effective in the pinches, at one point striking out three men in succession. For a battery mate, Coon could not wish for a better man than Cook. The following composed the Red Sox team: Cook, Coon, Storks, Moore, Hunter, Jose, Maraskas, Ashley, Rushlow and Cretney. Harold Smith, the noted Ontario left hand pitcher was the umpire and handled the game in a fair and impartial manner.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

By James W. Barton, M.D.

Conflicts Must Be Settled To Obtain Peace of Mind

Some months ago I spoke of a middle-aged man who consulted his physician about his indigestion. The attacks came on sometimes before meals, sometimes after meals, and sometimes half way between meals. There was a progressive loss of weight. There were no definite symptoms of ulcer or cancer but the physician advised an Xray examination. This examination revealed no ulcer or cancer but a nervous fluttering or quick successive movements of the stomach walls due, in the opinion of the physician, to nervousness or emotional upsetment. The cause was a domestic difficulty which the patient was advised to get settled in "some" way. When the difficulty was settled, the indigestion disappeared.

The subsequent history of this case is interesting in that since the day he "settled" his problem there has been a gradual increase in weight and the patient is again consulting his physician about how to get rid of his excess fat. It is not hard to understand how having a good appetite and being able to rest at night free from worry will restore fat in and on the body.

Now we all have worries or conflicts and what would seem like big conflicts to some are small to others and vice versa but it is only when we get these conflicts "settled" in some way that peace of mind comes to us.

The physician by questioning is able to note that a certain name or a certain subject seems to upset the patient and still closer questioning brings the conflict to light. By discovering the cause of the conflict and discussing it freely, the patient is able to recognize just how it can affect his appetite, his sleep, his enjoyment of life, his behavior with others and other everyday circumstances or happenings. Once this becomes clear to him, the battle is more than half won.

Some of us fight conflicts in one way—trying to forget them—or in another way — analyzing them in our minds and trying to show ourselves they are not so very important. These methods may help some but if we are normal physically—no low infection sapping our strength—the best plan to get peace of mind is to try to "settle" the conflict in one way or another. Once the mind is made up to the situation there is no conflict.

KEEPING CHICKENS

Keeping chickens looks to be an easy, simple sort of job. It probably is to those who are willing to adapt themselves to the rigorous routine, daily and even at times hourly, necessary for the successful handling of the humble, but frequently temperamental biddy and her progeny. To the rest of us who have the urge, but lack the willingness, keeping chickens too frequently turns out to be a losing venture.

And this leads one to the conclusion that chicken fanciers who succeed are, generally speaking "naturals" at the business. As for the rest of us let us be thankful that there are always enough "naturals" on the chicken-keeping job to make certain a reasonably adequate supply of both eggs and fowl to supply our tables.—Calgary Herald.

IOWA FAG TAX

There is no law in Iowa prohibiting the sale of cigarettes, but there is a heavy tax which the cigarette smoker is obliged to pay, and this law has encouraged the bootlegger to enter the field with a cheaper priced article. His success has put a new law on the statute book of that State, which will fine every bootlegger, if caught, $50 a package.

But that is not all. The law gives permission to every Iowa revenue agent to enter without a warrant any house or business establishment in the State to hunt for unstamped cigarettes, and they may stop any car or truck upon the highways if they see fit. The head of the State cigarette and beer division has announced that his agents will go after everybody. —San Francisco Argonaut.

MELODRAMA REVIVED

Many a Summer theatre troupe is rolling its customers in the aisles with revivals, played with straight faces, of such old meller-drammers as The Farmer's Daughter, The Drunkard and Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model.

"Unhand her, villain!" . . . . "Rags are royal raiment when worn for virtue's sake" "Aha, me proud beauty, I have you in me power!"—the threadbare lines seem screamingly funny when declaimed, in all seriousness, by 1939 actors. But the same lines, spoken in the same way, weren't funny at all, but genuinely thrilling, to audiences of 1899 and years thereafter.—New York World-Telegram.

HIS LAST MEAL

Eight mugs of Japanese beer, a roasted fowl weighing four pounds, and a large plate of boiled rice—these caused the death of a ship's carpenter, a Chinese named Ah Long.

He drank the beer, ate the roast fowl and rice and went to bed on board a motor vessel in Galle harbor. The next morning he was found dead. A post-mortem revealed that death was due to heart failure caused by over-drinking and over-eating.—Indian Press Union.

A Pet Lion in the House

One of the advantages of living in Kenya is that one can keep as pet animals that would either be too expensive or too dangerous to have loose half the day in England. People tell you that it is "madness" to imagine that one can trust a full-grown lion; this, on the contrary, I am in the process of proving. At the moment I have a pair of 20-month-old lions which certainly show more promise of remaining tame than any others I have kept.

The lion is probably more misunderstood than any other animal. He is a creature of character, and thoroughly independent, who does or does not do sundry things because he does, or does not, feel that way at certain times. Further, he is a very great bluffer In fact he will always react favorably, from the human point of view, to a show of force, believing completely that discretion is the better part of valor. If you push him too far, on the other hand, or he considers that any situation has lasted long enough, then you have a beast who takes the initiative so that possibly you or he may have to die. A lioness is infinitely more courageous at any time.

x x

This particular pair of lions, Romeo and Juliet, were born in captivity, and from an early age enjoyed motoring. From 6 months of age they regarded the farm lorry as an amusing toy, and Romeo often seats himself at the wheel as though he had been born a chauffeur.

As soon as they arrived on the large poultry-farm on which I live they were allowed to roam loose. This worked well for a time until they began to kill young chickens, and later Juliet started on grown hens. After that they were confined to a netting-run part of the day.

A week or so ago they broke out of their rather flimsy bed-room and spent two nights and one day in the "wide open spaces". Having got out they blotted an excellent copybook by tearing a sheet of corrugated iron off the duckhouse and killing the seven inmates; they did not bother to eat them, which was pleasing. They had been in no hurry to depart, for their tracks were found outside various bedroom windows and in the flower beds. After that they trekked over two miles and began to chase a neighbor's horses next evening. I got a rope round Romeo, but myself and four boys were unable to hold him.

Next morning I found by their tracks that they had returned to within half a mile; when I located them later they followed me home like two great dogs. Theirs had been a poor week-end, as the only animal to which they had got really close was undoubtedly a skunk, and their effluvium was dreadful.

x x

Romeo is positively touching in his affection for me, but the trouble is he does not realize his own strength nor his weight. When he stands on his hind legs he dwarfs my six feet, and he does not realize that human skin is much more vulnerable than his sister's. He comes and rubs himself against my legs like a giant cat, making little grunts of pleasure, and then he spoils it by nipping me in the calf, or suddenly leaping up on my shoulder.

Juliet is on the whole less demonstrative but more reliable. She will get into a rage, or a panic, and in five minutes you can caress her as though nothing had happened. She adores to be scratched, and when one does this she "fleas" one just like a dog; a favorite ground is the human ear, but never does she bite, just nibbles gently.

In their early days they spent of their times indoors and one armchair was set aside for them. Then both could be comfortable in it, but as they grew Romeo proved most ungallant and would not let his sister share it with him. Whenever she got in first his procedure was simple and effective; he just sat on top of her till from sheer discomfort at his great weight she left it to him. Today the chair can only contain him if he parks his hindquarters on one arm, his fat stomach in the seat and his forequarters on the other arm.

In the past I found that lions disliked natives, particularly the strange ones. Romeo and Juliet know the regular staff perfectly, but any stranger is spotted instantly. With the indoor boys they are remarkably tolerant. One in particular seems to like them, and him they treat as a piece of furniture; the other is nervous and it is he whom they like to stalk, a favorite amusement being to flip at his kanzu—a white surplice-like affairs—as he waits at table.

Lions are observant creatures, which immediately notice any new piece of furniture or any alteration in a room, and this, of course, had to be investigated. For a long time they used to love playing in my bedroom, the great attraction being a chest of drawers on the top of which was fixed a big mirror; they used to jump on to it — lions love to survey the world from a height—and sweep off the contents. This was grand until Juliet once misjudged her spring, landed on the edge and overtipped it, shivering the mirror into pieces.

Their powers of jumping, even from rest, are superb. Every now and then Romeo wakes from slumber during luncheon, and, being an impatient brute, starts rushing about and at odd times puts a foot through a window-pane. When they were smaller one often used to hop out of a window while the other stayed inside; the one indoors used to rub frantically at a pane with a sort of window cleaner's action; nowadays no pane can stand much of that.

x x

As regards food, until recently Romeo would eat nothing but raw meat, blood and water. Juliet has always been keen to try new dishes and thoroughly appreciated cream, butter, and one or two sauces, as well as toying with cooked meat; she sometimes stands up and removes a joint from the sideboard.

Lately they were introduced to raw eggs, and now both will eat a dozen at a sitting. They consume a lot of the shell and lick one's fingers until they are clean; about this they are amazingly gentle and never even break the skin when one's hand is half inside their mouths.

In many ways they are remarkably human and one can tell at a glance the mood they are in. Romeo especially has an unmistakable look in his eye warning you that he is in a playful or naughty mood. More than any other animal they sense the state of mind of anyone who comes along. Some people they ignore totally, and there is no animal who can look so completely through you as a lion. A few they like on sight and some they dislike. Anyone who exhibits nervousness they at once treat differently.

As far as I and a friend are concerned we hope to continue to have them in the house and look in the garden for always. Time alone will prove if we can.—Cleland Scott in London Spectator.

The Last of the Indiamen

The Java, believed to be the last East Indianman still afloat, has been towed out of Gibraltar Bay to be broken up.

The ship, which had been moored in Gibraltar Bay for more than 80 years, was perhaps the most familiar mark in Gibraltar territorial waters. She was used exclusively as a coal-hulk and was known to generations of merchant seamen as Hulk No. 6, for from her spacious holds thousands of merchant vessels have been supplied with bunkering coal for the best part of a century.

The Java had a romantic history. Built of teak at Calcutta in 1813, with a displacement of 1,175 tons, she carried 30 guns, of which 12 were mounted on the upper deck and 12 on the main deck.

The ship's name was intimately associated with her building, which originated in exceptional circumstances. During the voyage of one of the early East Indianmen to Java and China a party of her passengers went ashore in Java. They were attacked by natives, who carried off a young girl passenger of high birth. An officer with an armed party from the ship at once landed, and after having searched the bush succeeded in overpowering the native kidnappers and rescued the girl, who was found in a state of collapse, stripped of her clothing. Her father, whose gratitude to the ship's officer as leader of the search party was unbounded, thereupon undertook to build and equip a ship as a present to his daughter's rescuer.

The ship, when built, was named Java and carried as a figurehead the form of a young girl with hands crossed over her breast. The Java began her trading career in 1841, and was occasionally chartered by the British Government as a transport at the princely rate of 17s. 11d. a month. —London Times.

JAPANESE PROBLEM

There is a Japanese problem, and a serious one, in certain parts of British Columbia.

An item in the Haney Gazette gives a sidelight. It seems the difficulties of teaching in the Whonnock and Ruskin schools were being discussed by the school board. Mr. Loughton, principal of one of the schools, reported that in the beginners' class next month there will be 24 pupils, 22 of whom will be Japanese. Seventy-five per cent. of the entire school population of 56 will be Japanese. —Kamloops Sentinel.

HAPPY WHITNEY

The remarkable financial condition of Whitney Township should serve as an inspiration to Timmins and many other towns that appear unable to stay within the limits of their estimates each year. Whitney is free of debt and has a bank account of several thousands of dollars with their current year's income still to be collected. — Timmins Press.

CORONATION DREAM

Naturally the Duke of Portland knew the Prince of Wales (later Edward VII) and liked him very much. Before the latter's coronation the Duke had a remarkable dream.

He writes: "The state coach had to pass through the arch at the Horse Guards on the way to Westminster Abbey. I dreamed that it stuck in the arch, and that some of the Life Guards on duty were compelled to hew off the crown upon the coach before it could be freed. When I told the crown equerry, Colonel Ewart, he laughed and said, 'What do dreams matter?'. 'At all events,' I replied, 'let us have the coach and the arch measured.'

"So this was done, and, to my astonishment, we found that the arch was nearly two feet too low to allow the coach to pass through.

"It appears that the state coach had not been driven through the arch for some time, and that the level of the road had since been raised during repairs."— Vancouver Province.

SIR N. HENDERSON

There was no indication of the purpose of the Broadcast, but it was believed the Foreign Secretary would re-state Britain's policy to the world and make a last minute appeal for peace.

Made Similar Peace

It was recalled Prime Minister Chamberlain made a similar broadcast from 10 Downing Street Sept. 27, 1938, two days before the Munich settlement of the Czecho-Slovak crisis.

Europe was faced then with the same growing tension which now prevails.

Both Mr. Chamberlain and Lord Halifax will make statements in parliament tomorrow afternoon, prior to Lord Halifax's broadcast. Sir Nevile Henderson, British Ambassador to Germany, flew to Berchtesgaden today to give a definite warning to Adolf Hitler that the British government intends to stand by its pledge to Poland.

The British Ambassador had instructions to convey personally to Hitler a message from the British government. It was a definite and explicit warning that Britain would honor her pledge to Poland irrespective of any non-aggression agreement signed between Germany and Russia.

France and Britain called more men to the colors as a direct answer to the massing of German troops along the Polish frontiers. There was a growing belief in London and Paris that Germany, as soon as Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop concludes a non-aggression agreement with the Soviets, will force the issue with Poland.

In London final preparations were made for the reassembly of parliament tomorrow, when the government will seek wide dictatorial powers to meet any emergency.

The British government's message to Hitler was an attempt to warn the Fuehrer in advance that he could not send his grey-clad armies over the Polish border without precipitating a general war.

British Press Unanimous

This determination to stand by the Poles was echoed in the British press today with a remarkable show of unanimity. The nation was of one mind—to aid Poland if attacked.

The British government has instructed Sir William Seeds, British Ambassador to Russia, to press the Soviets for a definite statement on the negotiations with Germany. Britain particularly wants to know what effect a non-aggression agreement would have on the staff talks now in progress in Moscow and whether the Soviets intend going ahead with the triple alliance.

There is still a disposition here to regard any German-Russian rapprochement as definitely disturbing but as by no means a shattering factor in European affairs. The first shock of the announcement has worn off and Whitehall is reserving official comment until a pact is actually signed and its terms revealed.

King George May Come to London

A government spokesman here emphasized that the French and Polish governments had been informed of every diplomatic move taken by Britain.

The King may leave Balmoral Castle for London tonight. His Majesty's secretary, Sir Alexander Hardinge, conferred with Prime Minister Chamberlain at 10 Downing Street today.

There was no estimate of the number of reservists being called up in Great Britain but it was understood all officers and key men in the anti-aircraft batteries of the territorial army were included. Some of them already have completed terms of special training this summer.

Official World Record

Cobb's kilometre mark became the official world record. The 368.85, however, for the measured mile is the accepted standard of speed racing. Cobb's return trip was made at 366.97.

Cobb's car roared through the kilometre at 367.92 miles per hour on the initial sprint, then sped back at 371.59, indicating his acceleration increased as he whizzed along to victory.

Eyston's measured mile record was achieved with a north average of 356.44 and a south mark of 358.57.

The south run kilometre mark of 371.59 m.p.h was the greatest speed ever recorded for a land machine.

Designed Machine

Reid Railton, with Cobb's triumph, became the first man to claim the achievement of having designed the world's fastest land and water machines. Last week Sir Malcolm Campbell, in a boat designed by Railton, smashed his own world water mark with an average of 141.74 miles per hour.

The sleek speedster travelled so fast through the measured mile on the north run that it overshot the north pit by approximately a half mile, nearly seven miles from the timers' stand.

FRANCE, BRITAIN

Showdown Matter of Days

French leaders warned the country a showdown in the German-Polish dispute was a matter of days only.

(The Havas news agency in a dispatch from Berlin last night quoted an unofficial German source as saying Hitler has ordered his troops to march across the Polish Corridor into Danzig Thursday). The French news agency quoted this same source as saying a strip of the Corridor would be occupied by Reich troops).

The government awaited a report from its Moscow Ambassador, Paul-Emile Naggiar, instructed to ask the Soviet government the meaning of its proposed non-aggression pact with Germany.

On that report will depend the government's decision whether to break off its negotiations with Russia envisaging Russia's aid against Germany in event of a European war.

French Cabinet Meets

A cabinet session, under President Albert Lebrun, was scheduled for 10 a.m. (6 a.m. EDT) tomorrow. The President will approve more economic and military measures to put France in a position to keep her pledges to aid Poland.

Influential leaders said the present crisis was far more dangerous than that of a year ago when Germany threatened force to take Sudetenland from Czecho-Slovakia. Some publicly declared: "We are within two fingers of war."

The superior war council, in almost daily session, was expected to meet again with General Maurice Gamelin who would lead combined French and British land forces, if the two nations went to war.

Informed sources said Germany had mobilized 1,700,000 men and Italy 1,300,000 in their determination to settle the Danzig dispute and, perhaps, other territorial grievances'

ITALY SPEEDS

To Follow France

Some quarters thought the calling of additional reserves in France would be followed by similar action in Italy. A large number of reserve officers, especially of the medical corps, was reported already summoned.

Premier Mussolini's Milan newspaper, Il Popolo D'Italia, said the accord would have its effect also on "certain zones in the Balkans and near east which, being nearer, interest Italy."

The paper warned Greece, Turkey and Rumania—which hold commitments from Great Britain and France—to reflect on consequences of the pact's 'strangulation' of the chances of Anglo-French assistance in eastern Europe. Mussolini often has been credited with wishing to bring Turkey, Greece and Yugoslavia into the Italian orbit.

PRIME MINISTER IN CLOSE TOUCH

Hon. Mackenzie King Studies Stream of Confidential Messages

Ottawa, Aug. 23—(CP)— Prime Minister Mackenzie King was in constant touch with his secretaries and external affairs department officials today studying a stream of confidential messages from London and Europe regarding the international crisis abroad.

So serious was the situation considered that the Prime Minister spent most of last evening with the Governor-General, who returned yesterday from an extended trip to the Northwest and the Arctic, and then remained in his offices in the east block on Parliament Hill past midnight.

Mr. Mackenzie King cancelled plans to leave for Toronto to attend the funeral of Senator Frank O'Connor there today. His private car was detached from the Toronto train five minutes before departure time. Defence Minister Mackenzie, Postmaster-General McLarty, and Pensions Minister Power, however, went to Toronto in another private car.

Hold Cabinet Meeting

A cabinet council meeting will be held, probably tomorrow, to discuss the situation and debate steps for convoking the Canadian parliament should war break out. The British parliament will meet Thursday on account of the crisis, and Mr. Mackenzie King will probably have cabled information on that event to lay before his cabinet colleagues.

The Prime Minister has at various times made clear his stand that parliament alone should decide the Canadian course of action in the event of such a serious matter as an outbreak of hostilities involving the British Empire.

SEN. F. O'CONNOR

Honorary Bearers

Honorary pallbearers included Premier Hepburn of Ontario and Premier Duplessis of Quebec, Sir William Mulock, Dr. H. A. Bruce, Hon. Peter Heenan, Mr. Justice H. T. Kelly, Capt. J. W. Flanagan, J. J. Fitzgibbons and F. J. Crawford.

Active pallbearers were Ronald Denne of Peterborough, Ont., Joseph P. Hogan of Rochester, N.Y., Dr. Harold A. Murphy, E. J. Heck, William Kennedy and William A. Bennett all of Toronto.

Father McQuillan praised Senator O'Connor's career. "Senator O'Connor was raised to the rank of Knight Commander of St. Gregory the Great as testimony of his charity toward Catholic and Catholic causes," Father McQuillan said.

Splendid Tribute

"In all his success, Senator O'Connor was the true steward of the gifts of this world for the divine Master and Creator.

"There probably have been few in the history of this country that have sought out, as he did, causes to help with generosity that left the recipient free to pursue their way unfettered. There is scarcely a charitable, religious or educational institute, that has not received of his bounty.

"Through all his life he remained unostentatious, a direct, loyal to his friends, the man of simplest Catholic faith. May we at this moment join with the thousands who have expressed to his family personally, sincere sympathy and expressions of regret at the passing of one so dear.

"The memory of the Honorable Senator Frank O'Connor will always be fresh and green in our hearts. May his soul rest in peace."

Hundreds Line Streets

Hundreds lined the streets and scores of organizations were represented in St. Michael's Cathedral where the service was held. Ecclesiastical dignitaries present included Archbishop Michael J. O'Brien of Kingston, Bishop Joseph Ryan of Hamilton, Bishop John T. Kidd of London and Bishop D. O'Connor of Peterborough.

Col. Mackenzie Waters represented Lieutenant Governor Albert Mathews.

Mayor James Hamilton and Ald. James Dutton represented Peterborough and the city authorities sent a basket of roses. It was in Peterborough that Senator O'Connor started making candy during a career that brought him to a dominant position in the industry in Canada and the United States. Interment was in Mount Hope Cemetery.

WEE STOWAWAY

Robert Taylor, 7, practised real Scottish thrift, when he hied himself aboard the S.S. Andania at Greenock, Scotland, and travelled to Canada alone and penniless. Robert boarded the ocean liner and convinced members of the crew he was a bona fide passenger until the ship was out to sea. He is shown here as the Andania docked at Quebec. Born in Canada and taken to Scotland two years ago by his parents, the wee Scot will return home on board the Andania.

Cool Winds Bring First Hint of Fall

Cool winds brought the first hint of Autumn to the district last evening. For the first time in many weeks light blankets were a welcome addition to bed clothing of city residents, while at summer cottages along the bay and lakes through the immediate area fireplaces held a rosy glow as fires were lighted to ward off the tang of fall.

Today suit coats were worn by the majority of residents about their affairs through the city, and rolled shirt sleeves which during past weeks of heat and humidity had set the summer fashion had disappeared. Cooler weather was definitely here to stay.

The change was a welcome one for agriculturists of the district particularly. It spelled the end of the marked dryness of the past months when wells ran dry and animals were chief sufferers of the heat. The cool weather will halt the activity of the grasshoppers in the district grain fields, and slow the damage caused by other destructive insects in field and orchard.

R. C. A. F. BAND HEARD IN CONCERT

Military Organization Delights Music Lovers at Victoria Park With Varied Program

Proving beyond the slightest shadow of a doubt through the medium of a splendid performance, that they are easily one of the outstanding musical organizations in Eastern Canada, the Band of the Royal Canadian Air Force, Trenton, thrilled nearly two thousand people in Victoria Park last night, with a program that was as variable as it was efficiently rendered.

Under the baton of Flight-Sergeant Tommy Cooper, musical director of the band, the "Flyers" gave ample indication that in the forthcoming contest at the Canadian National Exhibition this month, they will be a strong musical force to be reckoned with.

The park was almost packed with music-lovers. Cars filled every available parking space while a large number encroached on "forbidden" ground in order to be closer to the music. The entire program including the fine efforts of Flight Sergt. Horton and his electric guitar and the R.C.A.F. orchestra was one thoroughly enjoyed by the spectators.

Band Sixty Strong

Sixty musicians strong, the band which gave the concert through the kind permission of Wing-Commander C. E. McEwen, officer commanding the air-base, alternated from the stirring tempo of the military march to the soft cadences of classical music. Popular airs caught the public fancy, while excerpts from light operas and other numbers, that varied the program rounded out a delightful concert that received the well-merited acclaim of the listening audience.

An idea of the musical barrier the band will have to overcome in the forthcoming C.N.E. contest was given when Flight-Sergt. Cooper conducted thirty-five picked musicians who will represent his band at the contest in the test piece "Attila" an overture by Rossini. This difficult selection was rendered in masterful style by the artists, one that augurs well for their success at the C.N.E.

Electric Guitar Thrills

Echoes of Gilbert and Sullivan were heard in "H.M.S. Pinafore" while lovers of the march thrilled to the stirring melodies of "Sword and Lance", "Silver Trumpet" and "Voice of the Guns".

Flight-Sergt. Horton's electric guitar nearly "brought down the house" with its sweet melodies. The artist was given tremendous acclaim and graciously consented to encores.

Lieut. Fred Jobson, conductod of the Belleville Municipal Band acted as master-of-ceremonies in his usual capable manner.

SHOULD HAVE KNOWN THE NUMBER OF THE CAR

Centralia, Ill., Aug. 23 (AP)— C. E. Brantley, a traffic officer assigned to enforce the city's two-hour parking ordinance, wrote out a ticket for a offender. The licence number seemed familiar. He looked inside the car. It was his own.

TEAR UP LICENCE

Pottsville, Pa., Aug. 23 (AP)— A young couple asked the marriage licence clerk whether he could issue a duplicate of the licence they had obtained a week before. "Sure," he said. "What became of the first one?" The bride-to-be blushed and brought forth a handful of scraps. "We quarreled over wedding plans," she murmered. "I tore it up."

NOURISHING HOT DISHES SUITABLE FOR HOT SEASON

By ALICE LYNN BARRY

THERE'S still some hot weather ahead and we might well take stock of hot weather meals. Nutritionists remind us that one hot dish should be included in all summer meals, either a hot soup or a hot main dish, backed up with salads and fruits. So here are some good hot dishes to serve now and latter, too, since they are fairly substantial fare.

Fish Baked With Nuts

Baked Tuna with Brazil Nuts is something! It is made with one 13-ounce can tuna fish, one cup Brazil nuts (ground), two pimentos, two cups milk, four tablespoons butter, four tablespoons flour, three-fourths teaspoon salt, pepper, and one-half teaspoon Worcestershire sauce. First make a cream sauce by melting butter and stirring in flour and seasonings. When well-blended, add milk gradually. Cook until thick and smooth. Add nuts. Cut strips of one pimento for garnishing. Add remaining pimento, cut small, to white sauce. Flake tuna fish and add to white sauce. Pour into greased baking dish, garnish with pimento and six whole Brazil nuts on top. Bake in 350 degrees F. oven.

Substantial But Not Heavy

Creamed Beef and Onions is substantial yet not heavy fare. It is made with one three and one-half ounce jar of dried beef cut in pieces, two tablespoons butter, three tablespoons flour, dash of pepper, two and one-fourth cups milk, one-fourth teaspoon Worcestershire sauce and 12 medium-size onion, cooked. Saute beef in butter until well-browned. Stir in flour, add pepper, milk and Worcestershire sauce. Cook until thickened, stirring constantly. Add onions and simmer five minutes longer. Serve on crisp buttered toast, steamed rice or buttered noodles. Six portions.

Baked Pork Chops

Pork Chops all dressed up with corn dressing is an excellent main dish. It is made with four cups soft bread crumbs, one cup bran, one tablespoon chopped onion, one-fourth cup chopped celery, two tablespoons fat, teaspoon salt, one-fourth teasoon pepper; one-fourth teaspoon poultry seasoning, one cup drained whole kernel corn, one cup stock, liquid from corn, or milk. Combine bread crumbs and bran. Cook onion and celery in fat until lightly browned add to bread mixture with seasonings, corn and stock. Mix thoroughly. Press into baking dish, eight inches in diameter. Arrange chops in top of dressing and sprinkle with salt. Cover and bake in moderately hot oven (375 degrees F.) for about 45 minutes; uncover and bake 15 minutes longer.

Weddings

CASE—BARNUM

Campbellford—Amid a pretty setting of gladioli and fern which banked the living room at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. Barnum on Saturday at high noon their elder daughter, Evelyn Mary, was united in marriage to Albert Marshal Case, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest F. Case of Picton. Rev. F. G. McTavish of Sunderland, assisted by Dr. C. S. Reddick of Campbellford, officiated.

At the opening bars of the "Bridal Chorus", played by Miss Arleen Young of Guelph, the bride entered the room with her father. She was charmingly gowned in white marquisette over white taffeta with slim-fitting bodice fastened at the back with a row of small covered buttons to the waist and with a square neckline edged with Chantilly lace. Her finger-tip veil of silk net was caught with a coronet of seed pearls. She carried Pearson roses and Bouvardia.

Miss Helen Barnum, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid. She wore a bluish-pink floor length gown of point d'esprit over taffeta with very full skirt caught at the side with a cluster of flowers from which satin streamers fell to the hemline. Her shepherdess hat of matching tone and material was held in place by a narrow velvet ribbon. Her bouquet was of Briarcliff roses, blue statice and gypsophilia arranged in a Colonial style. Little Barbara Anne Warren, niece of the groom, made a lovely flower girl in her ankle length frock of baby blue organdy and quaint poke bonnet. She carried a nosegay of Sweetheart roses and gysophilia. Mr. Donald Barnum, brother of the bride, assisted the groom. During the signing of the register Mr. Seymour Warren, Montreal, rendered "Because".

Immediately after the ceremony a delicious buffet luncheon was served in the dining-room, which was appropriately decorated in pink and white. Mrs. Barnum received in a black chiffon gown with corsage of Token roses. Mrs. Case, mother of the groom, wore a mauve printed sheer with corsage of Joanna Hill roses.

Amid showers of confetti the happy couple left on a motor trip to the Adirondacks and Rochester. For travelling the bride wore an Iris blue ensemble with violet accessories. On their return they will reside at Picton.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

A Young Girl's Problem

Dear Miss Fairfax

I'm 19 years old and have been going with a young man of 21, and have also beein going out with a married man who says he's in love with me and wants to marry me, as soon as he gets his divorce. He has a youngster of five years of age. The young man has just proposed to me, too.

I'm all up in the air over these two proposals. Everyone tells me to marry a single man, but I think the world of the married man, and just can't picture the young man as a husband or father. The married man's little child also holds me back. He is 24 years old, has a nice home, and likes the comforts of home and children.

ALICE

Don't you think 19 is pretty young to make a decision such as this one? Why sacrifice the best years of your youth in accepting either of these men? The unmarried youth is entirely too young for a man to marry. How much does the average boy of 21 earn, and how far does it go toward maintaining a wife and possible children? Besides, you say you can't picture him as a husband and father so why consider him at all?

My dear girl, you can't be in earnest when you consider marriage with a man who wants to marry you when he gets a divorce, and who already has a child of five. He must have married when he should have been in high school getting an education. As a famous humorist once said: "DONT!"

She Wants to Overcome Bashfulness

Dear Miss Fairfax

What does one do to conquer bashfulness? Is there any cure? If so, I wish you could help me. Ever since I was a little girl, I've known a boy two years older who lives on a large farm. His mother and mine have always been friends. On holidays and special occasions, mother and I visited there.

This boy never paid any special attention to me, but now that we are grown up, I know by the way he looks at me that he would like to know me better, and the same with me. I go out with boys once in a while, but I'm so terribly shy that I don't seem to be able to hold on to them. I'm 16 years old.

The last time we went to the farm the boy was there. I couldn't think of a thing to say and when he spoke to me I was so nervous that I stammered and got as red as a beet and couldn't give him a decent answer. Naturally, this made us both uncomfortable.

Miss Fairfax, do you think I will ever be able to overcome this dreadful shyness and be able to be lively and peppy and have a good time? Please oh please, try to help me.

So Bashful

You and all the other girls who write me similar letters, about how shy and bashful they are, have no idea how really charming these two qualities of youth and artlessness are in this brassy age. I'd like to show you scores of letters from young men, saying that they are disgusted with girls who pet. And while I don't doubt the young men were always right there, when it comes to petting, they always claim a self-righteous disgust later on.

You'll get over this adorable habit of blushing soon enough time will take care of that.

As for the young man on the farm where you spend your holidays together, it seems to me you are making beautiful progress.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Must Set a Standard

Dear Mrs. Beeckman

Shouldn't the driver of a car enter the car through the door nearest the wheel? My boy friend insists upon getting into the car ahead of me and then sliding over to the wheel. I think this is rude and unmannerly. He says that it is dangerous to open the other door with cars coming and going by. I think that if he were careful it would not be dangerous. I live on the main street but traffic certainly is not heavy.

We are depending on what you say. If you agree with him, I will consent to let him do as he has been doing for about ten months now. But if you agree with me, he will consent to open the door and permit me to enter the car and then go around to the other door.

Reader

I agree with you . . . .that it's "rude and unmannerly" for this boy to take the line of least resistance, getting into the car and sliding over to the wheel. Certainly a great many boys and men do this, for any one of a variety of reasons. Sometimes they don't know better. Sometimes it's because they are thoughtless. Sometimes they definitely do know better, but they don't care how awkward and unmannerly they are, so long as they do as they wish to do. And sometimes they politely resist the temptation to do this, when they are with girls who they realize demand a high standard of mannerliness and courtliness, and let down their manners with other girls who don't demand any particular mannerliness; who even say, as if they were doing the man a favor, "You get in first. I'm sure it's easier for you."

Girls with common sense (and you show that you are just this kind of girl) recognize that a polite and manly boy has far more appreciation of a girl who takes his politeness and manliness for granted, who by her graciously accustomed manner charmingly "summons forth" his mannerliness and gallantry, than he has for the girl who meekly accepts his tenth-rate, slovenly behaviour.

For example, a manly boy or a manly man doesn't want a girl to hold his hat in the movies. He does not want a girl to help him on or off with his coat. He doesn't want her to open a door before he has time to get to the door ot open it for her.

And, similarly, he doesn't really want her to be satisfied with his discourteous way of getting into a car first, leaving her to get in as best she can. And I can tell that this young man friend of yours doesn't want you and me to agree with him. So let's not . . . he'll admire you more, if you don't . . . and I'll take my chances!

Since he knows how to drive a car, he'll know how to avoid traffic in getting into his car on the left side. And if he does the courteous thing, he 'll feel less like a sissy, and more like a man.

Brother to Give Her in Marriage

Dear Mrs. Beeckman

I am to be married soon, and I would very much appreciate your advice on certain details of my wedding.

1—Both of my parents are dead and I am living with my brother and sister-in-law. Should my brother give me in marriage? And would my sister-in-law be the hostess?

2—I am not going to wear a bridal veil, and I am going to have only one attendant. There will be about one hundred-guests at the church, and the reception will be for only members of the immediate families. Would engraved invitations be correct?

3—Should we have ushers? If so, how many?

Betty

1—Yes, this is the perfect opportunity for you to give honor where honor is certainly due . . .to your brother and his wife, who have opened their home to you, and who, since your mother and father are dead, are your social sponsors.

Of course you will want to have your brother give you in marriage, and he will naturally and rightly expect you to give him this honor. Asking anyone else to give you in marriage is unthinkable.

You do not say if the reception is to be given in the home of your brother and sister-in-law, but I take it for granted it is to be. And, since your sister-in-law, is the hostess of that home, of course she would be the hostess of your wedding reception. As a matter of fact, no matter where the reception is to take place, your sister-in-law would be the hostess of your reception.

2—Since you are planning to have a small, informal wedding, it is not necessary or appropriate for you to have engraved invitations. You or your sister-in-law (since she is to be the hostess) would appropriately write friendly little notes of invitation. Or, if you prefer, you may invite verbally the members of the families (since they are the only ones to be invited to the reception also) and your other relatives and perhaps even your especially close friends, and write notes of invitation only to the other guests.

Perhaps, since you are having so few guests to the marriage ceremany, you might like to write invitations to these and send engraved announcements to those friends and acquaintances whom you are not inviting. Those marriage announcements are not at all necessary, but you might like to consider them for their convenience.

3—I believe that you and your bridegroom would find it very convenient if he invites say two ushers to take care of the seating of your hundred guests. Then, before your arrival at the church, you will know that your guests are being taken care of, are being escorted to seats either on the bride's or groom's side of the church, according to the information they give the ushers.

Then these two ushers (or four, if you and the groom prefer) could lead the procession next, your attendant, and last, you and your brother.

Those whose birthday it is are to enjoy a year of welcome relief from a static, depressed or unfruitful state of affairs, to be free to grasp the rewards of industry or fidelity to superiors, or to acquire returns from increased property values or resurrected "frozen assets." Menu Forecasts "Frost Tonight"

By ALICE LYNN BARRY

FROST on a summer's eve? Yes, when it's the kind you eat! It's the frost that applies its chilly self to dessert, salad or beverage. Mercury goes down, spirits go up, smiles glow and compliments pop when the menu forecast is "frost tonight".

A frosted beverage, in the vernacular, is something good to which ice cream has been added. Example par excellence is frosted coffee—that hot, tasty beverage made chilly with ice and frosty with ice cream. But refrigerators are all ready to perform a Jack or Jacqueline Frost act of their own, too, for frosted good things you can use with spoon or fork. Freeze up—and use the following recipe to start you off on your chilly but pleasant path.

Reminder of Florida

Florida Sherbet is made with three-quarter cup sugar, five tablespoons lemon juice, grated rind of a lemon, one and one-quarter cups canned grapefruit juice, one-eighth teaspoon salt and one and one-half cups milk. Combine sugar, lemon juice, rind, grapefruit juice and salt. Stir until sauce is dissolved. Add milk. Mix well. Pour into automatic refrigerator tray, and freeze until firm. Remove to mixing bowl and beat with electric or hand beater until mixture becomes light and creamy. Return to freezing tray. Freeze until firm.

Peach Mousse is made with one cup mashed peaches, one-quarter cup sugar, three tablespoons light corn syrup, teaspoon gelatin, tablespoon water, one-half pint cream, salt, almond extract. Peel and mash fresh peaches. Add sugar, syrup and salt. Soak gelatin in cold water and dissolve over hot water. Gradually add almond extract and gelatin to peach mixture. Fold in cream that has been whipped. Put in refrigerator trays or pack in ice and salt and chill for three hours.

Coffee in a New Way

Frosted Double Coffee to serve four is made with one quart double-strength freshly-made coffee, one cup cream, one-quarter cup sugar, one-half pint coffee ice cream and cracked ice. Cool coffee quickly by placing in bowl of cracked ice. Add cream, sugar and half the ice cream. Shake or stir until coffee and cream are thoroughly blended. Pour into glasses containing cracked ice and top each serving with a spoonful of ice cream and a sprinkle of grated bitter chocolate.

"The GLASS SLIPPER"

by MIGNON G. EBERHART

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

After Andy left, Brule turned to Rue.

"You'd better take the small guest room tonight, the one next to my study; I told Gross to have it made ready for you. Go to bed, Rue. If you want a sedative——"

She shuddered, remembering Julie. Brule said coolly:

"Better lock your door tonight, Rue. A thing like this—there's no telling where it may end."

The queer thing was that in the night she remembered what Brule had said. Quite clearly and sharply, as if he were saying it again, warning her.

The trouble was she hadn't locked the door.

That was quite late, after Brule had been called away to see a patient.

It was the ringing of the telephone that awakened her out of a troubled, haunted sleep that wasn't quite sleep noir was it quite sensible awareness. She could hear it plainly through the closed door between the small guest room and Brule's own study; she could hear the low murmur of Brule's voice in reply.

She heard, too, for the house was quiet, the subsequent closing of the door from Brule's suite into the hall in about the time it would have taken him to dress, and presently another low murmur of voices from somewhere in the hall. She sat up, listening; she didn't know whether there were still policemen in the house or not; had they left a guard in the house to see that none of them tried to escape?

Whether or not that was the case, there was after a while a muffled closing of the heavy front door as if by a cautious hand. She didn't hear—couldn't have heard from that room—the sound of the car. But she knew after two months of marriage what the telephone in the night and the closing of the front door meant.

The house seemed extremely quiet after Brule had gone. Lying there in the dark room Rue began again (as she was to do so many times) to go over in her mind the whole course of events as she knew them.

There wasn't, as Andy had said, and the attitude of the others and of the police made all too clear, much use in hoping that Julie's death would prove to be suicide.

There was, of course, a line of specious reasoning they could take: that was that Julie had accidentally given Crystal the drug that killed her and then herself committed suicide when the police inquiry at last opened.

It was specious; Rue knew that Julie hadn't committed suicide; And Julie would not have come to her, Rue, if she'd intended to escape the consequences of any such mistake by suicide.

Furthermore, knowing Julie and knowing as she did the nursing routine for Crystal, a mistake that would have caused Crystal's death simply wasn't possible. She also knew that there was no drug used in treatment, there was no drug available, that could possibly have been substituted by accident for medicine; such a substitution would have had to be intentional.

But she thought from what she saw of Guy's and Brule's attitude that such a line of defense might be in their minds. Or perhaps in Guy's mind alone. There was no surmising Brule's intentions.

She wondered what time it was and turned to see her small bedside clock. It was too far away for her to discern the exact hour; about three, she thought, trying to see through the darkness.

She lay there watching it merely because its small face was luminous against the blackness all around her.

Watching it and thinking. Gradually becoming aware that her thinking was slower, hoping it meant sleep was approaching.

There wasn't any sound. She was sure of that.

But all at once, quite suddenly the small luminous halo vanished.

She opened her eyes wider with a jerk; she'd slept of course. And closed her eyes—but her eyes were open now, and the small spot of light wasn't there. It wasn't anywhere in that wall of blackness.

She didn't move. Even her heart seemed to stop and wait and listen.

Queer that it seemed as if someone was in the room. Where no one could be.

But she hadn't locked the door. Brule said to lock the door, and she hadn't. And he'd said coolly: "A thing like this—there's no telling...."

It was just then that, all at once, the little luminous halo of the clock became visible again. As if a hand had passed between her and the clock and blotted out its small light and then been removed.

A hand—or some other moving object. A man, say, passing as silently (literally) as a shadow between her and the clock.

There still wasn't any sound.

But stronger than anything was the sudden conviction that now she was alone in the room.

Alone, yet there had been no tangible evidence of anything else in the room—except the clock.

After a while she forced herself to reach for the bed lamp. Light in the room proved its emptiness. A glance convinced her; she rose and locked the door into the hall and pushed aside the silk embroidered panel to try the door to Brule's study which was locked.

She had slept and dreamed. That was the explanation. She turned off the light.

But she didn't sleep again until objects in the room were beginning to have bulky shapes and she heard Brule's return. There was again the sound of voices, prolonged this time as if in discussion. But after a while Brule's study door closed softly.

It was when morning came, gray and cold, with Rachel bringing her breakfast tray and Rue hurrying to unlock the door, that the real threat the night had held came to light.

Rue, hair brushed and a warm, woolly bed jacket around her, looked wearily at the tray.

"The mail hasn't come yet," said Rachel. "Shall I throw this out, madam?"

This? thought Rue and looked.

Rachel was standing beside the small table near the door, holding a tray with a thermos and glass on it in her hands and looking dubiously at the empty glass.

Empty?

"What do you mean?"

"This," said the girl. "The powder in the glass. Medicine, I suppose, madam."

The breakfast tray clattered perilously as Rue pushed it aside and scrambled out of bed.

"Let me see."

She took it in her fingers—as she ought not to have done. She looked incredulously at the small sifting of a kind of gray-white powder in the bottom of the glass.

"What—what is it, madam? You look so—— I'd better call Doctor." Rachel started for the door.

Rue was still standing there in white pajamas and white bed jacket like a frightened child when Brule came—hurriedly, half-shaven, in his dressing gown. He took the glass and looked and said to the maid:

"All right. You can go."

Rachel went, reluctantly. Brule closed the door.

"Good lord, Rue, what is this?"

"I don't know. I don't know—except I couldn't see the clock."

She told him, stammering, not quite coherent. When she'd finished he said: "Get back into bed. You're trembling with cold. Here."

He put down the glass and held the tray while she clambered into bed again, and then put it across her lap. He adjusted her pillows and pulled an eiderdown up over her feet.

And went back to look at the glass.

"What is it, Brule?"

"I don't know. But if it's what I think it is.... Well, we'll soon know. I'll take it to a place I know and find out exactly what's in it. Meantime...." He frowned. "Rue, I'd better tell you." He came back to stand beside her.

"Tell me what?"

"About last night. I was called away on the first phony errand in my experience."

"You—I thought you went to the hospital."

"No, I didn't," said Brule grimly. "They—whoever telephoned said they were afraid to move the fellow, said I'd have to come out there; gave me an address out toward Cicero. I didn't like the sound of it, but I never thought of it being a plant. Nothing happened to me; I just found the street finally and went up and down hunting the number that had been given me."

Quickening alarm must have shown in her face, for he interrupted himself to say reassuringly: "I wasn't alone. I got Kendal up to take me; I'm not such a fool as to go to a new patient and an address I never heard before, in the middle of the night. And besides all that, the policeman somebody left here in the house conceived it to be his duty to go along. We searched up and down the street but there was no such number!"

"Brule!" It was a wavering, breathless little sound composed of relief and terror.

He smiled and leaned over to pat her hand as it lay on the white silk-covered eiderdown.

"It's okay. I'll never do it again——" He stopped abruptly. Conjecture was in his eyes. "Good God, Rue. I never thought of that. It was to get me away from the house—me and the cop downstairs. It was while I was gone——"

After a moment she said: "But I don't know anything about Crystal's murder. Julie didn't tell me anything. There's nothing——"

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

Brule sat down on the edge of the bed.

"Listen, Rue. It's occurred to you, of course, that you were not supposed to see Julie; if Gross had not happened into the front of the house just when he did, Julie would have died before she spoke to you. Somewhere there's been a careful planning of time—time for the poison to take effect. Time to make sure Julie was definitely removed from whoever murdered her before the poison could kill her. Time to prevent her from reaching you—and she wouldn't have reached you if Gross hadn't found her." He paused and said: "You must know something. Think. Think hard."

"I can't, Brule. There's nothing. I told you exactly that Julie told me——" What was it Andy had said? Something about not telling anyone what Julie had said; something that warned her without warning her. Something that....

Had he meant Brule? Had he tried to warn her against Brule, even while Andy himself was still too loyal and too faithful to Brule openly to express his doubts?

Brule had been in the house when Crystal died. Brule had frankly admitted (or was it so frank an admission as it had managed to sound?) that he'd doubted the publicly offered and publicly accepted reason for her death. Brule had coolly and calmly gone about covering up any possible query concerning it.

Brule said slowly:

"It would be an incredibly daring thing to do; and I don't understand...." He didn't finish that either. He rose and said instead, crisply: "We'll not tell the police of this, Rue. Or anyone. Not yet. It may prove to be nothing; I'll take the glass. All right, my dear. You'd better stay in the house today. I mean, don't take any chances."

He went away without another word. Half an hour later he knocked and put his head briefly in the doorway to say he was going to the hospital.

"Don't look at the papers, Rue," he said as if they were unimportant. "It's just one of those things; a Roman holiday. I told Gross to throw them out."

That was like Brule; to tell her not to look at the newspapers and in the next breath explain that she had no choice because they'd already been thrown out.

But one was on the hall table when she went downstairs, and she read it, slowly, with cringing recognition. It was a late edition, however, and stated baldly the decisions such as they were, of the police department.

Juliet Garder had been murdered; they said it flatly, in black and white. And her murder had followed the opening of a police inquiry into the death, a year ago, of Crystal Hatterick. A third statement emerged from the welter of print, and that was that the theory held by the police was that both women had been murdered by the same person and by much the same means and that by concentrating on the murder of Juliet Garder they would solve also the problem of the murder of Crystal Hatterick.

An inquest would be held the next day.

Inquest. Rue's breath caught; that meant she would have to attend as a witness. That meant—or migh mean anything.

Andy came about noon; he had news, he told her at once, and closed the door of the library so that no one would hear.

"You've read the papers?"

"Yes."

"Listen, Rue. I've been at the hospital this morning. Do you know who I saw the moment I got out of my car? A detective. Standing at the door. There were others inside. They'd been to the nurses' dormitory; they'd gone through all of Julie's things; they'd taken letters and papers from her room to be examined. The nurses told me they'd been questioning, questioning...... They've been at my place already this morning; they've been at the office talking to the office girl, talking to the office nurse, talking to the elevator boys and doorman. They—Lord, Rue, it's like a trap—hundreds of traps everywhere. But the whole, horrible meaning is that they are going to arrest you."

"Andy——"

"Yes. They'll have to; there's nothing else to do. It's—why, they've questioned the nurses all about you. It's all over the hospital. They've asked about you and Brule. How well you'd known each other before Crystal's death, about your sudden marriage; they've looked up your record at the hospital from the time you entered it eight years ago. They've pried and questioned and tried to induce people to say damaging things, and, Rue—Rue, my darling, let's leave. Before you're arrested. It's a matter of hours, and I can't stand to see you——" He stopped. She was standing facing him, sickened by the pictures his words put before her. He took her in his arms and pleaded with her. "Come with me, dear. What does any of it matter if we have each other safe? You don't know, Rue, how horrible it'll be for you. The things people will say; the newspapers, the accusations. They'll say—they are saying now that it was because you and Brule wanted to marry that—Crystal was killed."

"Andy. You know that isn't true." Her voice was harsh and strained.

"Of course I know it isn't true! I've known all along."

Athletes from East Grounds Win Playground Championship For 1st Time Since Games Held Defeated Athletes from West End by Total of 19 Points

FINE COMPETITION

Bill Pigden, Versatile Athlete, Captures Senior Title for City

Featured bly some splendid exhibitions on the part of the youthful athletes of both sexes, East End Playgrounds yesterday won the track and field pennant, emblematic of the playgrounds championship of Belleville, for the first time since the inception of the games when they defeated West End by a total of 19 points. West garnered 95 against their opponents 114.

Bill Pidgen, promising young athlete of East Playgrounds, won the senior boys' title, with Raymond Reid, West Playgrounds youth annexing the junior championship. Runner-up in the senior division was Wilfred Mills, East Hill, who chased Pigden to the wire only to lose the title by four points. Eighteen points behind Reid in the junior battle was Bob Wilson.

New Champion

The new girls' champion is Norma Maker of East Grounds, whose splendid showing was one of the main contributing factors in the East Grounds win.

The fine success of the field day was in no small way due to the fine ability and activities of W. A. Bowerman director of playgrounds. His training ability and efforts in organization stood him well in the events which were run off with almost clock-like precision. He was assisted by Don Grant, supervisor of East Playgrounds.

The official scorekeepers were Marjorie Hitchon and Lois Bankier, assistant supervisors of the playgrounds.

BELLEVILLE JRS. DEFEAT OSHAWA IN PLAYOFFS 10-6

Steve Hook Allows Nine Hits and Mates Hit Well Behind Him

PLAY THURSDAY

Oshawa Held Off the Score Sheet for First Five Frames

Interspersing spot pitching and clutch hitting, the Belleville Citizen Juniors stepped into Oshawa and won the first game of the first round junior O.A.S.A. playdowns by a 10 to 6 score. Although out-hit slightly by the Motor City kids, Cy Young's Belleville charges played sterling defensive ball behind the smart pitching of Steve Hook, to assure victory. The return game wil be played in Belleville on Thursday evening.

Belleville scored consistantly in the first four frames to lead 7-0 going into the fourth and from that point in they played the homesters rather even with some fine defensive play behind Hook's hurling. Mullen, the Oshawa hurler, restricted the Balleville squad to eight hits, but they were clutch bingles and came with runners on the paths to count runs, while Hook was touched for nine hits, but he scattered them well. Mullen struck out 11 to Hook's five, but walked six Belleville batters.

Goyer Hits Homer

Goyer, with a home run and single and Samain with three timely hits, two of them doubles, paced the Belleville hitters. Respond, Oshawa's first baseman, led the homesters as he hit for the ciruit and got two singles for three hits in five tries. Mullens, their pitcher, helped his own cause with two safeties. Although the Oshawa kids opened a torrid barrage in the last two innings in an effort to pull out a win, Hook and his team mates proved equal to the occasion and successfully stemmed the tide.

LOU AMBERS

Herkimer Hurricane Regains Lightweight Title by Winning Bout Over Henry Armstrong

Lou Ambers Lost His Title to Hammering Henry a Year Ago

FAST, CLEVER, BOUT

Armstrong Had 5 Rounds Taken from Him by Low Blows

By WHITNEY MARTIN

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Aug. 23 (AP)—The stage was set today for a welterweight championship fight Nov. 1 between Henry Armstrong and Lou Ambers, but there was divided opinion among the 29,088 fans who saw Ambers regain his lightweight crown from Armstrong last night as to the merit of the setting.

Ambers won the unanimous decision at the end of 15 rounds of toe-to-toe and head-to-head mauling at Yankee Stadium. The welterweight title bout hinged on an Ambers' victory, all of which worked out very nicely for Promoter Mike Jacobs, but caused no end of dispute among ringsiders as to just who was entitled to the verdict.

It was that kind of fight—two little men with big hearts meeting round after round in the centre of the ring and throwing gloves everywhere which, on Armstrong's part, included low.

Decision Swing by Low Blows

In fact, the low blows swung the decision toward Ambers. Five rounds were taken away from the dusky hurricane on that account. The Associated Press score card gave six rounds to Armstrong and nine to Ambers, the latter including those won on low punches. Ambers might have won some of those won on low punches. Ambers might have won some of these on his merits, but the fact remains there were enough taken away from Armstrong to swing the decision.

From the opening gong—when the little coast windmill sidled from his corner and started those tireless arms in motion—there wasn't a dull moment.

Armstrong started to bleed from a cut eye in the third round, Ambers' eyebrow crimsoned in the fourth, and from that point on it was a gory spectacle.

Ambers Punished

In the head-to-head exchanges, Armstrong, wtih his short, jolting blows, usually had the best of it. But when Ambers jigged away and started sharpshooting he set the pace, his left hook often catching the eternally stalking Armstrong off balance.

The second, fifth, seventh, ninth and eleventh rounds were taken from Armstrong because of low blows.

Ambers said later that the low blows did not bother him much. Armstrong complained of what he claimed were Ambers' thumbing tactics, pointing to swollen and inflamed eyes as proof. His manager, Eddie Mead, was outspoken in his criticism of Ambers' tactics, and threatened to have no part of the welterweight championship fight, contracts for which already have been signed.

The 29,088 fans paid $137,925.77 at the gate. The net receipts were $116,396.85.

ROYALS, TORONTO STAGING BATTLE FOR LAST PLACE

Teams Split Double Bill and Leafs Remain in Cellar Spot

GIANTS BEATEN

Buffalo Bisons and Syracuse Edged Closer to Leader by Wins

(By The Associated Press)

Down at the bottom of the International League standings, Toronto Maple Leafs and Montreal Royals are waging as fierce a struggle for a seventh place as Jersey City Giants and Rochester Red-Wings are for the top of the heap.

With Burleigh Grimes and Tony Lazzeri, former teammates with New York Yankees for a brief span facing each other as rival pilots in their first year of International League baseball, both clubs seem determined to finish out of the cellar to save face for the managers.

So far, the Royals have the edge over the Leafs, having beaten them nine out of 16 games, and are two games to the good in the standings. As neither entry has any chance of making the playoffs, it will be a mad scromble from here on in to escape the booby prize.

Last night, they split a double header, with Montreal taking the opener 16-1, but losing out in the finale, 6-3. Rogers held the Leafs to seven hits in the first game, while the Roylas pounded Earl Caldwell and John Berly for nineteen safeties. Goody Rosen and Gene Hasson led the attack. Hasson collected a double and three singles, while Goody knocked in three runs with a triple and four singles.

Buffalo Bisons and Syracuse edged nearer to the league leading Jersey City Giants by turning back Newark Bears and Rochester Red Wings. The Bisons topped Rochester, 9-7, while the Chiefs nosed out the Bears, 6-5.

Baltimore Orioles knocked off the slipping Jersey Giants for the third straight time, 2-1. Dick Midkiff and Rollie Stiles each pitched six-hit ball, but Stiles yielded two runs in the first when Murray Howell's doube brought in Buck Jordan and Nick Etten.

CARDINALS LOSE BROWN'S SERVICE THROUGH INJURY

Second Baseman Collides With Mize and Knocked Unconscious

REDS BEATEN

Cardinals Lost No Ground in Race for Top of National Loop

By JUDSON BAILEY

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Injuries, always baseball's bugaboo, may decide the National League pennant. It had begun to look as if nothing else but time could.

St. Louis Cardinals lost Infielder Jimmy Brown yesterday as well as their second straight ball game to Brooklyn Dodgers, 8-5. Even though Brown may be back in the lineup within a week, his absence isn't going to help the Cardinals' challenge during this critical interval. Only Monday, Manager Ray Blades singled out Brown as the key to the Redbirds' rampage.

Collided With Mize

The little shortstop-second baseman collided with Johnny Mize as they raced to take a throw from the outfield. Mize wasn't hurt, but Brown was knocked unconscious and will be in hospital three or four days.

The Cards have had only one other injury this season—the mishap to Pepper Martin's leg which kept him out of most of the June games. Cincinnati Reds, on the other hand, have been staggering along without Ival Goodman, Bill Werber, Harry Craft, Lou Myers and Lonnie Frey, at one time or another.

The Reds were shut out by the Phillies, 4-0, yesterday as Kirby Higbe recorded his fourth consecutive victory on five-hit pitching.

Home Runs Help

Home runs gave New York Giants an early start against Chicago Cubs and Cliff Melton protected it with eight-hit hurling to win his third in a row, 4-2.

Pittsburgh Pirates saved the western clubs from a shutout by belting Boston Bees, 8-2, with a 14-hit attack led by Bill Brubaker and Elbie Fletcher.

Half the games in the American League were played under lights. New York Yankies crushed Chicago White Sox, 14-5, with five home runs and Rookie Marius Russo's seven-hit pitching.

Bobby Feller earned his 18th victory in a 6-4 affair the Cleveland Indians took from the Washington Senators. Feller gave up nine hits, but the tribe produced an attack of its own and scored all its runs in the sixth inning.

In the day games, Ted Williams and Jimmy Foxx slugged Boston Red Sox to a 10-3 triumph over the St. Louis Browns. Charley Gehringer returned to the Detroit lineup to lead the Tigers to a 9-4 decision over Philadelphia Athletics.

CEMENTMEN WIN THIRD O. A. S. A. TUSSLE 12 TO 5

Point Anne Eliminate Deseronto in Third and Deciding Game

WINNERS ADVANCE

Garnering in six runs in the initial two frames, the Point Anne "Cementmen" coasted in to a 12 to 5 win over Deseronto in a third and final O.A.S.A. play-off game at Point Anne last evening. The Cementmen advanced to the second round of the provincial softball playdowns by virtue of their eliminating the Deseronto nine.

"Ding" Luffman, Point Anne's ace hurler, who had a victory and loss with Deseronto, ascended the mound for a third trial and scattered 11 Deseronto hits masterly, only being in trouble in the seventh as the visitors touched him for five hits and four runs. Hits by Bennett and Green gave the homesters two in the first, while Hutchings, Genereaux, Whitehead and Bennett hit in the second to count four more and although the Cementmen were held fairly well in check for a few subsequent innings, they broke out with a batting splurge in the ninth to score four more. Fraser, Deseronto's pitcher, was found for 16 safe hits.

Lusty Hitting

Genereaux and Hutchings with three hits each paced the Cementmen on the offensive, as Whitehead, Bennett and Loft connected for two timely hits each. Detlor, Deseronto's hard-hitting centre fielder, wielded a most potent bat getting three of Deseronto's hits while C. Jackson accounted for two. Every member of the losers, except Hughes, hit safely once. The lineups:

Deseronto: Hopkins rf; Fraser p; Jackson rf; Lindsay 2b; Hughes ss; Green 3b; C. Jackson 1b; Culhane c; Detlor cf and Brant.

Point Anne: Genereaux cf; Whitehead ss; Bennett rf; Green c; Gaulin 1b; Loft 3b; Hutchings lf; Whalen 2b; and Luffman p.

FLYERS TROUNCE BELLEVILLE 10-6 IN PLAY-OFF

Locals Kick Ball Around for Nine Costly Errors in Defeat

15 MISCUES

Loosely Played Game Sees Locals Outhit Airmen 15 to 11

Booting the spheriod around the diamond for nine costly errors, the Belleville "Orfuns" dropped the first game of the Bay of Quinte League play-offs to the R.C.A.F. "Flyers" by a 10 to 6 score at the Fair Grounds last evening. The Belleville nine outhit the "flying men" 15 to 11, but still left an even dozen base runners stranded on the runways as they failed miserably both with clutch hitting and defensively, as practically all of their miscues entered materially into the Flyers' ultimate score sheet. The game was terminated in the eighth on account of darkness.

Joe Kelleher started for the homesters, but was derricked in the sixth following three successive hits, Chuck Barriage being rushed to the mound. Barriage succeeded in momentarily halting Skipper Laut's Airmen, but later fell victim to a series of errors on the part of his team mates and was chalked up with a loss. Elongated Harry Dole, showed some exceptionally fine spot pitching for the winners, especially in the sixth and eighth as he left three Bellelile runners stranded. A total of 15 errors were committed in all, Belleville kicking in with nine.

The Scoring

The Air Force opened with three runs in the initial frame without the resemblance of a hit being registered. A hit batter, walks and a brace of errors did the trick. Belleville forged to a 5-4 lead in the third after scoring two in the second, on hits by Riggs, Churchill, McQuaid and Jarrell, interspersed with two errors. The Flyers salted the piece away in the seventh as they scored three unearned runs. Lockyer opened with a double and before Belleville stopped booting the ball around on the subsequent batters three runs had scored. Belleville's big chance came in the eighth when with three on and two out, Weeks rolled to the pitcher.

Little, Empson and Churchill had three hits each for Belleville, while Lockyer manged out a double and Crawford and Oleskivis hit two singles each for the Air Force, as every member of the visitors counted at least one hit. Dole struck out five and walked one while Kelleher and Barriage whiffed three each. The series resumes at the Airport on Thursday.

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

with

Ken J. Colling.

There seems to have been a vast difference of opinion regarding Monday night's City League Softball final between Point Anne and the Shell-Aajmaa. "Bubby" Gaulin, mentor of the Cementmen personally assured us yesterday he was of the opinion that providing Deseronto beat Point Anne last Saturday the City League series would not commence until today, as the Cementmen had to play a third game versus Deseronto on Tuesday. "Had we won on Saturday we would have kept Monday night's playing date. Why, even Frank Sedore and Nicky Sero of the "Oilers," were at our Monday night practice in Point Anne, which would indicate they were acquainted with these facts," explained Gaulin. Actually it would seem that apparently Point Anne was justified in not appearing Monday night, as they had received permission to postpone the City League finals if defeated by Deseronto and naturally acted on such permission. However, the entire matter has been amicably settled and the series will egt under way this evening with the "Oilers" and "Cementmen" meeting at Coleman Flats.

If we ever saw a ball game handed to the opposition on the proverbial silver platter it was last night when the local "Orfuns" literally presented the Air Force with the first Quinte League play-off fixture to the tune of 10 to 6. Of ourse both clubs fielded miserably, but the locals completely out-shone Skipper Laut's "Flyers" when it came to kicking the pellet around. There was an exact total of 15 errors committed, of which the locals quite indifferently snatched nine of them. The official box score is quite conclusive—Belleville out-hit the Flyers 15 to 11 and had an even dozen stranded on the runways, so there is no doubt but that their nine errors lost the game for them. About the only way they can hope to redeem themselves in the eyes of the fans is to win tomorrow's game at the Air Port.

There was some lusty clubbing going on at the same time. For instance Churchill, Empson and Little had three hits each for the homesters, while Lockyer bagged a trio for the Airmen, but the feature of the game was the spot pitching of elongated Harry Dole of the Flyers. Dole's fine hurling efforts in the seventh and eighth, when he left three Belleville runners stranded in each case, was the result of good pitching, while Chuck Barriage who relieved Kelleher in the sixth, was deserving of a better fate, as the loss was in no way Barriage's fault. It was simply a case of repeated errors, that beat Barriage. Then again the locals were guilty of literally throwing away runs in the early stages simply because they would not slide the bases. Coud it be they were afraid of getting their uniforms soiled?

As was expected the Point Anne "Cementmen" quite handily disposed of Deseronto 12 to 5 last night and in so doing advanced to the second round of the O.A.S.A. playdowns. "Ding" Luffman hurled his third game of the series scattering 11 hits splendidly, as his team mates cuffed Fraser, Deseronto's moundsman, for 16 safeties.

Belleville's teen-aged athletes from the city playgrounds competed in their anual track and field meet yesterday with the East Belleville ground winning the day's honors for the first time since the playgrounds were incepted. The honors won by East Belleville were perhaps the direct result of the efforts of Norma Maker, senior girls' champion and Bill Pigden, the senior boys' titleholder. The intermediate boys' crown was won by a West Belleville boy, Raymond Reid. The meet was of the conventional track and field nature, all of the events staged by the larger meets being included on the program arranged by W. A. Bowerman, city director of playgrounds. These annual teen-aged athletic meets prove the value of competitive sports in a city and should be further encouraged in the future.

Lou Ambers who has never lost a return bout, retained that record as he regained the lightweight boxing crown from Henry Armstrong in ing crown from enry Armstrong in a bout that saw perpetual motion of leather covered fists last night. Armstrong lost five rounds through fouls and also his first fight in New York, but Ambers was not to be denied, as he literally battered "Hammerin' Hank" into defeat in a thrilling 15 round fight.

The Cardinals could have gained much ground with a victory yesterday, but the battling Dodgers trounced Ray Blades' Mound City charges again yesterday, as the Reds were losing to the Phillies, which must have been a bitter dose to the Redlegs. There were no hanges in the majors yesterday as the Red Sox won over the Browns and the Yanks trimmed the White Sox.

Cy Young's good junior softball team played sterling ball in Oshawa to win 10-6 in their first O.A.S.A. play-off. The kids came through in grand style both defensively and with some fine clutch hitting. Steve Hook hurled steady ball, scattering ten hits nicely and the top half of the batting order did the pill-punishing, which is as it should be. The Oshawa kids play the return game at the Flats on Thursday, when we expect to see a tidy softball tussle. "The locals played the best game they've turned in this year and deserved to win, but they'll have to repeat that style of softball to win the second game, as Oshawa has a smart tem," predicted "Red" Townsend, who accompanied the kids.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was taking a walk with pop for his health, and pop said, Well, can belileve my eyes, or is my lifelong ambition about to be realized?

Meaning a swell looking yellow shirt in a store window with gold printing saying, Ben, Everyhting For Men, and pop said, I never fully realized it before, but I've always wanted to own a yellow shirt, perhaps that's what's been holding me back?

And we went in the store, the man saying, Yes sir? and pop saying, That yellow shirt in the window.

Daffodil, the man said, and pop said, I beg your pardon? and the man said, That's the shade.

How much is that shade? pop said, and the man said, Eight 50.

O, thanks, I just had a minute and I thought I'd drop in socially and inquire about that daffodil, I mean that shirt, pop said starting to walk out again, and the man said, Trat's quite all right, drop in any time and browse around, there's never any obligation to buy at Ben's. However, I would like to show you my line of foulard and all wool ties, he said.

Well really, I have so many ties already that I'm constantly being asked in a joking way why I dont open a tie shop myself, pop said, and the man said, Hankerchiffs, socks, collars, cuff links, a nice walking stick?

Not any, thanks, pop said, and the man said, I'm closing out my line of fine silk underware, and pop said, I closed out mine just after I got married.

A nice linen cap, something novel in shirt studs? the man said, and pop said, Say, give me a pair ot garters, will you? and the man said, Cheerfully.

Wich he did and pop payed for them and quick went out, me asking him if he really needed new garters and him saying no.

Current Offerings at Belleville Theatres

Advance Information on Screen Offerings Supplied by Theatre Managers.

AT THE BELLE

"Maisie"

Robert Young and Ann Sothern as a respective ranch manager and a honky-tonk show-girl stranded in a Wyoming carnival town, are the chief protagonists of "Maisie", the smartly-paced, clever-dialogued and well-directed picture showing next at the Belle Theatre.

Both Young and Miss Sothern show what they can do with meaty roles and entertainment-packed situations in this story which, although placed against eye-striking and picturesque backgrounds of the cattle country, is decidedly not a Western in the accepted sense, but is an original and highly modern story of four people placed in dramatic juxtaposition.

Young in a straight dramatic part makes a decided departure from his more familiar rib-tickling characterizations and proves himself an actor who knows his business. As the woman-hating ranch manager who through circumstantial evidence is put on trial for the murder of his boss, he gives a straightforward, convincing and sharply-engrained performance. It is an acting assignment which is at all times convincing and telling.

Miss Sothern, likewise, shows herself to be a performer of more than ordinary talent, her part of the impertinent, independent, slightly rowdy but at all times sincere honky-tonk girl keying up every scene in which she appears. The girl couldn't be more lifelike and under Miss Sothern's deft interpretation wins the sympathy and approval of the audience from her first appearane to the final fadeout.

Also of considerable aid to 'Maisie' is the work of Ruth Husey, Ian Hunter and Cliff Edwards and Art Mix, seen in Belleville vicinity with Cole Bros. Circus, in the supporting roles.

"Stronger Than Desire"

"Stronger Than Desire" dramatic story of New York society life, is the companion feature attraction, bringing Virginia Bruce and Walter Pidgeon, who scored in "Society Lawyer," to the screen once more as a romantic team. The picture is a tense modern life theme into which blackmail and a murder mystery bring complications. Miss Bruce and Pidgeon play a prosperous lawyer and his wife. When the wife suspects her husand of a flirtation she retaliates with one on her own account, which leads to her being involved in crime. Another woman faces trial for the murder, and the husand, through unearthing clews and a clever move in court, extricates them both. Ann Dvorak, as the murdered man's wife, Lee Bowman, Ilka Chase, Rita Johnson, Richard Lane and Ann Todd are among the principals.

June Lang and Brian Aherne who are featured with Victor McLaglen in "Captain Fury," now playing at the McCarthy Theatre.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Captain Fury"

Entertainment surpassing your fondest dreams of adventure, romance, comedy and rich drama is presented in Hal Roach's greatest screen achievement, "Captain Fury" which is now the current feature attraction in addition to an exceptionally fine selection of short subjects including a technicolor merrie melody cartoon entitled "Dangerous Dan McFoo", an exciting Floyd Gibbon's true adventure story, "Toils of the Law" and "Gadgeteers" a screen novelty treat now playing at the McCarthy Theatre.

"Captain Fury" co-stars Brian Aherne, Victor McLaglen and June Lang, a trio that give the production not only big name stars, but stars that fit perfect in the background of he story. Other very important featured players are as follows: Paul Lucas, John Carradine, George Zucco, Virginia Field, Douglas Dumbrille and Mary Gordon. "Captain Fury" which unfolds its story with lightning speed, suspenseful adventure and swift drama, was given both the production knowledge and the masterful direction of Mr. Hal Roach personally.

"Too Many Wives"

Anne Shirley, John Morley and Gene Lockhart, former member of the Belleville Kilties Band head the cast of "Too Many Wives" the comedy-half of the excellent twin-feature program coming next to the McCarthy Theatre. "Too Many Wives" is highly entertaining and offers a very hilarious brand of wholesome comedy from the first clips to the final fadeout, making an excellent companion feature to George O'Brien's latest musical-western production, "The Renegade Ranger" which also features lovely Rita Rayworth of "Only Angels have Wings" fame, Tim Holt and Ray Whitley who brings to the screen the cowboy songs that does your heart good. Both "Too Many Wives" and "The Renegade Ranger" are top hits and feature productions that make up a swell show. In addition Walt Disney's Mickey Mouse technicolor cartoon entitled "The Whalers" is also coming next to the McCarthy Theatre.

Club Expects to Put Calgary Back in Limelight of Grid Fame

By GORDON BATEMAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Calgary, Aug. 23 (CP)—Ardent football fans predict the start of a new era in Calgary when Bronks trot out under the floodlights at Mewata Stadium here Friday night to open the Western Interprovincial Union season against Winnipeg Blue Bombers.

Bronks, after years of futile efforts to regain the Western Senior championship last held by Calgary 28 years ago, begin with a new coach, the former Santa Clara University captain, Dick Haughian, six new products of United States' gridirons.

"If the two American players to report this week are equal to any two of the four men already brought in, our club will be stronger than a year ago," said Haughian, who succeeds Carl Cronin, former Notre Dame star.

Leading the reinforcements is Willard (Bizz) Bibsing, former University of Mississippi player who can carry the ball, throw passes and punt an average of 45 yards or better.

A pair of huskies from University of Loyola, Los Angeles, are Bob Zwank, a middle, and Wolfie Hughes, quarterback. Snapback Johnny McKee is from Villanova University, Philadelphia, and Buck Baker, 235 pound inside from Gonzaga University, Spokane, Wash.

Joe Turner, Calgary bred, a backfielder, will return in October to Queen's University, Kingston, for a second year.

Line coach Bob Cosgrove, former Montana University star will play one wing and Zwank on the other. Bob Harrison and Johnny Lawrence two of Calgary's best homegrown gridders, will be at inside with McKee at snap.

Charley Gehringer, Tigers: Hit home run and double in return to Detroit lineup against Athletics.

Marius Russo, Yankees: Held White Sox to seven hits and participated in New York's 14-run attack by driving in three counters.

Sports Roundup

By EDDIE BRIETZ
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Aug. 23 (AP)—Young Alfred G. Vanderbilt is working on a fall match race between the cream of the United States three-year-olds and the better handicap horses.... It would be held either here, or in Maryland...... Possible entries include Challedon, Johnstown, Eight Thirty, Cravat and Kayak II......Henry Cotton writes friends this year's British Ryder Cup team will be the strongest ever to invade the United States.... If the Cincinnati Reds buy Syracuse Chiefs, Manager Dick Porter probably will go to San Diego to work for his old boss, Jack Corbett.

Sammy Snead, who has been having plenty of trouble with his teeth, will be on the golfing sidelines the rest of the summer...... Lou Brix, manager of Sixto Escobar, has taken Henry Watingy, classy young New Orleans bantam under his wing.... The Reds and Cardinals travelled east on the same train but nary a Red spoke to a Card and vice versa.... Jimmy Braddock will be Nova's chief second against Galento.

One of the Detroit papers scooped the country with this announcement: "It's rumored the Chicago Cubs will send Bill Jurges to Los Angeles to manage their Farm Club ......Jurges has been anything but a success playing short for Chicago this year".... The last part of the statement is asolutely correct.

They're still talking about Ambers vs. Armstrong.... Plenty of smart fight men will tell you Armstrong won.... Anyway, it was'nt the same old Armstrong.... He still throws plenty of punches, but he's lost a lot of his steam and zing...... The truth is, Henry is is no longer a legitimate lightweight and can't make 135 pounds and be strong.... Ambers was stronger and fought a game, smart fight.... Eddie Mead's threats to blow up boxing her because of the verdict can be laughed off...... He'll feel much better in a couple of months when the two boys hook up for the welterweight title.

Treasure

By MADELEINE DIAZ

Sun reflected hotly from the yellow, sandy beach of the little island where Crandon Hawley and Helen Gregory walked.

Crandon was conscious of Helen's beauty.

But: "Steady there!" he said to himself. "Girls like that aren't for little boys like you, Crandon, my man."

To the girl he was a charming, light-hearted, not at all serious companion. Her pretty wiles seemed to get her nowhere with him. For Helen exerted herself as she had never before to gain the real interest of this strange man beside her.

They were—and had been for a week—guests at the same house party. Crandon, just through medical school, was taking a month's rest.

Helen was the daughter of wealth. Her clothes, her manner, everything about her showed that she came from a background if not higher intellectually than Crandon's, at least higher from the point of view of money.

It was obvious that Crandon must not give in to his love for Helen. It wasn't that she was well to do alone, that held him back. But to him she seemed about the most useless girl he had ever seen.

"Was buried treasure really found here?" she asked, as they rounded a point of the tiny, unihabited island.

"That's the story. Might as well believe it. Some of Captain Kidd's He blew down this way and packed it here somewhere. And there's supposed to be some of it still here."

"Yes. Mrs. Ellis told me. A man and a girl will find it—"

"Yeah—so she said. Nice story for a hostess to keep tucked away in her box of tricks. Come on, race you to that next pine tree. Maybe it's there."

Better get away from anything sentimental, thought Crandon, as he watched the fleet little green figure skimming the sand at his side. Suddenly he was furious with her—furious with her for being so lovely so alluring. And so utterly useless. And furious with himself and with that year of hard work and little money ahead of him. Furious too with himself for turning away from love—running away from it he thought bitterly, just as he was running away from Helen. Out of the corner of his eye he could see her gradually lose distance as he really tried to outrun her. He turned his head to look back—and didn't see a sand hummock in front of him, tripped over it and crashed.

The next thing he knew he was lying in an uncomfortable jumble on the sand, and sharp pains in his ankle told him that at least a bad sprain would pay him for his carelessness. In a second Helen was at his side.

"Are you all right?" she asked, as he sat up dizzily.

"Yes. My ankle's a bit done for, though," he answered.

Helen looked at his drawn, paling face, and then knelt down beside him, putting her arm behind his shoulder. For a moment Crandon let his head sink against her soft, warm body—and for a moment he forgot the pain in his ankle as well as his vow that he would leave Helen and the house party without letting her know he loved her.

But she didn't hear his inarticulate murmur of endearment. All her attention was fixed on his ankle.

"It needs bandaging, doesn't it?" she asked.

Yes—but—"

You think can't help—can't do anything useful, don't you?" Her tone was a bit scornful. "Wait and see." She was gone like a flash and in a few seconds came back with the lunch basket, Crandon had been carrying on his back. "It spilled off, but it isn't hurt," she said, rummaging in it. Quicky with the help of a knife, she tore two big damask napkins into good bandage material and then, under Crandon's directions, bandaged the swelling and very painful ankle. Crandon, relieved by the taut bandage, became less intense.

"That's a darned good bandage. Where did you learn how to do it?"

"Where did I learn how? Oh, first aid classes at school." She flushed with pleasure. "Now you wait here till I get help." She gave Crandon a drink of cold water from the thermos bottle, scooped and piled up sand into a fairly comfortable rest for his back, and told him she would go back to the speed boat that had brought them to the island—they had tied it in a little cove half a mile up the beach—and take it to the mainland for help.

"I'll be back soon," she said, smiling at him. "And here's the thermos of coffee and the cold water. You lie quietly and don't worry about me. I'll manage the boat." He reached out a troubled, apologetic hand, but she was out of reach, speeding down the beach without a backward look.

Help came in an hour. His host, the chauffeur and a handy man with on improvised stretcher, and Helen. They got him on the boat without much trouble. Helen sat beside him on the trip home.

"Are you afraid to be poor, Helen?" he said softly, capturing a small, cool hand. He had realized, in that dreaming, waiting hour, what her answer would be.

"No," she answered. "And you realized—that I'm not just—useless?"

"Yes—I saw that. But that's not what really matters," he said. "We found the treasure on the island, didn't we?"

"Yes," said Helen, bending swift lips down to his.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Aug. 23—(CP)—Base Metal and Western Oil shares held steady today on Toronto Exchange. Golds and Industrials were showing minor losses. The market continued hesitant and only 185,000 shares changed hands.

Senior golds showed little change, Preston, Kerr-Addison, Aunor, Kirkland Lake and a few others lost some ground. Base metals were fairly strong with only Nickel among the leaders, showing mild weakness.

In the Industrials the tone was a bit heavy for Steels, Utilities and Foods. Home Oil and Calgary-Edmonton dropped about 5 cents. Other Western Oils were steady.

International Situation Affects Outlook for Canadian Apples

Fruit Buyers in Old Country Offer Lower Advance Payment

CROP SMALLER

Apple growers of the Central and Eastern districts are this season facing one of their most trying times, it was stated today by Mr. C. T. Stevenson, local senior inspector of the Fruits and Vegetables branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

The present international situation has been directly responsible for the threat of loss of a major portion of the apple crop through the district unless conditions on the continent immediately improve, it was reported.

During normal years, it was explained, fruit buyers of the Old Country through personal representation, or by appointed agent, have in the past made early provision for sale of the apple crop in Ontario. Usually an advance of from two to three dollars per barrel has been authorized the growers, with added payment when the crop is sold. This year prices as low as one dollar and one and one half dollars have been offered by the overseas buyers and agents as an advance.

"The apple grower just doesn't know where he stands this year. He is faced with the threat of being unable to sell his crop at any price, or get rid of it at prices which won't pay for the growing. If he doesn't sell, then he may have to take the loss; there aren't enough cold storage places in the country to hold the apples until things get better", stated Mr. Stevenson.

It was estimated by the local inspector that Ontario's apple crop will be about three-quarters of the normal crop. The growth in orchards through the Trenton and Brighton areas has been reduced to about 40 per cent, but in the west the crop is higher. Prince Edward County crop will be featured by a heavy growth of some of the popular varieties, but a slim production in other varieties, it was reported.

CAR CRASHES AS REAR AXLE BREAKS

Spinning around topwise in the centre of the highway, after a rear axle had broken, a motor car driven by Miss Ann Higgins, Union, N.J., crashed into the ditch three miles east of Shannonville at noon today. Although the motor car was badly wrecked, the only injuries sustained was a back injury suffered by Mrs. W. Higgins, mother of the driver, Motorcycle Patrolman Sam Ervine anounced after investigations. Miss Higgins was proceeding westerly when without warning the rear axle of the vehicle broke. The car twirled around twice on the highway before spinning into the ditch.

WAR MEASURES

Mr. Mackenzie King issued his statement after telephoned conversations with party leaders in the House of Commons, including Conservative leader Manion and John Blackmore, leader of the Social Credit party. Efforts to get in touch with C.C.F. leader Woodsworth had not succeeded early this afternoon.

The Statement

The statement was as follows:

In the statement issued by the government of the United Kingdom last night and which appears in this morning's press, announcement was made that the United Kingdom parliament has been summoned to meet tomorrow at which time the government propose to invite both Houses to pass through all its stages The Emergency Powers (Defence) Bill. The effect of this will be to place the government in a position to take any necessary measures without delay should the situation require it.

An act of a similar character known as The War Measures Act was passed by the parliament of Canada in 1914. This act has never been repealed. It finds its place today as chapter 206 of the revised statutes of Canada, and is entitled "an act to confer certain powers upon the Governor-in-Council in the event of war, invasion or insurrection."

The provisions of this act are exceedingly comprehensive. They apply to war "real or apprehended." Were The War Measures Act not already upon our statutes, I would, in the existing circumstances have considered it advisable and necessary to summon parliament immediately for the purpose of the enactment of a similar statute.

Government in Position

However, with the provisions of the act what they are, the government is already in a position, should the situation require, to take any necessary precautionary measures without delay. For some time past, careful consideration has been given by the several government departments as to action that may be necessary in the event of an emergency.

While taking these measures of precaution, the Canadian Government, like the Government of the United Kingdom, remain of the opinion that "there is nothing in the difficulties that have arisen between Germany and Poland which would justify the use of force involving a European war with all its tragic consequences", and that there are "no questions in Europe which should not be capable of peaceful solution if only conditions of confidence could be restored".

Ready to Call Parliament

Should it become apparent that the efforts being made to preserve the peace of Europe are likely to be of no avail, parliament will be immediately summoned. With agencies of communication and transportation what they are today, it should be possible to have parliament meet within a week from the date of summons.

BRITAIN WON'T YIELD TO 'NERVES'

Added Tension Created by Russo - German Parleys Leaves Britons Steady

By Guy Rhoades

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Aug. 23.—(CP Cable)—Evening newspaper editorials and the man in the Street today reflected the nation's cool determination not to succumb in Europe's "war of nerves", in which further tension has been applied by the Russo-German political negotiations.

Some phlegmatic Britons still arranged their holidays while others grumbled because they thought it might be a good idea to postpone arrangements.

Inquiries at steamship booking offices by people anxious to leave the country have been light, officials said—so light it is difficult to separate them from normal inquiries in an unusually heavy trans-Atlantic tourist season.

Approve Cabinet's Stand

Three evening newspapers approved the Cabinet's statement yesterday reaffirming the government's determination to stand firmly by its promise to protect Poland if that country is attacked and resists.

The News (Independent) said Germany would make a serious error if her "scrap of paper mentality" induced her to believe the new set-up in Eastern Europe might cause Britain and France to change their minds about Poland.

The Star (Liberal) said if the announcement of Germany's Moscow negotiations were designed to affect this nation's nerves "it has completely failed in its purpose".

The Standard (Independent) suggested Adolf Hitler would be wise to consider the firmness of this country and France, "together with the other consequences of his action —the certain loss of his ally in the Far East and probably the loss of his ally at the corner of the Mediterranean which he has wasted so much treasure to gain."

None objected to the proposed Emergency Powers Bill although some expressed regret it should be necessary for parliament to pass such a measure.

Some Think War Won't Come

Citizens accustomed to recurrent European alarms and threats seemed in many instances to be convinced war would not come out of the present dispute.

A shipping official told this correspondent he did not believe there would be war for five years and said he thought Poland would realize she must be swallowed or smashed despite any help from this country and would prefer to be swallowed.

He, and almost everyone else apparently, is reconciled to the thought that war must come eventually but many are not convinced that this country is in a strategic position to save Poland because of the difficulty of getting troops there.

The shipping man claimed Britain should have sent an expeditionary force to Poland some time ago.

Some signs that criticism of Prime Minister Chamberlain is regaining the asperity of pre-Munich days are seen in occasional posters that "Chambelain must go".

KIWANIS CLUB TO HOLD CARNIVAL

Chairmen Elected for Various Committees Who Will Formulate Plans

Plans were outlined by Past President Albert Boynton at the Kiwanis Club luncheon on Tuesday for the holding of a street carnival by the Kiwanis Club on September 20th and 21st. The chairmen of the various committees were announced and a meeting of those chairmen will be held this week to start the ball rolling. Bruce Lattimer will be assistant to the General Chairman, Albert Boynton, while the other chairmen are: Games—Frank Domenico; Refreshments, Herby Muir and George Fordyce; Bingo—Ross Stiver; Popularity Contest—Joe Imlah and Carm. Guest; Dance—Ormonde Butler; Publicity—Morley Wyman; Construction—Bill Lynch and Arthur Sills; Finance—Cliff Baragar, George Griffin and Wallie Christie; Lighting—Ern. Finkle.

The special speaker at the luncheon, H. L. Fair, Agricultural Representative for Hastings County and introduced by Ormonde Butler, outlined the Boys' Club movement in the Dominion of Canada with particular reference to the progress of this work in Hastings County. He stated that in 1938 there were 2,663 clubs in Canada with a membership of 37,250. He outlined the nature of the clubs showing that they developed interest in the farm and home life and also prepared the members for better citizenship. The clubs dealt in boys and girls between 12 and 20, who did not proceed with a secondary school education.

He told how the Women's Institutes held leader courses and then started smaller clubs. The Representative stated there were three grain clubs in Hastings County, two calf clubs, one swine club and one foal club and in detail. Mr. Fair showed how these operated for the benefit of the boys and girls. The thanks of the club was expressed by Morley Wyman.

Fuehrer Demands

Arrangement Stated

If, however, Poland chose to settle peacefully, Germany would agree to an arrangement somewhat similar to the government of Bohemia and Moravia—that is, a Polish nation under German protectorate would be set up.

The memorandum was also said to have presented strongly the German viewpoint that neither Britain nor France has anything to say in whatever dealing Germany desires to carry on with Poland.

The document was understood to have been the second within two weeks that found its way to the Prime Minister.

The one to which Sir Nevile Henderson carried a reply today was said by these well-informed sources to have been passed to Mr. Chamberlain by a private individual who "stands close to the Prime Minister" and who "also enjoyed confidence in the highest Nazi circles."

No Discussion

Great reticence over Sir Nevile's trip was maintained in both German and British official quarters. The Propaganda Ministry said it could "not discuss the matter."

Feeling remained strong in high Nazi quarters today that a solution of the Polish question would come this week—some said within 48 hours.

On every hand indications mounted that a showdown in the German-Polish strife over the Free City of Danzig and Pomorze, the Polish Corridor, was impending.

"The German nation marches on," proclaimed Hitler's newspaper, Voelkischer Beobachter.

Germany's Foreign Minister, Joachim von Ribbentrop, and his close aides arrived at Moscow to conclude negotiations with the Soviet Union for a non-aggression pact.

The foreign office, as mirrored by the commentary, Dienst Aus Deutschland, held the view that Germany's sudden rapprochement with Russia had "opened the eyes" of Poland, Great Britain and France.

Authoritative Statement

Declaring the non-aggression pact negotiations had caused a turnabout in the political, economic and strategic status of Europe, this authoritative service said:—

"The chances for a solution of the present crisis therefore are now viewed by the Wilhelmstrasse (foreign office) as very much greater, insofar as, together with sober military calculations, an understanding for the justice of German revisionist demands in eastern Europe is growing in Poland and in the western democracies.

"Exactly in the light of the new situation, one must judge it as an urgent necessity for the guarantee of peace that the German demands be fulfilled swiftly and fully."

Next to columns of stories accusing the Poles of atrocities against German Nationals, the controlled press declared the Nazis now had returned to the foreign policy of Prince Otto von Bismarck. The Iron Chancellor's assertion, "we Germans fear God—and nothing else in the world," was recalled.

'Wise Policy' Shelved

The press emphasized that the "wise policy" of Bismarck, who first negotiated a "reinsurance treaty" with Russia in 1887, was abandoned by the "most imprudent and foolish measures" of Kaiser Wilhelm, now in exile at Doorn, The Netherlands.

German newspaper readers also were treated to a sight which was spectacular—considering Hitler's bitter fight against Communism in time past. Published side by side were photographs of the Soviet Premier and Foreign Commissar, Vyacheslaff Molotoff, and Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop.

Probably it was the first time since the Nazis came to power in 1933 that they had permitted the picture of a German leader to be used alongside that of a Communist. The caption: "Our picture shows Ribbentrop and Molotoff, the ministers of the countries which have decided to return to their traditional friendship."

Might Enlarge Talks

The well informed Essener National Zeitung, which stands close to Field Marshal Hermann Goering, indicated that von Ribbentrop's discussions at Moscow might go beyond the non-aggression pact.

"It may be assumed with certainty," the newspaper said, "that in the Moscow talks a division of the mutual spheres of interest will be arrived at which will correspond to the wishes of the German as well as the Russian nation."

Some observers wondered whether this hinted at another partitioning of Poland should the present dispute result in forceful measures.

The Lokal Anzeiger, following somewhat the same line, traced the history of Russian-German relations and continued:—

"The entire course shows with convincing clarity that as soon as Russia and Germany cooperatively wanted peace, no power on earth could disturb it.

Subordinate Position

"In such an historical consideration Poland holds a completely subordinate position—a troublesome people which never could govern itself and which during the short periods when luck favored its history was an unbearable, attack-thirsty and quarrelsome neighbor.

"The western powers, however, always have wanted to harness Russia in the network of their plans—always to the disadvantage of Russia and always as a menace against peace."

Applying history to present day Europe, foreign office sources observed that "co-operation with Russia was an important feature in the foreign policy of Berlin which always won the upper hand when it was necessary to oppose a threatening west."

Price of Eggs and Butter Advances

Toronto, Aug. 23—Eggs and butter again advanced to slightly higher price levels yesterday in quiet trading on the Toronto open produce market, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported. Cheese remained quietly steady.

Receipts of Ontario butter were very light. During the morning, first-grade creamery solids sold at 21 1-4 cents to 21 1-2 cents per pound, but in the afternoon the price was firm at 21 1-2 cents. Demand was steady and receipts were cleaned up readily. Western butter was sold at 21 3-4 cents per pound. Retailers' prices on No. 1 creamery prints climbed to a range of 23 cents to 23 1-4 cents.

With egg prices going still higher at Montreal, top-grade eggs gained another cent in all sections of trading on the local market. There was no shortage of eggs here, although most country producers appeared to be shipping their eggs to Montreal in view of the higher prices there. Receipts in Toronto were sufficient for the demand, which was fair. In the ungraded section A-large eggs firmed to 25 cents and A-medium to 24 cents. Trading was quiet in the graded section, where A-large adavnced to a range of 27 1-2 cents to 28 cents. Retailers' price on A-large eggs was up one cent at 30 cents.

Total exports of Canadian butter during the week ending Aug 19 were reported by the Department at 976 packages, while cheese exports for the week totalled 31,836 boxes.

Montreal Butter Strengthens

Montreal, Aug. 23 (CP)—Butter and cheese firmed slightly on produce markets here yesterday, while potatoes were again unchanged, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported. The egg market continued steady, with fresh receipts light.

Job price of first-grade creamery butter prints was 22 1-4-3-4c a pound and of first-grade solids 21 3-4-22 1-4c. Western butter delivered in Montreal was unquoted. Price to creamery of Quebec No. 1 pasteurized butter delivered in Montreal for surrent mkae was 21c and the price of Quebec No. 2 pasteurized butter was 20c. Receipts,1 2 boxes.

Prices to factory of Ontario white cheese delivered in Montreal for current make was 10 7-16-11-16c and colored 10 5-8-11-16c. Quebec white was quoted at 10 3-16c and colored at 10 5-16c. Receipts, 6,694 boxes.

DESCENDANTS OF HEROES OF NEW FRANCE VISIT CANADA

Direct descendants of two heroes of New France, the Marquis de Montcalm and the Chevalier de Levis, these three prominent Parisians arrived in Quebec aboard the Empress of Australia. Seen ABOVE in the lounge of the Empress of Australia approaching Quebec they are, LEFT to RIGHT, The Marquis de Montcalm, the Duc de Levis-Mirepoix and the Comte de Montcalm. The trio was a part of a group, members of the Maria Chapdelaine Society, which has come to Canada to visit the Lake St. John district. Their trip also takes them to Montreal, Ottawa, Ile aux Noix, Bluff Point, Fort Ticonderoga and New York. When they stepped ashore they landed at a spot only a few hundred yards from the bluff atop which the Marquis de Montcalm of former days met defeat and death at the hands of Wolfe's British troops. The present Marquis will honor the memory of that battle by placing wreaths on the joint Wolfe-Montcalm monument in Quebec City.

LONDON DEFENCE STEPS

Blackout Will be Instantly Effective Over Britain if Necessity Should Arise — Trawler Sailings Cancelled

By GUY RHOADES
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 24—(CP Cable) — Great Britain pressed preparations today to meet the consequences of a possible German attack on Poland and a general European war.

With roughly 1,000,000 men already under arms, officials disclosed that more reservists and auxiliaries are being called up for air defence. They emphasized, however, that such steps do not mean a constituted mobilization.

Steps are being taken to make a blackout instantly effective should the necessity arise. Men worked all night painting white marks on the curb corners to guide traffic if complete darkness is ordered.

Safety islands and other obstacles on the roads have been marked by hurricane lamps with the glass reduced by a screen to small red eyes. Traffic lights have been screened as in the Aug. 10 blackout.

Why the Weather!

ty the weather hra4t rmCe r

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

How it rains! This was formerly simply explained by saying that water vapor condenses, forming clouds when 100 per cent humidity is reached, and that the cloud-droplets then grew to raindrop size. Now it is felt that the process is more complicated, and is not known in all its details. But it is known that condensation may occur with as low humidity as 80 per cent, and that in the clouds water must be present in both the liquid and solid states, even in tropical rains. This condition is now known to be possible. Then there is a certain humidity for each size of nucleus at which the drops grow most rapidly between 100 and 110 per cent., the higher humidities for the smaller nuclei.

Not Too Late To Avert War Says Pontiff

Castel Gandolfo, Aug. 24—(AP) —Pope Pius tonight broadcast a new appeal for peace, reminding governments and peoples that it was not yet too late for negotiations to avert war.

"Let men return to mutual understanding; let them begin their negotiations anew," the Pontiff implored.

He declared that "empires which are not built on justice are not blessed by God."

International Briefs

Tsingtao, China, Aug. 24—(AP)— Japanese-sponsored newspapers today told Britons, including missionaries, to leave Shantung Province within 10 days and their Chinese employees to resign within the same period or "suffer the consequences."

Rome, Aug. 24—(AP)—Sailings of the Italian liners Conte Di Savoia and Augustus from Genoa were postponed today because of "engine trouble," it was announced officially. The Savoia was to sail for New York, the Augustus for South America.

Brussels, Aug. 24—(AP)— Long lines of German military trucks were reported by border observers today to be moving within sight of the Belgian town of Eupen, former German territory. German fortifications facing the Belgian border were reported authoritatively to have been occupied during the night. Numerous artillery pieces were seen being drawn into place.

London, Aug. 24—(CP)— Prime Minister Chamberlain disappointed a large crowd gathered outside 10 Downing Street this morning by failing to appear for his customary walk in St. James's Park. The King, who arrived from Scotland early today, received the Prime Minister immediately.

London, Aug. 24—(CP)—The British museum was closed to public today to permit necessary measures to preserve its valuable collection from damage in the event of an air raid.

New York, Aug. 24—(CP)—"We are nearer the front," the New York Times (Independent) concluded today in an editorial on the Russian-German non-aggression pact. "If all appeals to reason fail, if war comes, it must be clear to every American that with Russia out, with the possibility the Soviets may even support the Germans with supplies, as the terms of their agreement imply, our relation to the conflict is materially and morally changed," said the paper.

London, Aug. 24—(CP)— United States Ambassador Joseph Kennedy today issued a statement advising all American tourists in the British Isles to sail for home at once. Officials estimated there are now between 3,000 and 4,000 American tourists in England, Scotland and Wales.

German-Soviet Pact Terms

Moscow, Aug. 24.— (AP)— The text of the Russo-German non-aggression accord, signed early today, is as follows:

"The German Reich's Government and the Union of the Socialist Soviet Republics, moved by a desire to strengthen the state of peace between Germany and the U.S.S.R. and in the spirit of the provisions of the Neutrality Treaty of April, 1926, between Germany and the U.S.S.R., decided the following:

"Article One—The two contracting parties obligate themelves to refrain from every act of force, every aggressive action and every attack against one another, including any single action or that taken in conjunction with other powers.

"Article Two—In case one of the parties of this treaty should become the object of warlike acts by a third power, the other party will in no way support this third power.

"Article Three—The Governments of the two contracting parties in the future will constantly remain in consultation with one another in order to inform each other regarding questions of common interests.

"Article Four—Neither of the high contracting parties will associate itself with any other grouping of powers which directly or indirectly is aimed at the other party.

"Article Five—In the event of a conflict between the contracting parties concerning any question, the two parties will adjust this difference or conflict exclusively by friendly exchange of opinions or, if necessary, by an arbitration commission.

"Article Six—The present treaty will extend for a period of ten years with the condition that if neither of the contracting parties announces its abrogation within one year of expiration of this period it will continue in force automatically for another period of five years.

"Article Seven — The present treaty shall be ratified within the shortest possible time. The exchange of ratification documents shall take place in Berlin. The treaty becomes effective immediately upon signature.

Berlin Propagandists Guessed Wrong On Britain's Attitude Says Times

London, Aug. 24—(CP Cable)— The Times (Independent) said today that "a Russo-German pact cannot alter the fact of pledges given by this country and France to Poland."

The authoritative newspaper said that the "Berlin propagandists gave one more proof of their inability to judge others except by their own standards when they coolly assumed that Great Britain 'having suffered a grave diplomatic defeat will hardly now care to carry out' her obligations to Poland."

The Daily Telegraph (Conservative), referring to the summoning of parliament, said "it impossible to forget the parallel with that fateful third day of August 25 years ago when the issue of peace or war hung precariously in the balance."

Discussing Sir Nevile Henderson's visit to Fuehrer Hitler yesterday this paper said: "That act can leave in the Fuehrer's mind no room for misunderstanding. The decision which now rests in his hands cannot be reached by him in ignorance of some of the consequences."

The Daily Mirror (Independent) said: "Two things are necessary—that the whole nation should prepare itself steadfastly for any event and that every effort should be made to convince the rulers of Germany and the mass of the German people that Britain and France will not retreat under the bombardment of bluff and the battle of nerves."

Referring to the meeting between the British Ambassador to Germany, Sir Nevile Henderson, and Fuehrer Hitler, The Daily Mail (Independent) said "There can be no misunderstanding now. Herr Hitler has heard Britain's resolve. He knows what we have said and that we mean it."

Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express (Independent) said "Calmly and confidently the British people await the isue of events. Their course is chosen and there can be no retreat and no deviations. They will follow with courage the path they have set before them."

Commissioner Carpenter, Canada, Elected as New Head Of the Salvation Army

Born in Australia and Started His Army Career 45 Years Ago

WIFE IS AUTHOR

London, Aug. 20—(CP)— Commissioner George L. Carpenter of Canada today was elected commander of the Salvation Army.

He succeeds General Evangeline Booth, who is retiring because of the age limit.

Commissioner Carpenter was appointed territorial commander for Canada in May, 1937. Before that he was stationed in South America. He was born in Australia, where he began his Army career 45 years ago.

Commissioner Carpenter's wife is known as author of Army Biographies. She also is an Australian.

The final vote of the 51 members of the Army High Council on the five candidates nominated yesterday was as follows:

Commissioner Carpenter, 35; Commissioner Catherine Bramwell Booth, of England, 8; Lieut.-Commissioner Albert Osborne of Scotland and Ireland, 6; there were two blank ballots.

Lieut. Commissioner William Dalziel of eastern Australia and Commissioner Benjamin Orames of the western United States were the other candidates.

Taken by Surprise

Toronto, Aug. 24—(CP)— Appointment of Commissioner George L. Carpenter of Canada as Commander of the Salvation Army, announced in London today, took Canadian Army circles by surprise. Col. George W. Peacock, Chief Secretary for Canada, Newfoundland, Bermuda and Alaska, said Commissioner Carpenter never sought the job.

Col. Peacock said Mrs. Carpenter, who did not accompany her husband to England, felt "very humble" at the appointment. He added Canadian Army members received the news with "mixed feelings."

"We are delighted of course that our Canadian leader has been selected to hold this great trust, delighted that they have selected a man of such high quality of heart and mind," Col. Peacock said. "In this case we are sure the office has sought the man. He did not expect the appointment or try to influence the selection in any way. We feel his selection was by divine guidance.

Keenly Feel Loss

"We feel keenly his loss as our Canadian leader. With world conditions as they are, Commissioner Carpenter may have to stay in London and take over before Nov. 1, the day he is slated to take over

"We had high appreciation of his qualities. He is the real Salvation Army type with a strong emphasis on personal living and evangelism."

Col. Peacock said appointment of a successor to Commissioner Carpenter likely would be made in a few weeks. He added Commissioner Carpenter probably could not make an extensive Canadian farewell trip if he returns from England.

Roosevelt Appeals To King of Italians On Behalf of Peace

Washington, Aug. 24.—(AP)— President Roosevelt renewed today his efforts to avert a European war, by appealing to King Victor Emmanuel of Italy to "formulate proposals for a specific solution of the present crisis".

Mr. Roosevelt sent word to the King that if the Italian Government would do so, "you are assured of the earnest sympathy of the United States."

Ambassador William Phillips, on arrangements made by Mussolini and Foreign Minister Count Ciano, had an audience with King Victor Emmanuel and presented the President's message orally.

The text of the communication was made public by State Secretary Cordell Hull.

Mr. Roosevelt's message said:

"It is my belief and that of the American people that Your Majesty and Your Majesty's Government can greatly influence the averting of an outbreak of war".

"Any general war would cause to suffer all nations whether belligerent or neutral, whether victors or vanquished, and would clearly bring devastation to the people and perhaps to the governments of some nations most directly concerned".

Rome, Aug. 24. — (AP)—United States Ambassador William Phillips delivered a personal message today from President Roosevelt to King Victor Emmanuel "on behalf of the maintenance of World Peace".

The message, delivered to the King orally at the Royal summer residence at Santa Anna di Valdiere, near Turin, expressed the hope the King would find some way of exerting his influence on behalf of peace.

Mr. Phillips left an aide memoire with the King after his audience which took place after an all night trip the Ambassador made from Rome by train and motor car.

FRANCE CALLS UP FIFTH CLASS OF HER RESERVISTS

150,000 Troops Added Today to Probably Two Millions Under Arms

PLAN TO CALL MORE

Paris, Aug. 24—(AP)—France today mobilized a fifth class of reservists, adding approximately another 150,000 troops to the men already under arms in answer to threats of a European war.

Previous estimates of the number of troops under arms had been placed at 2,000,000.

The sudden call issued during an emergency cabinet session, added the fifth class to the two classes of "disponsibles" which have been with the colors for months and the two classes which were called up just after last midnight.

FOUR FIRES SET

St. Thomas, Ont., Aug. 24—(CP) —Someone set four fires last night in the convention headquarters of the Canadian Fire Chiefs' Association. Police are holding a 13-year old boy who was the pet of the current convention of fire chiefs for questioning.

One of the four fires was right above the room used by Fire Marshall W. J. Scott. A note was shoved under the room used by Fire Chief Mitrella of St. Thomas, warning more fires were to come.

DOMINION GOV'T FULLY GEARED TO MEET EMERGENCY

Ottawa, Aug. 24—(CP)— The Dominion government is fully geared to meet the national emergency which might develop from the crisis in Europe. Prime Minister Mackenzie King and his cabinet ministers meet today to discuss the situation, and Defence Minister Mackenzie assures the nation his department has detailed plans ready to provide for security of the people.

GASOLINE TRUCK CATCHES ON FIRE

When the carburetor of a gasoline truck, driven by Clare Carter of this city, became defective, fire broke out in the engine of the large vehicle on the bay bridge road at noon. The city fire department was called to the scene and extinguished the blaze by the use of chemicals. The engine of the truck was damaged by the fire. Motorists refused to pass the burning truck at the time, entertaining fears that it might at any moment explode, but fortunately no injuries or serious damage resulted, with the exception of a damaged motor.

HITLER AND STAFF REACH BERLIN UNEXPECTEDLY

Italian Ambassador Greets Fuehrer and Chats With Him Few Minutes

ZERO HOUR FORECAST

German Press Says Solution of Polish Problem is Immediate Solution

Berlin, Aug. 24. — (AP)—Adolf Hitler unexpectedly arrived at Templehof airdrome at 5.56 p.m. (11.56 a.m. E.D.T.) from Berchtesgaden.

The Fuehrer was greeted by the Italian Ambassador, Fernando Attolico, who chatted with him a few minutes.

Few persons were at the airport at the time of his arrival in a heavy Junkers plane carrying several members of his staff. He quickly left the airport for Reich Chancellory.

Troops to Back Claims

Berlin, Aug. 24. — (AP)— German troops stood steady today to back up Adolph Hitler's demands upon Poland and the British Government notified its Consuls to advise British Nationals in Germany to leave.

Envisaging a possible re-enactment by Beck of the trip to Hitler's chalet last March by President Emil Hacha of Czecho-Slovakia, the Foreign Office official said:—

"The Poles know exactly what we want of them."

The inference was that Poland had been apprised fully of Germany's demands, but that perhaps no zero hour yet had been set for her reply.

This zero hour was expected tonight after Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop, following the swift conclusion of the Russian-German non-aggression pact, returns from Moscow and makes his report.

Limited Ultimatum Forecast

There was a feeling that the best guess was that there would be a limited ultimatum to Poland of only a few hours.

The authoritative "Dienst Aus Deutschland", possessing very close connections with the Foreign Office, said a solution of the Polish problem was an "immediate necessity", and concluded:—

"The military status of the Reich leaves no doubt that Germany is prepared for all eventualities".

In other words, a simple command from Hitler is all that now is required.

CANADIAN CABINET HOLDS SESSION

Tense Situation in Europe Discussed by Premier and Colleagues

Ottawa, Aug. 24. —(CP)—Prime Minister Mackenzie King, at Cabinet Council today, asked all his colleagues to remain in Ottawa until further notice and to be ready for a meeting of the government at any time. He suggested they cancel all engagements outside the Capital for the next few days.

Chamberlain Tells Parliament Hitler Asks Free Hand In East Europe

"God Knows I Have Done My Best to Find a Peaceful Solution to a Question That May Precipitate a General War," Prime Minister Tells Tense and Anxious Parliament — New and Drastic Steps Are Needed Says Chamberlain in Presenting "Emergency Powers Bill"

HALIFAX SPEAKS TO LORDS

Chamberlain Tells Parliament Britain Will be Fighting for Preservation of Those Principles, the Destruction of Which Would Involve the Destruction of All Possibility of Peace and Security for Peoples of the World. Dominions Praised for Their Attitude With Respect to Crisis Facing British Empire

By J. F. SANDERSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 24—(CP Cable)—Prime Minister Chamberlain told the House of Commons today that Adolf Hitler had demanded a free hand in eastern Europe and said Great Britain "finds himself with an imminent peril of war."

He made the statements in asking parliament, summoned to special session as the international situation rapidly deteriorated, to clothe the government with sweeping powers to meet any emergency.

Need Sweeping Powers

"New and drastic steps are required by the gravity of the situation," the Prime Minister said in presenting an "emergency powers bill" which would permit the government to put into operation any measures necessary for the national safety. These would include such steps as:

1. Taking over railways and other transportation.
2. Control of food supplies.
3. Defence against air attack.

Members, packing the Chamber to capacity, rose and cheered the Prime Minister after he said:

"If all our efforts to find a peaceful solution—and God knows I have done my best—fail and we find ourselves forced to embark upon a struggle bound to be fraught with suffering and misery for all mankind and the end of which no man can foresee, we shall not be fighting for the political future of a far-away state in a foreign land.

"We shall be fighting for the preservation of those principles, the destruction of which would involve the destruction of all possibility of peace and security for the peoples of the world. I trust those with whom the responsibility lies will remember the millions of mankind whose fate depends on their actions."

A United Country

As for Great Britain, Mr.. Chamberlain said, "we have a united country behind us."

The cheering he received from all sides as he completed his 33-minute speech—carefully worded and spoken solemnly—seemed to evidence the burial of political differences at the hour when war clouds over Europe seemed steadily to darken.

It was a dramatic session in which the Prime Minister delivered his message. Members stood and sat in the aisles, so crowded was the tiny Commons Chamber. Among the members summoned for the emergency session were 87, who had interrupted military training to return to parliamentary duties.

Every seat in the galleries was taken. A notable absentee from the diplomatic gallery was Ambassador Ivan Maisky of Russia, usually a regular attendant.

In the gallery were Hon. Vincent Massey, Canadian High Commissioner in London, and Hon. Charles Dunning, Canadian Finance Minister who is abroad for his health.

Outside in the streets thousands of grim-faced men and women milled around Whitehall and Downing Street, while within the big government buildings war preparations were being pushed to perfection.

Pledged Support

A few minutes after the Prime Minister sat down the united spirit of the British people was demonstrated when Arthur Greenwood, acting leader of the Labor opposition, and Sir Archibald Sinclair, Liberal leader, pledged the support of their parties to the government.

George Lansbury, Labor, one of the grand old men of British politics and a confirmed pacifist, saw the commoners show signs of restlessness when he pleaded with the Prime Minister to give "leadership in the cause of peace instead of making preparations for war." He urged Mr. Chamberlain to fly to Moscow and see Joseph Stalin in an attempt to persuade the Soviet leader to influence Hitler.

FARMERS HOLD WHEAT UNCERTAIN OF PRICE

Farmers of the district, uncertain over the international situaton and the probable price of wheat if hostilities should break out in Europe will hold the greater part of their crop for speculation, it was estimated this morning by an agricultural expert of the city.

Reports of a five cent rise per bushel in wheat on the market resulted in an almost total suspension of sale of wheat in the district today, it was reported. "If the farmer can hold his wheat, he will. But in many cases he will be unable to, due to the fact that the grain crop is annually the farmer's cash crop, needed by him to purchase other necessary articles," reported the local observer.

'WE WANT TO ENLIST' SAY LOCAL YOUTHS

Two youthful residents with a grim look of determination on their faces, presented themselves at the local Armouries this morning and after some hesitation approached a white-overalled attendant.

"Where do we go to enlist? We mean, can we get into the army here?" they finally asked.

Questioning the boys the attendant discovered they were really sincere in their desire to "join up." Alarmed by the present war scare they finally decided to offer themselves as the first of the 'first line troops' to leave from this district.

Told that no mobilization scheme had yet been authorized for the Dominion, the youths were referred to an officer of the Argyll Battalion in a nearby building.

"Can we join up in this army without a lot of red tape, and get right over there?" asked one of the boys.

Outward Calm Unruffled Here But Interest for News Keen

Feeling of Optimism Sensed That Crisis May Pass Without Conflict

1914 RECALLED

With the present war crisis apparently at its tensest point, with Polish and German armies standing ready to launch themselves into a bitter bloody struggle and the whole world awaiting with tense expectancy the latest reports of news that may or may not mean a general conflagration, the outward calm of Belleville was unperturbed today.

However a tense undercurrent of curiosity was apparent along Front Street and other business thoroughfares of the city. There appeared to be no general alarm over the immediate prospects of Britain being thrown into war, in fact there was generally a highly optimstic feeling that the crisis would pass without the war-drums sounding.

Danzig Rumor

Adding fuel to the already brightly burning flames of curiosity and interest was a street rumor shortly after nine o'clock that the Nazis had marched into Danzig.

Telephones in the editorial offices of The Ontario Intelligencer buzzed intermittently with voices betraying various forms of emotion asking for confirmation of the rumor.

On the street newspaper reporters "covering their daily beats" were stopped by curious pedestrians asking for the "latest".

Radios in Front Street shops blared forth communiques and commentations. Little knots of people gathered at street corner, in stores, along the streets and in houses talking in lowered tones of the present crisis and what it might mean to Canada.

No Signs of Nervousness

However in no place were there any signs of nervousness or hysteria. Young men, treated the matter in more or a joking vein than of sincerity. Grey-haired mothers and grandmothers, memory no doubt taking them back twenty-five years ago when their sons and husbands marched off to war with a song on their lips, talked quietly but sincerely.

"God forbid, that it should come again", a silver-haired mother said to a friend in a department store.

A trim stenographer "buttonholed" a reporter as he strode through the office in which she worked. "What's the latest?" she inquired, without a sign of nervousness, in fact she smiled when told the latest developments. "I don't think they will fight", she said, "I hope they don't, but if they do . . . ."

Good Enough to Fight For

"We licked 'em once and by the Lord Harry we can do it again. Let 'em start something", said two veterans on whose chests gleamed the ribbons of medals won in the last war. "This country is good enough to live in, and she's good enough to fight for".

In the shops and stores, factories and offices, business was carried on as usual, although an alertness for news was painly noticeable as newsmen strolled in and out the various places of business. Radios specially installed during the present crisis were kept tuned in to various stations from which intermittent newscasts were sent over the airwaves.

The signal that programs were being interrupted to broadcast a special news bulletin, was the sign for the cessation of activities in many offices and shops. Keen interest was evinced by entire staffs from the manager to the office boy.

All morning, The Ontario Intelligencer telephones brought in a steady stream of calls from curious citizens asking for confirmation of the ljatest reports.

However, as was stated before, Belleville is taking the present crisis with calmness albeit that natural curious urge to know the latest that is paramount in all of us, is predominating practically every man, women and child in the city and district.

FIRST TAPERING OFF OF TOURISTS SEEN

With the school holiday term on the continent rapidly approaching its conclusion, tourists to Canada are beating back on home trails, and a noticeable tapering off in numbers of the visitors is reported in the city. Automobile service stations have been the first to notice the slackening off of trade which has been fairly heavy and well up to normal this year.

One lower Front Street station this morning reprted a decided decrease in business during the past week, but a fairly comparative volume is still being maintained.

FUSSY TUG BERTHS FOR OVERNIGHT STOP

With much shrill tooting and fuss a small tug towing a large dredge owned by the Russell Construction Company, threshed up the bay last evening and berthed overnight at the Government dock. Headed west, tug and tow left again early this morning for Lake Ontario via the Murray Canal.

TWEED DEFEATS FOXBORO 16-11 IN THIRD GAME

Staff Meraw on Mound and Pitched a Heady Game

MOVE UP ROUND

Tweed, August 24 (Special) — Tweed softball team advanced to the second round of the Intermediate "C" O.S.S.A. playdowns by defeating Foxboro in the third game of their series at the local ball park on Wednesday night. It was a nip and tuck battle all through with the locals scoring six runs in the ninth frame to defeat their opponents by a score of 16 to 11.

Staff Meraw was on the mound for the locals and pitched a heady game. He walked the first man to face him; an error and a two base hit scored two runs. The visitors went scoreless until the fifth, Roy and Campbell striking out in the second. Two hits in the third frame were unproductive as Woods hit into a double play. Four hits in the sixth including a homer by Pyear and a triple by Shortt pushed over three runs.

Davidson Replaces Meraw

In the eighth inning Davidson replaced Meraw. Four hits and four runs were made off his delivery to put the visitors one up on the locals. However, Davidson tightened up and fanned the last two men to face him.

Woods, Thrasher, Pyear and Shortt were the heavy hitters for the visitors, with Pyear's hits all for extra bases, including a double a triple and a four bagger.

Opened Scoring

Tweed opened the scoring in the first frame, three hits, including Gerald Wagar's triple, and a walk, scoring a trio of runs. They added as many more runs in each of the third and fourth innings to make the score 9 to 2.

Shortt tightened up in the fifth inning and for three innings held the locals in subjection only ten men facing him. Prevost's homer in the sixth was the locals' only hit. In the eighth inning the locals got back into the game with a vengeance, as ten men went to bat and greeted Shortt and Campbell who replaced him, with a barrage of hits including Tummon's four-bagger and Prevost's second triple. Six runs put the game in the bag.

Prevost's with six hits and four runs was the leading hitter. His assortment included a home run, two triples, a double and two singles in six trips to the plate. J. Wagar and J. Orr hit safely three times while Burrows, G. Wagar, T. Meraw and J. Tummon each collected two timely bingles.

BARON MAUGHAM TO OPEN C. N. E.

61st Canadian National Exhibition to be Finest in History

Toronto, Aug. 24—(CP)—A salvo of 61 shots will boom out along the Toronto waterfront tomorrow afternoon when Baron Maugham, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, presses a button to open officially the 61st Canadian National Exhibition.

The opening will follow a procession to the main band shell overlooking Lake Ontario and the invocation by Most Rev. Derwyn T. Owen, Anglican Primate of all Canada.

Hours before the official opening, crowds will throng to the big annual fair, attracted by the displays of "things to come," its educational exhibits, entertainment, sports, agriculture and art. So big is the fair—the world's largest annual exhibition— that officials express doubt a visitor could see all, even if in attendance every day of the two-week run.

Men, notable in public and business life, will speak at the daily luncheons of C.N.E. directors and their guests. Baron Maugham speaks opening day, and Air Marshal W. A. Bishop, Canada's Great War ace, will speak Saturday, Warriors' Day.

Sails on Saturday

Lord Maugham will leave for Quebec immediately after the opening ceremonies to sail for England Saturday in view of the grave international situation. He'll make a quick tour of the "X" first, however, to catch a glimpse of some of its wonders.

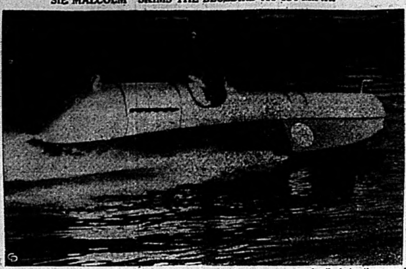
New features this year include a thrice-weekly performance by 15 British bombers, fighters and pursuit 'planes. They will present a display of diving and climbing, ending their exhibition with a smoke screen that will cover the shoreline.

Other new features this year include a display of modern air fighting equipment of the Royal Canadian Air Force, television, a display of pictures taken during the royal tour of Canada, a collection of rare Dutch paintings and a display of Canadian art.

Indians of the Six Nations Reserve, near Brantford, will give dances, music and songs.

First time such a ceremony has been conducted in Toronto, the Six Nations will admit former Mayor Thomas Foster of Toronto to the tribe and bestow upon him an Indian name in gratitude for his restoration of the Mohawk Chapel at their reserve.

SIR MALCOLM SKIMS THE BLUEBIRD AT 134 M.P.H.



Sir Malcolm Campbell and his latest Bluebird. are pictured for the first time, skimming over Lake Coniston at a record-breaking speed of 134 miles per hour, in a warm up for an attempt to kite the water speed mark to 150 miles per hour. Although he travelled the measured mile faster than ever before, the record was not allowed to be declared official because he could not make the return trip.

DOMINION GOV'T

Parliament will be called if it becomes apparent efforts to settle the European problem are of no avail, the Prime Minister said yesterday. Should events happen so quickly as to demand action before parliament can be brought into session, the government is already armed with authority of the War Measures Act of 1914 to assume extraordinary powers in the interim.

If war comes, said Defence Minister Mackenzie, his department will be ready to give instant effect to carefully matured plans for defence of the security of the people.

Careful Plans

There are careful plans for mobilization of the defence force with more than 50,000 men in the militia ready to be called to the colors The permanent force or standing army is always mobilized, and units can be brought to war strength rapidly drawing on the volunteer militia and the regular reserve. Permanent units of the Royal Canadian Air Force and the Royal Canadian Navy could similarly be reinforced from their respective volunteer, non-permanent counterparts and their regular reserves.

In addition to rallying Canada's fighting men, the department must also guard against enemies within the country. There are elaborate schemes to protect bridges, power plants, factories, wharves, canals, railways, grain elevators and air line services against sabotage.

60,000 Veterans Ready

In Vancouver, Brig. W. W. Foster, President of the Canadian Legion, said he had wired the government reiteration of an old pledge that the Legion was ready to detail 60,000 veterans to guard against sabotage.

Attorney-General Conant of Ontario declared the Ontario Provincial Police's Criminal Investigation Branch was prepared to safeguard against sabotage. Special constables for such duty have been sworn in all over the province.

FRANCE CALLS

Reports were current that three more classes may be called within the next 24 hours. Three more would bring France close to what is widely considered general mobilization.

Emergency troops, bearing war packs, sped to the German and Italian frontiers to bulwark vital posts as national defence ladears rallied the people for immediate defence in face of Germany's threat to France's ally, Poland.

Notices Posted on Walls

The notices calling up group No. 2 of the seven groups of active reserves were posted on the walls of all public buildings alongside those calling up groups three and four.

The usual Thursday air raid sirens screamed out a test warning about the time the newest troop call was announced.

Paris transportation was badly handicapped as the troop movement reached its full swing and cars and trucks were pulled off the streets under the government's requisition order. More than 60 per cent of Paris buses were taken for army use.

Long distance telephone communication by civilians was virtually cut off as lines were monopolized by official calls to coordinate calling up of reservists and troop movements.

Reservists on Way to Maginot

The north and east stations feeding the Maginot line area along the German border were filled with steady moving streams of reservists. Special trains rushed troops out of the stations almost as fast as they poured in.

Accompanied by wives, children and sweethearts, reservists swarmed to railroad stations. They stood in small family groups, many of them at a loss for the words of goodbye.

Harvest workers, under the urging of authorities, sped to gather the grain. "Get it in—wet or dry," was the order.

Former Premier Leon Blum, the Socialist leader, demanded that the French parliament be recalled immediately.

Some well-informed diplomatic quarters predicted a German move by tomorrow and perhaps tonight. Foreigners were leaving France. Steamship lines had full bookings and long waiting lists.

ALBERT FORSTER

Danzig's customs officers reported to Free State officials today that Poland had closed the border between Poland and Danzig at 11.00 a.m. (6 a.m. EDT.)

Danzig's officials earlier had shut off telephone connections with Gdynia. This was said to be a reprisal against Polish action in refusing to accept calls for Gdynia.

The elevation of Forster gives Danzig a Chief of State known as a radical. Greiser is called a moderate.

Some sources interpreted the action as an indication that Forster would have dictatorial powers to perfect the demanded reunion of the Free City with Germany.

Danzig, under heavy guard, was tense. Every bridge was patrolled by a black uniformed S. S. man last night. Men with rifles were guarding bridges in the downtown area. There was great activity among the soldiers stationed here and it was obvious that many more men had been called up.

SEE EVERYTHING AT BELLEVILLE FAIR

The district fair is one of the best methods of discerning the real values in the life of the people we know. International events may attract the people's attention but seedtime and harvest are symbolic of the pursuits of man whether he work on the farm, in the fields, or in the factories or shops of a village, town or city, or guide a train or ship and help to transport the produce of the soil from one place to another.

The fair gives a sane view on life. Hither are brought before the thousands of fair patrons the evidences of the importance of hard work, painstaking thought and the application of knowledge and skill and wisdom to farming. A fair restores balance to the thoughts.

At the Belleville fair, as at all exhibitions the best cross-section of the life the people know best is represented.

People of countryside and town and city owe it to the fair board to give that generous support which makes a fair possible and which stimulates every phase of activity on the farm or in the village or county town.

Belleville Fair opens next week and brings to the people the real evidence of what Canadian life is at its best. Patrons will see produce of the farms and factories which will make them proud of the productivity and the skill and wisdom of the Ontario farmer and manufacturer and artisan.

The program is a complete one, with every detail rounded out to the fullest.

Every citizen should give it every assistance it requires to make the 1939 exhibition one never to be forgotten from the standpoint of support and appreciation as it promises to be from the angle of completeness.

SMALL POWERS MAKE PLEA

It would be one of the finest demonstrations in history of international sanity if the seven small neutral nations now meeting in Brussels in conference on the state of Europe could prevent war and lead to an understanding which would remove force as a means of national ambitions and solution of problems. King Leopold, son of the late great hero King Albert of the Belgians, who knows what war was and is, broadcast an appeal from his palace yesterday and held out hope "that the worst can still be avoided." It bore the approval of the conference of the seven small countries, invoking their will to "collaborate actively in any international efforts for reconciliations." He spoke in the presesce of these powers' foreign ministers from Belgium, Denmark, Finland, Norway, Sweden, the Netherlands and Luxembourg, and his address was relayed to North America, Great Britain, France, Norway and Sweden.

The young King declared another "horrible struggle is being prepared. I therefore send this appeal. We solemnly formulate the vow that when the men on whom the course of events depend should accept submission of their claims to open negotiations in a spirit of brotherly co-operation. I express the hope that other chiefs of states will join their voices to ours in the same desire to assure peace and security for their peoples."

The peoples of the world, no doubt practically all would say amen to this plea. But there are totalitarian governments which have been agitating and stressing force for years. Hitler is said to be the man who can make or force on war, and without his decision there can be no war.

Seven small democracies have been meeting for two days at Brussels at the call of the Belgian Government to consider the state of Europe.

As expected these powers decided to make a united plea for the peace of Europe to the Great Powers, who have been dealing with this question for months and years. The small powers have been watching the trend of the rearmament program of Europe for years and they also have clad themselves in coats of mail.

These small Powers stand in sad plight in the event of war. Most of them are on the fringe of Germany and realize their situation should war approach their borders. Alone and without great Powers to aid them, where would they be? Yet will they put their trust in a neutrality which might only hamper their greatest friends?

If totalitarianism is triumphant by any turn of fate, these little powers would be swept away with Great Powers, for a reign of unprecedented conditions would ensue, and all that they have developed and learned would pass away and be but a dream.

It is no wonder the Small Powers are concerned, but yet what can they do? They must be careful not to provoke attack from any source before they could be of aid to their democratic friends and by this means to themselves.

The little Powers have grown up naturally in the benevolent shade of other democracies and no hands have been laid upon them. But never have they faced so great a threat to their very exhistence. Well may they take counsel together. The great democracies with all their present anxieties feel sympathy with these nations.

RUMORS OF AN OCTOBER ELECTION continue to emanate from Ottawa. It is stated on the best of authority that only Hitler and war can prevent a general election this fall. Hence it seems to depend upon Hitler whether Canada gets an early chance to vote approval of its present government or tell the boys in the Seats of the Mighty that their services are no longer required. In the absence of reciprocity, free trade and protection or prohibition just what the election issue, if any, will be hasn't developed very strongly as yet. In the United States where the date of the election is fixed and has another year to go the big question seems to be whether Franklin D. Roosevelt will be a candidate for a third term or not. There is an unwritten law against third termers in the White House but there seems to be a strong sentiment over there in favor of an exception in favor of Roosevelt. The big issue will be, no doubt, "The New Deal" and whether Roosevelt's Spend and Lend policy is to be continued or scrapped. Depression and unemployment government cures have created a situation which gives ground for apprehension—relief works having swollen to many times their original size, and relief workers have been organizing unions and demand the highest union scale of wages on relief work devised by the government to give work and prevent starvation. Looks like the Roosevelt government had started something which will eventually strangle the government itself. Harking back a few years to the gold and silver campaign for the presidency it may be interesting to restate portions of Candidate William Jennings Bryan's speech on the issues of the day, the principal one from his standpoint being to place silver on a pedestal, with a ratio of 16 to 1, compared with gold, to satisfy the Western silver miners and keep the silver mines humming. The Republicans raised their standard as a "cross of gold" and damned Bryan and his silver policy for and aft.

The tariff and protection policy came into the discussion, too, but Free Silver was the big issue. Bryan's keynote speech of the Free Silver campaign contained these paragraphs:

> "And now, my friends, let me come to the paramount issue. If they ask us why it is that we say more on the money question than we say upon the tariff question, I reply that, if PROTECTION HAS SLAIN ITS THOUSANDS THE GOLD STANDARD HAS SLAIN ITS TEN OF THOUSANDS. If they ask us why we do not embody in our platform all the things that we believe in, we reply that when we have restored the money of the constitition all other necessary reforms will be possible; but that until this is done there is no other reform that can be accomplished. ......
> . . . You come to us and tell us that the great cities are in favor of the gold standard; we reply that the great cities rest upon our broad and fertile prairies. BURN DOWN YOUR CITIES AND LEAVE OUR FARMS AND YOUR CITIES WILL SPRING UP AGAIN AS IF BY MAGIC; but destroy our farms and the grass will grow in the streets of every city in the country. ......
> . . . We will answer their demand for a gold standard by saying to them: "YOU SHALL NOT PRESS DOWN UPON THE BROW OF LABOR THIS CROWN OF THORNS YOU SHALL NOT CRUCIFY MANKIND UPON A CROSS OF GOLD." . . .

Bryan got a majority of the popular vote but the Republicans carried the most heavily populated states with the most electoral votes and won hands down. Roughly the West was for Bryan and Free Silver and the East was for the Gold Standard and the Republican slogan THE FULL DINNER PAIL. Multitudes cheered Bryan but voted for the other fellow.

'Why Did Russia Do It?' World is Asking

Three Views Are Given As to Soviet's Motive

London, Aug. 24—(CP)—Next to the transcendant question, "will there be war"? The greatest puzzle in Europe today is "why did Russia do it?"

Diplomats, economists, politicians, military tacticians and that overworked individual called "the man in the street" searched for the reasons why the Soviet Union swiftly concluded a broad non-aggression treaty with Nazi Germany at a moment when it might be of the most assistance to Adolf Hitler.

See Russia Aloof

Many went far back to the premise that Joseph Stalin, an Asiatic himself, is above all else determined to insulate effectively the vast communistic economy against the troubles of Europe.

Others sought more immediate causes. The most popular thesis was Russian petulance and resentment at what the Soviets have called "the snobbish insincerity" of Great Britain and France.

On the other hand the Communist party in Great Britain has insisted that Russia acted in the true interests of world peace. That hypothesis presupposes that a real danger of a Russia-German clash existed and was eliminated and that the far eastern conquests of Japan have been checked.

Still others believed Russia feared war and feared Hitler.

King Holds Privy Council

The King reached London from Scotland at 8 a.m. (3 a.m. EDT) after an overnight journey. His private car was attached to a regular train and all formalities were omitted, even the customary red carpet at the London railway terminal.

The King, bareheaded and wearing a business suit, drove to Buckingham Palace to hold a privy council and receive a full report from the Prime Minister. The Queen and the Princesses, to whom gas masks were issued Tuesday, remained in Scotland at Balmoral Castle. Britain sent reinforcements to her Mediterranean fleet. There were reports of massing of big naval units in the North Sea. Additional army, navy and air force reserves were called up and air raid precautions were made effective with London held in readiness for "black-outs."

THAT BODY OF YOURS

By James W. Barton, M.D.

Children Improperly Adjusted May Show Symptoms of Organic Disease

In a group of childen, twelve in number, with a symptoms resembling true or organic disease, it was found that the various symptoms were caused by something about themselves or their surroundings and not by disease.

1—There were disorders of movement resembling chorea or St. Vitus dance, convulsions resembling epilepsy and paralysis resembling brain tumor.

2—Disorders of sensation in throat chest and abdomen—loss of appetite, vomiting resembling stomach or appendix disturbance, shortness of breath resembling heart disease, bed-wetting, resembling bladder disease.

3—Disorders of body sensation including pains of covering of the heart, pleurisy, arthritis, and loss of sensation in various parts of the body.

4—Disorders of behaviour with disturbances in the intellect and in the emotional control, resembling various mental diseases.

Dr. William A. Hawke, Toronto, in the Canadian Medical Association Journal, in reviewing these twelve cases from records of the Toronto Hospital for Sick Children, states that in these cases the symptoms of which resemble true organic ailments, these disorders do not arise in happy, well adjusted children, nor do they arise (of themselves) in normal children. In every case there has been some frustration, dissatisfaction, or loss of security which has led to the presence of these abnormal symptoms. He groups the factors causing these symptoms into two types—those which arise within the youngster himself, and those arising from his environment—home and school life.

Among those in the youngster himself is the intellectual factor—below or above average; the physical factors—infection, chronic illness; the emotional factors—the timid sensitive child and the aggressive child with temper tantrums who tries to boss the family.

The factors in the environment ode: (1) the parents—they may be cruel, brutal, quarrelsome; on the other hand, they may be overindulgent, overcareful of their children; (2) the family—ill adjustment with other members; (3) the home; (4) the neighborhood; (5) the school; (6) the opportunities for play or recreation.

In over three quarters of the cases there were difficulties in school adjustment. Dr. Hawke states that treatment of these cases depends upon a few or many people—the physician, the school authorities, the social worker, the Y.M.C.A. or Boy Scouts and others.

Only three of the twelve boys and girls in the group were below normal mentally.

MRS. WM. OLIVER TO CLAIM PART OF GOV'T REWARD

Claims She Gave Police Lead That Led to Arrest of Reginald White

REMEMBERED STORY

Galt, Ont., Aug. 24—(CP)— Mrs. William Oliver intends to post a claim for "at least part" of the reward offered for apprehension of the person or persons responsible for the deaths of her aged neighbors, John and Annie Milroy.

Mrs. Oliver, who grew up on a farm adjacent to the Milroys' and found their bodies last Saturday in the parlor of their home south of Galt, said last night she gave police the lead that brought about the arrest of Reginald White, 35, Hespeler, who police allege has admitted killing the Milroys.

"I think it only right that I should get at least part of the reward, for my information led directly to White's arrest," Mrs. Oliver said, describing her efforts to remember possible clues which, she said, were climaxed Saturday when she told police about a man called Devine who visited the farm shortly before the slayings.

Unable to Sleep

"I went to bed early Saturday but was unable to sleep," said Mrs. Oliver. "Police told me to tell them anything I could remember that might lead to a clue, no matter what time of the day or night it was.

"I suddenly remembered Miss Milroy had told me a man had come to the farm the Saturday before and told her brother he was called Devine, a former hired hand of the Milroys, and lived in Hespeler."

Mrs. Oliver said Miss Milroy told her that her brother told the man he was not Divine, and ordered him from the farm.

"Jack Milroy told his sister the man looked a lot more like Reg White than Devine," Mrs. Oliver said. Both White and a man named Devine worked for the Milroys several years ago.

Told Police Story

Mrs. Oliver said she got out of bed and told what she had remembered to police guards at the farm, who notified Provincial Police. White was arrested Monday and is alleged by crown officials to have confessed to the killing. He was remanded a week in custody on a vagrancy charge in Kitchener Police Court Wednesday.

Fred White and Thomas White, brother and father of Reginald White, visited Kitchener late yesterday but were refused access to the jail in which the alleged confessor to the slayings is lodged.

Meanwhile Provincial Police Inspector W. J. Jordan of Kitchener is reported to have visited Guelph yesterday to question several persons following information that White had been working there since June and was seen there shortly before his arrest.

Hartley Morrison, Guelph barber, is reported to have told police he saw White Monday morning and mentioned the double killing to him. White, he told police, replied: "There could be only one motive for the crime, and that is robbery."

White told Morrison he had worked for the Milroys and knew that the aged man always carried at least $400 on his person. Morrison said he communicated with police after hearing about White's reported confession of guilt.

Little Benny's Note Book

My cousin Artie was up in my room with me and I found a copy book in my desk with only about 3 pages of writing in it, making it practically empty, and I said, G, I'm going to use this for a diary.

How can you, it's not the first of the year, Artie said, and I said, What of it, there's no law about that, is there?

No, but people will think you're crazy, Artie said, and I said, All right, then I'll call it a autobiogriffy and I'll start it right now, about what happened today.

What all are you going to put in it? Artie said, and I said, O everything unusual that happened since this morning.

Such as what, for instants? Artie said, and I said, Wait a minute till I think.

And I thought and I couldn't think of anything except eating breakfist and talking to Mr. Riley the hooken ladder driver around at the firehouse and different things, nothing unusual, and said, Well I cant think with you around, I'll start it tonight.

And after supper I said to ma, Hay ma, will you give me a half a doller? and she said, Well of all the cold blooded requests. What in the world for, for land sakes? she said, and I said, Just for something unusual to start my diary with, and it would certainly be unusual if you gave me a half a doller without even knowing what for.

It would be more than unusual, it would be a miracle, ma said.

Wich it would, and she didn't.

FOR CAREER GIRLS

By ALICE ALDEN

THE VOGUE for the dressy, precious-looking short fur jacket continues. It is the career woman's pet, the window dressing at hand for her every day at five o'clock when she changes from a bee to a butterfly and steps out among her purely frivolous sisters.

Newcomer to this glamorous fashion circle is the Hudson seal jacket, which you see, by this photograph, can look just as dressy as any perishable and ultra-expensive fur model. The model has a swing back, slightly exaggerated shoulders to balance it, and a full sleeve worked into a snug wrist measurement. This is a coat which can take lots of wear and tear while preserving an aristocratic personality for life's lighter moments.

Solving Problem Rooms

By ELEANOR ROSS

WE HAVE just come away from one of the most useful exhibitions visited in many a season. On display were models of various problem rooms before and after handling by skilled decorators. Old-fashioned, ugly rooms had not only been modernized but made downright beautiful.

For instance, one nondescript Georgian room with oversized sliding doors of oak and dark heavy woodwork, was transformed by the installation of a mirrored end wall. In this wall the heavy dark doors were replaced with mirrored ones, set flush in chromium frames. The family portraits were retained but rejuvenated by contrast with the pale dusty pink of the three remaining walls. An old Aubusson rug had been preserved and determined the color scheme of pinks, reds and dusty to sharp emerald greens.

We were interested in the history of a small dining room that was so handled that its owner did not recognize it on his return to town. Incidentally, every room is a real case history. In a difficult bay window the window seat had been eliminated. The glass doors of a built-in china cabinet were replaced by solid wood ones. Small-pane windows formed one end of the room. These were removed and a large plate glass window installed.

The colors, green and yellow, were overly strong in the window end of the room, and there seemed no way to balance this color on the opposite wall until the decorator cleverly introduced a large mirrored screen, which not only concealed the pantry door but reflected the colors of the opposite wall. Old Sheraton furniture was used. Six dining chairs repeat the wood tones, the yellow and green, in a narrow striped upholstery.

Mirrors Help Modernizing

A decorator had to tackle the task of completely modernizing an old wood-panelled room furnished with Louis XV pieces. Here again small panes were removed from a full-length bay window and replaced with plate glass to form French doors. The wood panelling was removed and now a continuous mural against a white ground decorates the walls and gives vista and light.

Wide blue and white striped fabric upholsters the furniture and contrasts with the dark green allover floor covering. A curved-front chest with mirror in overmantel treatment repeats the circular curve of the bay. Circular sofas and a large round white rug and coffee table complete this grouping. A circular plant stand in white deftly introduces the popular red and white motif through the medium of pots of geraniums.

Weddings

ASHLEY—FARQUHAR

The marriage of Ruth Marion, only daughter of Thos. Farquhar, M.P., and Mrs. Farquhar of Mindemoya, Ontario, to John Franklin, son of Mr. F. Ashley and the late Mrs. Ashley of Stirling, Ontario, was solemnized at the United Church, Mindemoya, on Saturday, August 5th at 1.3 p.m. The ceremony was performed by the Reverend W. W. Anglin, uncle of the bride, and he was assisted by the Reverend H. Strapp, pastor of the church.

Quantities of summer flowers in pastel shades banked the church, ferns and potted plants giving further picturesque background for the lovely summer wedding.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a quaint frilled and hooped gown of white French organdy, dotted with cornflower blue, the neckline and frills being outlined in the same shade. Her shoulder length veil was also of cornflower blue, caught with a bandeau of tiny pink rose buds. White lace mitts and silver slippers completed her costume, and her only ornament was a pearl and amethyst filigree pendant, which had been her father's wedding gift to her mother. The bridal bouquet was composed of pink Sweetpeas, Cornflowers and Baby's Breath.

Miss Crystabel Wiber of Kirkland Lake, was her cousin's bridesmaid, presenting a charming contrast in colouring with a gown of similar material and design but with rose dots and trimming, and her bouquet was of blue Sweetpeas, Pink Rosebuds and Baby's Breath.

Mr. Stan Farquhar, brother of the bride, was groomsman, and Mr. Tom Farquhar, Jr, another brother, and Mr. Jack Ferguson, a cousin, were ushers.

The wedding music was played by Mrs. W. E. Shepherd of Sault Ste. Marie, an aunt of the bride, and during the signing of the register, Mr. W. E. Shepherd sang very effectively "O Promise Me".

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parent, where the bride's mother received in a gown of Regina Blue chiffon, with small matching hat, and corsage of Ophelia roses. Here the bridal couple received the congratulations and good wishes of over fifty relatives and close friends. The rooms were prettily decorated with summer flowers in blue and pink, and from the attractively appointed table a delicious luncheon was served. Mrs. George Bishop and Mrs. W. R. Weber, aunts of the bride, were in charge of the buffet, and they were assisted by Misses Edith Marshall, Mary Elliott, Wilma Wagg, Marguerite Loughead, Jeanette Gillespie, Nellie and Beatrice Smith, Doris McKenzie, Crystal and Dottie Williamson.

After the bride had cut the beautifully decorated wedding cake, the Reverend W. W. Anglin proposed the toast to the bride, to which the groom very suitablye responded.

The groom's gift to the bride was a lovely cameo brooch; to the bridesmaid a dainty cameo necklace; to the best man a gold tie pin and tie pins also to the ushers. His gift to the organist and soloist was a lovely plush rug.

Immediately following the reception the bridal couple left by motor, for a honeymoon at Sunnyside Beach, on Georgian Bay. For travelling, the bride wore a gown of navy embroidered net with navy taffeta girdle and bolero. She wore white coat, hat and accessories.

Mr. and Mrs. Ashley will make their home at Peterborough, where the groom is a member of the London Life Insurance Co.

Tips on Tipping

Every year at this season when the majority of us are having our vacations, and especially just before Labor Day when we are having our final travel "fling", I am deluged with questions about tipping. Whom to tip, when to tip, how much to tip?

I might as well confess at once that I consider the question of tipping one of the most difficult—perhaps the most difficult—of questions in the entire world of etiquette. If one suggests too large a tip, one can be expected to be (verbally) torn limb from limb, accused of having no respect for the average budget. If too small a tip is suggested, the cry of "tightwad" or "piker" resounds over the words.

All tipping is a personal thing. Fundamentally each one of us is the kind of person who likes to give, or who doesn't like to give. And it's difficult to change or persuade this native inclination.

All the other items of our traveling expense are definite: We pay so much for our tickets or bus fare so much for our rooms, for our meals, and so forth. But the world of tipping is a world of "wondering"; no definite rules to regulate it, no standards to stabilize, few lights to guide.

We have to choose to take one of three paths. We may rebel against the universal habit of tipping, labeling it a nuisance and a social evil, and go grumpily on our close-fisted way. We may over-tip, either either because we enjoy doing it or because we are not accustomed travelers. Or we may, by questioning, or by the experience of trial-and-error, try to strike the happy medium.

But as long as it is still customary to fee those who serve us along our traveling way, most of us agree that rational tipping shows good breeding, good manners . . . and a good heart. Tips, cheerfully given, smooth our way the world over, take the brambles out of the path of travel.

Let's consider today a few of the most customary tips.

If we engage a porter ("red-cap") to carry our luggage to our seat in the train, we usually give him a quarter. (If you have only one suit-case, and that a light-weight one that he can quickly deposit in the car, fifteen cents will do.)

To the waiter in a dining-car, twenty-five cents is the usual fee for one person, for lunch or dinner. (You can decrease this too, if your check is comparatively small.) For a fifty-cent breakfast, fifteen cents is a normal fee.

We usually give twenty-five cents to the parlor car porter, who brushes our coat and perhaps our hat, and who carries our luggage out of the car. (A larger fee if you have been given extra service.)

To the Pullman porter an occupant of a single berth for a night gives from twenty-five to fifty cents; fifty to seventy-five cents for a section; seventy-five cents to a dollar for a compartment or drawing-room. After a two-or-three-day trip in a Pullman, a dollar is the usual tip for each person. If there are children who have received extra service, fifty cents is usually added to this tip.

Giving "ten percent of the bill" to the waiter in a restaurant has many exceptions. It depends, first, on your generosity on the type of restaurant; on the desirability of the location of the table that has been assigned to you (many people demand a special table location and reward its being given to them); on the kind of service and attention you have demanded or have been given; and on what you order. In a restaurant of the average type, the tip is usually about twenty-five cents for a bill of $1.50 to $2.00.

Courtesy Tip

Are you perplexed as to whether or not you should say "Excuse me" after you have sneezed? It isn't at all necessary, unless it interrupts you in something you are saying. Then you are not asking to be excused for the sneezing, but for the interruption.

And the same thing is true about coughing.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

The "Live Alone and Like It" Now in Double Harness

The former Marjorie Hillis, the girl who wrote "Live Alone and Like It" has been married and kidded into eating her own words, as she sailed away on her honeymoon to Europe.

That book was a "save face" to the families of unmarried girls. Whether Betty Lou, Mary Jane or Harrie Anne remained single from choice, or just because no one asked them, the book furnished a charming talking point to mothers who were sensitive about single daughters. And lots of mothers are sensitive about just that, careers and votes notwithstanding, and fine arguments could be culled from Miss Hillis' book.

Now the joke is on the attractive author, and mothers and daughters are looking about for a new patron-saint of spinsterhood. One is puzzled sometimes to understand why women who have made unfortunate marriages themselves, are so anxious to have their daughters marry. Just another case of hope springing eternal, I suppose.

Marriage is a game of chance. And even if the marriages girls see around them show few marks of having been made in heaven, every girl feels that her marriage will be the exception, and that she's bound to draw first prize in the matrimonial lottery.

There's no use arguing about this. Nature has made women that way. Unless they are freaks, or calculating gold-diggers, there is in every woman the primal urge to love and be loved. And because of this primal urge, careers may go hang, girls defy parents, and calmly accept being cut off from the family and the family fortune, if any. They go back on church and state, and close their eyes to reason when they are in love.

Concerning marriages which have not turned out well, there is, of course, an unanswerable argument that an unhappily married woman is so often blessed by having splendid children to make up for everything.

And to give husbands their due, there are enough capital prizes handed out in the great matrimonial lottery to make marriage a fairly safe risk. There are homes so happy that even to be numbered among the friends welcomed there is a blessing. Such homes radiate joy, and we take away from them a feeling of something precious.

In spite of the mounting record of divorces, there are marriages which are eternally happy, and husbands and wives who have found in each other perfect mates and companions. Seeing such marriages, and knowing that they have the fullest measure of earthly happiness, countless numbers are inspired to take the chance in the hope they may be similarly blessed.

As one woman wrote me the other day: "Children are divine nuisances sent straight from heaven". She went on to tell me that before she married and had these "divine nuisances", she used to feel her life was pretty full and happy and could hardly be improved upon. She had her own chosen work, a nice little apartment and she didn't have to marry any man for a meal ticket.

Then one day the right man came along. He hadn't very much to offer, but she just fell head over heels in love with him. She kept her job for the first two years of their marriage, and then the first of the "nuisances" arrived, with two more to follow, and she never dreamed that anyone could be as happy as she, just keeping house and minding babies.

My names for children is better than hers, I think. I call them little miracles of delight.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Follow Doctor's Orders In Any Case of Impetigo

A small baby with a bad case of impetigo is a rather pitiful thing. If the disease isn't caught in time, it spreads all over the body sometimes gets in the nose, ears and mouth.

Even if you are called right away as physician to see this baby, it is a problem to keep the disease from spreading, it is so infectious. If the child is old enough you can often convince him that if he scratches his itchy sores, he is just making trouble for himself, because the next part of his body he touches with his infected fingers will become a sore in a short while too. But if he is too young to understand, tying of the hands is often the only way.

As I explained yesterday, this isn't as brutal as it sounds, although it is often a fight to get a mother to see it your way. In hospitals they do it with a special jacket. Out in the country, where I feel more at home, we do it by wrapping towels around the arms and pinning the towels to the mattress with large safety pins.

The younger the child, the more likely it is that you will have to take this means of keeping him from repeatedly reinfecting himself while you are trying to clear up the rash.

When there are other children in the home it is difficult, too, to keep the disease from spreading to them. Under no circumstance should they be allowed in the room where the child is segregated. Nor should they be allowed to touch any objects he has been handling.

The bedclothes of the patient should be boiled separately from those of the rest of the household; his dishes should be kept separate and boiled after every time they are used. And, most important, the bits of absorbent used to cleanse his sores should be burned immediately. Don't leave them lying around for a minute. If you do you will forget them; the fire is the only place for them.

Impetigo is a very nasty skin disease that can make the victim feel very miserable indeed. Sometimes it is difficult to clear it up. Remember, though, that if it is attacked promptly in an intelligent way—that is, if you place yourself or your child in the hands of a competent doctor and follow his instructions implicitly—it will respond to treatment.

Parents must realize that impetigo, although only a skin disease is no laughing matter. If the doctor advises something that seems ridiculous, or that seems a hardship on the child, don't question his judgment. Go ahead and do as he says. If the doctor thinks your baby's hands should be tied to prevent self-infection, don't be overcome with false pity and release him when the doctor is gone.

Just remember the little boy I told you about yesterday, whose mother loved him so she couldn't bear to see him with his hands tied. What that mother did may well have been what cost the little fellow his life.

And don't go rubbing on ointments and salves of your own or others' choosing. I have known people to put salve on an impetigo sore because it was so irritated. This salve melted and ran to other parts of the body, carrying the infection with it.

SALMON LAKE

Salmon Lake, Aug. 24 (Special)—Mrs. Milton Marcus Smith of Richmond, Virginia, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Eric Martin, at Salmon Lake.

Messrs. Bruce McCormick and Paul Kocher of Cleveland, Ohio, have recently concluded an extended stay in North Hastings and are greatly enthused over the excellent and diversified fishing the county affords. They have obtained a complete moving picture record of maskinonge, bass, salmon trout, brook trout, and pike angling in the many lakes they visited, accompanied by Eric Martin, well-known north country guide.

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Lynn and Mrs. James Van Sickler and son Rodney, of Galt, Ont., are vacationing at Salmon Lake.

The road connecting Greenbush and Salmon Lake with Highway No. 82 is now complete and being much used.

The GLASS SLIPPER

by MIGNON G. EBERHART

Virginia Bruce and Walter Pidgeon in "Stronger Than Desire," now at the Belle with Ann Sothern and Robert Young in "Maisie".

He pushed his hands worriedly through his hair; it was a boyish gesture. So was the impatient movement with which he flung away from her and then back toward her again. As if torn with inner conflict and indecision, he cried:

"I've got to tell you the whole truth, Rue. For your own sake." His mouth trembled a little as if he hated the thing he was going to do. "You'd have to know some time. And I've been loyal long enough. It's you, now, I'm going to put first. Listen, Rue, last night—no, night before last when I came to take you to the opera—well, Brule sent me."

"Yes?"

"Well, he used to send me to take his place with Crystal too. To take her to parties and to the opera and ——"

All at once the room seemed unbearably hot, and the dark day spread confusing shadows in the corners. Andy went on jerkily:

"And do you remember when we waited for the car we saw a coupe like Brule's, and a woman——"

"A—woman——"

"He sent me to be with you so as to leave him free to go to her. Exactly as it used to be when Crystal was alive."

"Alicia...." whispered Rue.

"Alicia. It's been going on for years."

Always conscious of Crystal's portrait, it seemed to Rue that she had never been so strongly aware of it and aware of Crystal's painted look, her enigmatic, knowing eyes and the half smile on her thin lips. The library was quiet for a moment, but it was a charged silence full of meanings and unuttered words. From the studio came a soft tinkling sound of Steven's piano; Steven playing for Alicia while Madge sat and listened and brooded—sullenly, hating Rue. She knew Andy was waiting for her to speak. She said at last:

"I can't believe it."

"It's true," he said gravely.

"But Crystal——"

"I know." She turned again to look at him. "I know, Rue—that was the ugly thing about it. I would do anything for Brule; he's done so much for me. I didn't question him; I've never questioned him about anything. The first few times he sent me to take Crystal somewhere she'd set her heart on going I thought nothing of it. It seemed so—so perfectly comprehensible. Brule is terrifically busy; he's. He's...." He hesitated and said boyishly, "He's not like other men. I've always done what he told me to do; I didn't quite realize—perhaps I didn't want to realize—how things were drifting along and where we were all headed. It wasn't fair to Crystal; it wasn't fair to anybody——"

"Steven," said Rue. "Alicia's engaged to Steven; he's in love with her."

"I know. Look here, Rue. I know I was at fault about Crystal, but what could I do? It all came about so gradually; Crystal was so much older than I that I—it didn't occur to me that she would—oh, Rue, I can't say it. Do you understand?"

An older and fading and very vain woman's infatuation for a young and attractive man. And that woman the wife of the man who, of all other people in the world, had his guiding hand upon Andy's career, who, as Andy freely and frankly said, had done "everything" for him.

"Yes," said Rue slowly. "I suppose I understand. You—ought to have had more courage, Andy."

"Lord, Rue, don't you suppose I know that now? Don't you suppose I tried every way to—to escape the thing when I saw what Brule—I mean what I had let myself in for? I wasn't in love with Crystal; I was tremendously fond of her; we were good friends for a while. Then—well, there's no good talking about it. I had my loyalty to Brule; I had a kind of loyalty to Crystal—she'd been so good to me, Rue. I couldn't go to Brule and say, 'See here, I can't take your wife out as you insist on my doing because I think she's—well, fallen in love with me.' I couldn't——"

"What did you expect to do? Eventually, I mean?"

Andy looked tired and white.

"I don't know," he said. "I kept hoping something would break. Alicia....Steven.... It seemed to me that when they married Brule would go back to Crystal, and I would be—set free. I know it sounds crazy, Rue; but think of my obligation to Brule."

"How long has Alicia been engaged to Steven? Two years or so, isn't it?"

"About that. Alicia keeps putting him off. And Steven's really in love with her. He worships beauty, and she's so beautiful."

So beautiful, thought Rue with a queer little stab in her heart, that Brule is in love with her too; for years, Andy had said. Years....

CHAPTER NINETEEN

Rue avoided Andy's anxious, troubled blue eyes; she took up a paper knife on the desk and turned it in her fingers and forced herself to ask the question she must ask.

"When Crystal died, then, and Brule was free to marry, why didn't he marry Alicia?"

Andy was finding it difficult to reply, she thought; poor Andy. She'd been unjust. That was because she'd seen the look in Crystal's eyes when Andy entered the room.

At last he said: "Rue, I can't answer that without hurting you. I've got to know first—do you love Brule? Or is it just hero worship? Why did you marry him? I know it gave you money and position and security. I know that almost any woman would have jumped at the chance because of Brule's face as well as because he's such a swell fellow. But you—I—I can't see you marrying anybody for any of those reasons. And yet I don't think you love him."

She turned the paper knife in her fingers, noting with exactness its carved ivory handle. Why had she married Brule—Brule who was in love with Alicia and had been in love with her for years?

Yet the knowledge wasn't exactly a shock. Or rather the shock was there, but there's been a faint disturbing warning of the thing. She remembered the night before when she and Guy had seen Alicia brush her cheek affectionately and with that unmistakable air of accustomedness against Brule's shoulder. Guy's expression hadn't changed. He'd said something and attracted the attention of the two in the doorway, but he hadn't looked surprised or in any way affected by the brief little scene. But then Guy must have known. Everyone must have known except herself and Steven. Steven so wrapped in his music and in his dreams of beauty that a flaw in his beloved had never even been suspected. Andy was waiting for her reply. Why had she married Brule?

He moved nearer her; she felt his presence and would not, again, turn to meet his eyes. He said: "Won't you look at me, Rue? Won't you answer? You see—I thought, the night we went to the opera, that you loved me. As I love you."

"Don't, Andy."

"If it's because you don't want to hear what I have to say, all right. I'll not harass you. I—I love you too much. But if it's loyalty to Brule, surely you see that that loyalty is a mistaken one."

"You haven't told me why he—married me and not Alicia."

"You haven't answered me," said Andy, "or—or perhaps you have. Have you, Rue?"

"No, no, Andy. I...." She moved away from him toward the end of the desk. "Don't you see I've got to know!"

"All right," said Andy. "I warned you I didn't want you to be hurt. But if it's only your pride——"

"Whatever it is, tell me."

"He married you because he and Alicia quarreled. After Crystal's death. Now will you go away with me, dear? Before it's too late. I hate telling you this, but it is because I love you so. Rue—they're going to charge you with Crystal's murder and with Julie's."

She said dully: "I didn't kill her."

So that was why Brule had come to her and asked her to marry him; had told her—so frankly, she'd thought—that it would be a marriage of mutual convenience, a sensible, companionable kind of thing. He'd said no word of loving her or of wanting her to love him. He'd been honest so far as that, at any rate. And if she thought in her heart that sometime, somehow he'd come to love her—well, she'd been foolish to think it. Mad, really. But she hadn't known that Alicia was her rival.

"Rue," said Andy impatiently. "Snap out of it. Forget Brule; I had to tell you for your own protection. So you'd realize you were morally free from him. Under no obligation. But forget him. Forget Alicia. Put the whole thing in the past. Let me take you away before—we'l," he said grimly, "before they fix it so that I can't take you away."

The grim truth of the thing tore through her preoccupation; it was in its way salutary.

"Andy," she said slowly. "You said—that first night when you told me about Crystal and the letters to the police—that you thought she was murdered. You said you thought the police were right. Why did you think so?"

"Because of Alicia," said Andy. "There's no sense in beating about the bush any longer. I tried once to tell you some of what I knew without telling too much, and it only made things worse for you. I thought Alicia—well, after all, Alicia was here the afternoon of Crystal's death. And Alicia stood to gain by her death. It would leave Brule free to marry Alicia with no trouble about a divorce and no hint of talk. It was for Alicia the easy way out, and Alicia—somehow I've never thought that Alicia had any scruples in particular when it was something she wanted."

"But Crystal—Crystal practically supported Alicia, didn't she?"

Andy shrugged. "Yes — with Brule's approval. Perhaps at his instigation. Remember the situation between Alicia and Brule is—is a curious kind of thing. Both of them are conventional at heart; both of them hate anything that appears vulgar, common—blatant. And yet they are frantically in love. It was a dreadful thing—Brule marrying you to hurt Alicia. I don't know what it was they quarreled about; I don't know when and how they made up their quarrel except that when they did it was too late. Brule and you were already married. And Brule—to do him justice, Rue, I think as soon as he realized what he'd done to you and Alicia he really tried to break away from Alicia. But it was too strong for him. It——"

"Don't make me talk of it, Andy. The point is, now, Alicia is too civilized, too sophisticated to think of murder."

"What a baby you are, Rue! Alicia is a polite and polished and beautiful savage. When did she turn up yesterday afternoon?"

"Just after Julie died. She——Alicia came into my room."

"Exactly. Had you known she was in the house?"

"N-no. She said she had come to see Madge. You heard what she said."

Where is Democracy Going?

Montreal, Aug. 24—Alderman A. McLean Haig, chairman of executive of the Belleville City Council and Immediate Past President of the Rotary Club/in that city delivered a sweeping challenge to democracy at the noon-day luncheon of the Downtown Kiwanis Club at the Windsor Hotel here today. The Belleville civic official gave a concise clear and understanding address on the ills that beset democracy but also showed that democracy even in its present form was a better government, than some countries in Europe were now adopting. There were more than 200 present and he received hearty applause at the conclusion of his address. The text of his address is herewith given.

The question on the lips of any thinking person interested in the future of government today is — What is going to happen to Democracy and Democratic Institutions? Where is Democracy going? Is Democray—using the term in the sense of popular self-government—going to maintain itself amid the new political conditions and economic emergencies which assail the world order? Or to put the question in another way, is its apparent surrender to despotic or oligarchic power in so many countries where until recently it was gaining ground—is this surrender attributable to the special stress of emergencies peculiar to each country, or is it indicative of the definite and permanent collapse of the great 19th century political experiment?

The forces which have worked for the creation of popular government throughout the course of history have been partly of a practical and partly of a theoretical order. Both types have contributed to the development. But those of a practical nature have been almost continuous in their application while those forces of a theoretical variety have only at rare intervals exerted their influence. A review of the historical developments of these institutions will prove this to be the case.

The American Declaration of Independence declared in 1776—"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness, that to secure these rights Governments are instituted, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." Then the Declaration of the Rights of Man, adopted by the National Assembly of France in 1789 declared—"Men are born and always continue free and equal in respect of their rights. The end of all political associations is the preservation of the natural rights of men, and these are liberty, property, security, and resistance to oppression." Such theoretical declarations have made their occasional contribution to the evolution of Democracy but the main and most continuous forces were of a more practical nature and with economic implications.

To illustrate this statement let us just for a moment examine the imporant stages in the advance in England from the old Feudal Monarchy to Popular Government. The first marked stage was the struggle between the King and Parliament under Charles I and ending with the Revolution Settlement of 1688-89. This was a struggle primarily against ecclesiastical oppression, secondarily against civil misgovernment and in particular against the exercise of certain royal prerogatives deemed to infringe civil liberty, such as the claim of the King to levy taxes and issue executive ordinances without the consent of Parliament. The struggle was actuated by a spirit of resistance to actual oppression rather than by any desire to assert the abstract right to self-government.

The Second marked stage in the development of Popular Government in England began towards the end of the 18th century. It was a definite demand for the abolition of the borough-system of electing members to Parliament on the one hand and a curtailment of the royal power which had been enlarged by George III during his long reign on the other. This demand was stimulated and reinforced by the French Revolution and triumphed in the Reform Act of 1832. Here again it was the existence of actual evils which created the demand for Reform rather than theoretical considerations.

The demand for and extended franchise continued and the progress towards Democracy was resumed in 1867 by an Act which lowered the electoral franchise. It was continued in 1885 and finally concluded in 1918 with an Act which virtually enfranchised the entire adult population. This final stage of the advance was marked by an actual demand for the franchise.

The point which I wish to make from this brief history is this—and it is very important because the same human factors are operative today just the same as they were during the periods we have examined. Human nature and human demands are the one constant in a changing world. The really active forces leading to Reform, and eventually resulting in Popular Government in Great Britain were a demand for relief from actual oppressions and evils then existing—a demand for changes which would improve both the political status and the economic well-being of the great mass of the people. At only rare intervals did theoretical considerations emerge as a basis for self-government as a preferable form of government to any other kind.

In other words the primary causes leading to the continual change and improvement of Democratic Institutions in Great Britain were of a definitely practical order. An examination of the progress of self-government in other democratic countries reveals that the same is also true there. The Boston Tea-Party which eventually led to American Independence was a revolt against what the colonies considered unfair and unjust taxation.

Now we can inquire what all of this has got to do with us here in Canada today? Simply this—human nature has not materially changed and since the factors which have so largely contributed to the development of democratic institutions in the past have been economic as much as political it is reasonable to suppose that the same factors are operating today and will be the factors which will cause the changes in the practice of government in the future.

Abroad in recent years we have observed with dismay the collapse of popular self-government in many countries. The common explanation is that political and economic emergencies existing in these particular countries have required the use of dictatorial powers. There is no doubt but that the strain of the Great War, the bad Treaty of Peace concluding it, and the world-wide economic crisis apparent for some time have facilitated and accelerated these changes. These are not, however, the deterbining causes.

The determining causes lie deeper than these. They result from a misconception of the nature of Democracy inherent in the theory of its advocates. Joseph Mazzini, that great Italian patriot of last century once said, "That he who discovers the religion of democracy will save the world." What has been so sadly lacking in democracy is its religion—its sporotual foundations—the practice of the theory enunciated in the Sermon on the Mount.

The watchword and battle-cry of the advocates of democratic institutions during the 19th century was Liberty, Equality and Fraternity. The definitions given to each of these terms was good as far as they went. The same slogan would be satisfactory today and in the future but the definitions must be expanded. LIBERTY must mean more than the removal of restraints and prohibitions. It must mean a positive access by the majority of the people to larger opportunities, that no man shall exist only by the sweat of another man's brow. EQUALITY must mean more than that all children are born equal in that they possess at birth the same innate capacities of body and mind. It must suggest equality of opportunity for all and the direction of our economic machinery by those in authority in such a way that this may be possible. FRATERNITY must mean more than that we are all brothers under the skin. It must involve an interest on the part of each one of us in the social and economic well-being of our fellow citizens.

Democracy needs a new formula. Political methods as they exist in prevailing institutions must be reconceived. The discredited theory of Divine Right, above conscience, free from law, and independent of the people is hardly less dangerous to the world than is the every day practice under free governments where democracy is shouted from the house tops during elections but denied in the offices of the administration and in the machinery of parties for the rest of the time. It is not enough to justify our modern body politic to hear historic quotations from the Fathers of Confederation.

I am a firm believer in political parties as the best means yet devised for the satisfactory operation of popular self-government. I am a member of one of the old parties. But party government must be evangelised. The duty of political parties is to the people—to all the people—and not only to a few members of the Inner Council of the party, machine, office seekers and grafters. I believe that such changes directed towards the improvement of democratic institutions in Canada should and can come from within the existing parties themselves by a re-consecration on their part to the best interests of the Canadian people.

The electorate must be educated to a point where the duty to the State supersedes party allegiance. The franchise has been won and conferred only after many years of struggle and at a tremendous cost in blood and effort. The ballot is a sacred instrument in the hands of a free people and should be treated as such.

Popular governments are neither better nor worse than the individuals who sit in authority over them and administer them. It is therefore important that an intelligent electorate send the best possible representatives to our various parliaments. Men and women who are devoting their time and their talents to the public service are entitled to the thanks of the public whom they serve. The laborer is worthy of his hire. There is an unfortunate tendency to ridicule our public men—to impute to the unworthy motives for all their actions. It is so easy to malign them by gossip of an uncomplimentary nature and to hold up to review their private lives which should be of no public concern. It is urgent too that every possible step be taken to reduce the cost of elections so that potential public service be not restricted to the well-to-do. These matters are all important and their correction would encourage many good men to offer their services. Since able and worthy men are essential in the scheme of an improving democracy every effort should be made to make it as easy as possible for them to be available to our institutions.

Democracy in Canada must re-orient itself. Only then will we be able with a stout and courageous heart face and solve the many problems presently facing us.

There is the great basic problem of unemployment. It is a problem so serious that it cannot be calculated by the mounting cost of relief in dollars and cents. Thousands of young men and women are becoming wanderers on the face of this land for the lack of something to do. Their hope is diminishing and their courage is failing because this broad land teeming as we boast with milk and honey fails to place them in gainful employment. "A fair day's wages for a fair day's work; it is as just a demand as governed men ever made of governing. It is the everlasting right of men." These words are as true today as they were when uttered by Thomas Carlyle almost one hundred years ago.

I say to you gentlemen this great body of unemployed are looking, hoping and praying for a leadership which will provide them with a living—a leadership which will provide them with a living—a leadership which will cause our great natural resources to be intensively developed and to divest themselves of their fruits. A leadership which will accelerate the wheels of our industry and create a standard of living higher than any hitherto known which shall be permitted to us all.

There is another side to this unemployment problem. Those interested in criminology tell us that a large percentage of crime is committed during leisure or idle hours. If you wish to prevent a person from getting into trouble, keep him or her busy. So many people today are afraid of any movement savoring of fascism or communism. Yet here we are allowing tens of thousands of unemployed wandering around our country—nomads in our midst—the most fertile soil which any exponent of the many available "isms" could wish. Such an eminent observer as Mr. B. K. Sandwell, editor of the Toronto Saturday Nnight, is reported as saying before the Canadian Institute of Economics and Politics a few days ago that Canada may expect some form of Fascist government within a few years. I prey to God that such a prophecy may be untrue, but the answer is in our hands. The average citizen is law-abiding and God-fearing. But I repeat that unless we accept the challenge of this vast unemployment problem it may very easily become the origin of a destructive force which will destroy all institutions of government as we know them today in Canada.

Another of our major problems is the division of authority existing between the Dominion, the Provinces and the Municipalities. On every hand we see the efficiency of governments impaired by constant argument between the provinces and the Dominion as to whom should assume the responsibility. Our constitution which was framed in a magnificent spirit of harmony and co-operation in 1867 by our fathers should be reviewed and adjusted to our present day needs in a similar spirit. Unquestionably a simplification of our constitutional structure and a re-allocaton of executive responsibility between municipal, provincial and federal administrations so that each could be made responsible for the functions for which it is best adapted would do much to make government more efficient, more economical and more mobile in the event of emergencies. Surely this could be accomplished today. After 72 years we are not less charitable than the Fathers of Confederation and shall not permit petty political animosities prevent constitutional adjustments which are so badly needed and so long overdue.

We are hopelessly over-governed. Here we are with 10 parliaments, 4000 municipal bodies and some 23,000 boards of education. These have all been nourished and have developed under a constitutional pattern which anticipated an increase in population which it has not been our good fortune to enjoy. Each body is supreme in its own sphere subject of course to statutory supervision of one kind or another. All of this creates a framework which is burdensome, expensive and unwieldly. The simplification of our consitutional structure could do much to eliminate this duplication and over-government. This would permit the adoption of methods in administration which would rebound to the credit of democratic institutions and give them a permanency which the inefficient so often apparent can never expect.

Another of our major problems is the increasing cost of government and the resulting increase in taxation. I realize that large figures do not mean as much to you good citizens of Montreal with your annual municipal budget of some 60 millions as they do to us in Belleville. I was very interested in receiving a copy of a report of a Committee of your Council on snow removal headed by our good friend Alderman Edmison. We though in Belleville that we would be bankrupted this year by the necessity of budgetting $6,500 for snow removal, but when I saw that your average annual for the same purpose is $1,250,000, I realised how great the comparison.

Taxation and its constantly increasing cost, municipal, provincial and federal is becoming a burden which enterprise in Canada is unable to bear. It imposes a cost on industry which is a very serious handicap in competition in the markets of the world. The estimated average income per capita of the Canadian people in 1937 was $438. The average per capita tax bill for the same year was $121.50.

If public debt in Canada continues to increase as rapidly in the next 20 years as it has during the past 20 years our children will never survive the obligation. The net debenture debt of Canadian municipalities has grown from approximately $130,000,000 to more than $375,000,000 in a quarter of a century. The net public debt of the Dominion which was $336,000,000 in 1914 has now reached the staggering total of $4,000,000,000. Provincial debts have increased in the same proportion, ranging from 4 1-2 times in the case of Quebec to 50 times in the case of Ontario in a generation. It is absolutely imperaative that our governments of the future face this question of public debt or my friends it will eventually involve us in an economic and industrial collapse which neither the capitalistic system nor democracy itself will survive.

These are only some of the many serious problems facing our body politic. There are pleading for a solution and sooner or later a solution must and will be found. But the question is—and it is pertinent—will it be a government whose political theory is one of fascism, communism or state socialism? I sometimes wonder what would hap-

WALL STREET

New York, Aug. 24 (AP)—The stock market improved today after leading issues had tumbled one to more than five points on a revival of European war fears.

Prices soon hit the lows of the day near the start. There was an abrupt about-face mid-way of the second hour and losses were substantially reduced or cancelled in most cases and the ticker tape, for a brief period, fell a minute behind floor transactions.

Prominent on the turn-around on the home exchange were Bethlehem Steel, Youngstown Sheet, General Motors, Montgomery Ward, Goodrich, Western Union, Anaconda Southern Pacific and Union Pacific.

Down the greater part of the time were Eastman Kodak, Union Carbide, American Telephone, U.S. Gypsum, Douglas Aircraft, American Smelting and Phelps Dodge.

Dominion 4s tumbled more than a point. Off more than a point in the stock market were McIntyre Porcupine and Hiram Walker. Smaller losses were netted by Dome, Distillers and Lake Shore.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Aug. 24—(CP)—The sharp dip that came in the first hour of trading on the Toronto Exchange was partly amended in the second hour on leadership from New York.

Losses of 1 to 3 points among seniors were cut to a point or more in the rally. At noon the gold share index was at a new low for the year and the Industrials were down 1¾ for the day in the index.

Selling was heavy while the slump was on and turnover by 1 p.m. stood at 504,000 shares. Following the rally prices backed away from the tops, losing about 40 per cent of the recovery and the market thereafter became dull while awaiting developments in Europe.

A dozen new lows were posted in the Industrial section. Brazilian dropped to its lowest point on record at 6¾. National Steel Car lost 3½ points and Dominion Bridge 2¾. Walkers Common weakened about 2 points. Senior Oils were the firmest group.

Noranda weakened about a point and in the Western Oils Home slipped to a new low at 1.31 and then recovered. In the Golds O'Brien, Kerr-Addison, East Malartic and Aunor was sold actively but they came back fully.

HOG QUOTATIONS

CITY MARKET PRICES FIRM

Good Midweek Offering Available Today, Peaches at 25 Cents

Talk of war and the tenseness of the present European crisis failed to have any noticeable effect on the appetites of city dwellers today as they walked through the well-stocked stalls of the city market where a good mid-week offering of produce was available.

Prices, too, were unaffected, with all tones maintaining a steady level with little or no change from quotations of last weekend.

While the advent of the first of the late sweet corn did not materially affect the price, a noticeable increase ni quality was seen Good size ears sold briskly for fifteen cents the dozen, with many vendors selling out their stocks at an early hour.

Home-grown tomatoes were sold basket lots quoted at fifteen and basket lots quoted at fifteen and twenty cents. 6,000 JAPANESE TROOPS LANDED

Arrive in Shanghai Area to Take Some Action Against Settlement

Shanghai, Aug. 24.— (AP)— Six thousand Japanese soldiers were reported today to have been landed in the Shanghai area in preparation for "some action" against the International Settlement, garrisoned by nearly 5000 British, French, American and Italian soldiers.

The sources of this report, the most reliable foreign quarters, said the landing took place yesterday and that the Japanese had been planning for some time to occupy the Settlement, whose extra-territoriality dates back to 1845.

The original Japanese plan was said to have called for cutting off all rice supplies for the Settlement's population of 1,120,860 Chinese. The foreign population of the Settlement, including Japanese, is 28,583.

Fairs Go Back to Earliest Days, Record Progress of Belleville

Modern Fair Grounds and Buildings Factor in Success of Institution

COOPERATION

Again the season of agricultural fairs is rapidly approaching, when these annual occasions, which follow each other in rapid succession, mean so much to the entire community at large. Today the agricultural fair rings in closer communion the urban populace with the bounties of the harvest and soon the Belleville Agricultural Society will again present the Belleville Fair, supplemented by the products of the good earth and the handiwork of man.

The first record of a country fair in Upper Canada, now Ontario, was about the year 1792, while as early as 1806 attempts to form a province-wide agricultural society was made at York. The exact date of the first fair to be held in Belleville is believed to have been in the early 50's of the previous century, while the site of the fair at that time was now in the vicinity of where Belleville's present city market now stands.

The Belleville Fair grew rapidly in the years that followed until new grounds were necessary in the eastern part of the town and later within sight of the present and spacious Belleville Exhibition Grounds on Yeomans Street. Within the past two years the Belleville Fair has been elevated to a class "B" fair, within the meaning, by the Dominion Government and is considered one of the finest fairs of its classification in Ontario.

Purebred Cattle

Annually the display of prise purebred cattle has increased until additional housing is needed to take care of this particular entry. Co-operating with the Federal Government, the officials of the Belleville Fair have added extensively to their prize lists for cattle, horses, livestock and grains until the entry list at the Belleville Fair has reached an unbelieveable peak and today is taxing the buildings and farms to overflowing, Secretary R. H. Ketcheson revealed today.

Canada, being an agricultural nation, the general trend of conversation in the early autumn turns to the crops of the good earth and it is at these annual agricultural fairs that population of the country gather to discuss the crops and view the result of the year's growth. The Belleville Fair, that opens its gates on Tuesday morning next, is a splendid example in all its glorifications of the agricultural fair of today.

TWO PRISONERS SAFELY IN CELLS

Pangs of Hunger and Wit of Unidentified Boy Help in Arrest

Campbell's Bay, Que., Aug. 24 —(CP)—Two escaped prisoners are safely behind the bars in Pontiac County jail here today because of the pangs of hunger and the wit of an unidenitfied small boy.

Walter Piche and Robert Smith escaped Tuesday night after slugging two jail officials, and they were pretty hungry late yesterday when they accosted the small boy just outside the village of Bryson. They gave the lad money to go into the town and buy them sandwiches. Suspicious of their request, he decided they might be the missing prisoners, so he told a traffic constable. A sheriff's posse was quickly organized and sent to the rendezvous where the boy was to meet the two men with the sandwiches.

The posse surrounded the spot and the fugitives, eager for their sandwiches, walked into the trap. They were captured without offering resistance and immediately brought back to the jail here and placed under special guard. Additional charges of escaping from custody will be laid against them, police said.

Chamberlain

Similar Statement to Lords

While Mr. Chamberlain spoke in the Commons his Foreign Secretary, Lord Halifax, made a statement along similar lines in the House of Lords.

The Prime Minister revealed the German Fuchrer's claim to a free hand in eastern Europe without interference from anywhere came as a reply to a message delivered to Hitler yesterday through Sir Nevile Henderson, the British Ambassador to Berlin. This message restated Britain's own position—determination to stand by the Poles against Germany's increased demands.

"We still hope reason and sanity will find a way out," he went on. But, he added with emphasis, "the issue of peace or war does not rest with us."

Galleries Cheered

As the members and galleries cheered, Mr. Chamberlain said, "naturally our minds are turned toward the Dominion and I appreciate very warmly the pronouncements made by ministers in other parts of the commonwealth.

"The indications which have been given from time to time, in some cases as recently as yesterday, of their sympathy with our patient efforts in the cause of peace and their attitude in the unhappy event of those efforts proving unsuccessful are a source of profound encouragement to us."

The word "bombshell" was used by the Prime Minister in referring to the Russian-German non-aggression pact. It now appears it was negotiated secretly, while British and French military missions were in the Russian capital working toward an alliance with the Soviet Nnion.

The Prime Minister said he did not intend to pass judgment on the Russian-German issue today.

"Germany is now in a condition of complete readiness for war," he asserted, reviewing the events leading up to the present situation.

Poland, he said, has shown "great calm and self restraint."

"Poland has always been ready and is ready now," he continued, "to discuss her differences with the German government if they could be sure that these discussions could be carried on without threats of force or violence and with some confidence."

Then, turning to the new German-Russian non-aggression pact, Mr. Chamberlain said British-French-Russian military discussions were going well "when this bombshell came."

Unpleasant Surprise

The announcement of the pact came as an "unpleasant surprise to the British government," he said.

The Russian government, he continued, while carrying on discussions with Britain and France had been secretly negotiating with Germany for purposes "which on the face of it were inconsistent with the objects of their foreign policy as we understood it."

The House cheered this statement. It was noted that the Soviet Ambassador, Ivan Maisky, who usually attends important meetings of parliament, was absent.

Turning back to Poland, the Prime Minister said that at the beginning of this week German troops began moving toward the Polish frontier. Then he said:—

"The government's first duty is to declare that British obligations to Poland remain unaffected."

He was referring to Britain's pledge to aid Poland if her independence were threatened by an attack.

No Act of Menace

"I wish emphatically to repudiate any suggestion that our defensive measures imply an act of menace," he said. "Nothing we have done, or proposed to do, menaces the legitimate interests of Germany.

"It is not an act of menace to prepare to help friends defend themselves."

When he sent Hitler a message yesterday, Mr.. Chamberlain declared Hitler replied that eastern Europe was a sphere where Germany must have a free hand.

"Hitler says," he continued, "that if Britain or any other country chooses to interfere the blame for an ensuing conflict will be theirs."

Want No Special Position

Mr.. Chamberlain said the object of his communication to the German Fuehrer yesterday through British Ambassador Sir Nevile Henderson was "to restate our position and to make sure there was no misunderstanding."

"War between our two countries would be one of the greatest calamities that could occur," Mr.. Chamberlain said.

"The German Chancellor's reply includes what amounts to a restatement of the German thesis that eastern Europe is a sphere in which Germany ought to have a free hand.

"This thesis entirely misapprehends the British position. We do not seek a special position for ourselves in eastern Europe.

Halifax Makes Statement

Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax made a statement in the House of Lords.

"Throughout these days," he said, "we have been in close and constant contact with the French government whose attitude is identical with our own."

He declared that the government's message to Hitler yesterday "made it plain that if the cause should arise the government were resolved and prepared to employ without delay all the forces at their command."

Arthur Greenwood, acting leader of the opposition, described Mr. Chamberlain's statement as one of "gravity" and approved the government's policy of firmness.

"Let no man abroad," he said, "think labor will be a willing party ever to acquiesce in any further acts of aggression."

Sir Archibald Sinclair, Liberal leader, also approved the government's policy.

"Now that we are in a crisis, criticism must be put aside," he said.

Taking Swift Steps

Warsaw, Aug. 24—(AP)—Swift steps to meet any emergency, including military defence of Polish territory, were taken throughout Poland today.

After a series of conferences between government leaders at the presidential residence and a special cabinet meeting last night new defensive measures were reported to have been decreed and placed in immediate operation.

With nearly 1,000,000 men already under arms, it was reliably reported that a large number of additional reservists had been called to the colors overnight. It was understood that still more men might be mobilized.

It was emphasized, however, that the new measures were simply additional defensive precautions. Secrecy concerning the exact measures taken was considered as further evidence that Poland wished to avoid even the outward appearance of any movement which might be considered aggresive.

Despite the tension Warsaw was calm. Defence precautions were carried out without fanfare. The only subject of conversation, however, revolved around "if war comes."

President Ignace Moscicki presided at the conferences, one of which Marshal Edward Smigly-Rydz attended.

C. Hamlin With Voodoo 111 Flashes to World's Record At Red Bank, N. J., Regatta

Drives at Rate of 66.178 M.P.H. Over Measured 5-Mile Course

MANY THRILLS

Three World Marks Also Set in the Quiet Runabout Class

Down in Red Bank, New Jersey, where the cream of American speedboats in a world record breaking entry list of 891 starters, vied for regatta supremacy this week six world records were set in a spectacular climax for power-boat supremacy.

Boats and drivers many of whom raced in the Belleville Rotary Yacht Club regatta here on August 7th furnished one of the most thrilling exhibitions of this phase of water sports, ever seen on a lake course, by twenty-five thousand spectators.

Chauncey Hamlin, in his Tadpole "Voodoo III", that failed to show anything out of the ordinary in the regatta here, astounded veteran drivers and officials of the American Power Boat Association when he flashed to a new world's record over a five-mile course at a speed of 66.176 miles per hour to better the old mark of 64.332 formerly held by Julius Maneger of Pelham, N.Y.

The flaming yellow speedster, unorthodox in appearance and design, didn't win the race, but finished first in the first heat, Jackie "Pops" Cooper had sweet revenge over "Chrissie III" driven by George Schrafft, of Newton, Mass., his conqueror over the Massassaga course, when his white-hulled "Tops II" catapulted to victory in the second and third heats of the 225 class hydroplane race.

"Pops", however, finished a bad last in the first heat, with "Emancipator VIII" driven by Anthony Pestilo, Miami, which won two seconds and a third winning the race, by the point system. "Tops" was second with two firsts, and "Chrissie" was fourth.

Bad Luck Rides

Bad luck again rode the sweeping gunwales of "Tops III" in the National Sweepstakes for 225 hydroplanes. This race consists of three fifteen mile heats, "Pops" Cooper finishing fourth in the first heat, won the second, but beat the gun by a split second in the third and was disqualified. "Emancipator" won the event with 1,000 points with "Voodoo II" second with 869. "Pops" Cooper had to be satisfied with 569.

Beside the world record set by "Voodoo II" in her thrilling race, the 135 class hydroplane mark also went by the boards when, John L. Hyde of Washington drove his "Gypsy Lass" at 52.173 miles per hour to beat the old mark of 51.548 held by J. Auerbach.

Al Strum, St. Petersburg, Florida, who held the world's record of 47.145 for 91 cubic inch hydroplanes saw his mark go crashing as Arno Apel, Ventnor, drove his tiny "Agufla II" across the line in the new record time of 48.361.

The three other world marks were in the relatively quiet runabout divisions. Geo. B. Ward Jr., Wilmington, raised his mark from 51.933 m.p.h. to 53.254 in Class "E" racing runabouts. Fred Casanave of Philadelphia, boosted his mark from 37.154 to 38.136 in Class "E" service runabouts, and Joe Monigle of Wilmington elevated his mark of 40.632 to just over 41 in the Class "C" racing group.

Many Thrills

The regatta was not without its thrills and spills. One of the most spectacular, or rather bizarre experiences that ever befell a driver occurred to Jimmy Mullen of Richmond, Va., driving in the Class "B" amateur outboard event. A sudden lurch as he grazed the buoy tossed Mullen overside and although the taut spring of his safety throttle closed the fuel supply, the mile-a-minute momentum carried his craft at least 75 yards further before it came to a full stop.

A Coast Guard boat whizzed up to the swimming Mullen but he waved it away and continued to his racing pancake. Then he climbed into the cockpit and resumed. What is more, he finished the five-mile heat and, strangely enough, his 7th place coupled with his 400 points for wining the first heat, gave him a winning total of 471, a bare two points ahead of his nearest competitor.

A dime-novel experience also fell to Les. Buckman, Eastern Outboard champion while rounding a rough patch in the first heat.

Buckman was catapulted out of his heat when his flying boat struck the rough water. His legs were overboard dragging in the water, when by a superhuman effort he threw himself back in the speeding cockleshell.

Buckman lost no perceptible time, finishing ahead of Fred Jacoby, Jr., the defending champion.

GRANTED REPLAY OF GAME

Cobourg, Ont., Aug. 24 (CP)—The Junior Lakeshore League officials at a late meeting last night, granted Oshawa Juniors a replay Saturday next of the game played with Cobourg at Oshawa, last Saturday.

The Oshawa club had protested against an umpire calling time after a collision between two players fielding a hit, stopping an Oshawa runner on first.

Should further games be necessary the next two will be at Cobourg.

BELLEVILLE CLUB GOLFERS WIN OVER TRENTON

Members of the Belleville Golf Club defeated a team from the Trenton Golf Club by the combined score of 28 to 20 over the Belleville links in a friendly tournament played yesterday. Thirty two players, 16 on each team competed in the tournament, that proved interesting as well as to create a friendly inter-club feeling between the two clubs.

During the afternoon special sweepstakes were held with Belleville winning six of the nine prizes awarded. The Belleville players captured all three prizes given for the low gross score with Harry Ridley first, Jack Marsh second and Harper McElrath third. In the low net score, however, six prizes were given and won in the fololwing order, M. Andison, W. Waldorf, W. McClung, J. Liddle, J. Legault and Joe Cather.

AMATEUR GOLFERS TO HAVE FLING

Sectional Trials on Tuesday to Qualify for 160 Places in Tourney

New York, Aug. 24 (AP)—Crack amateur golfers, who have been trying without much success since last summer to make an impression upon the pros in open competition, begin their annual fling at their private tournament next Tuesday.

The fourth-largest entry list in the 43-year-history of the United States amateur championship, 821 low-handicap men, will try then to qualify for 160 places in the tournament proper at the North Shore Country Club, near Chicago, Sept. 11-16. Ten others, granted exemption as former National champions or title-holders in their own countries, will complete the main field.

Tuesday's sectional qualifying rounds will be held on 28 courses from Boston to Los Angeles.

The players granted exemption includes C. Ross Somerville, of London, who won in 1932.

Longboat Appears As Tableau Actor

Toronto, Aug. 24 (CP)—Heralded once as the world's greatest distance runner Tom Longboat has made another brief appearance in the public eye—this time as a tableau actor.

Longboat, the Indian runner who carried Canada's main hopes in the 1908 Olympic games at London, appeared last night as the male lead in an outdoor pageant on Toronto Island. He played the part of an Iroquois Chief who restored a captive Huron Chief to his tribe.

After the Olympics of 1908, when Longboat's machine-like legs failed him in the 26-mile grind over rocky English countryside, he passed gradually from the gaze of the sports-following public. Never, though, has he been forgotten by those who knew him as an impassive, long-limbed runner in the days when road-racing was Canada's principal sport.

Longboat ended his career as a professional, appearing in match races around the country. More lately, he has been employed by the city of Toronto.

Conducted under auspices of the Toronto Island Canoe Club, last night's presentation was to raise funds to send members of the club to next ear's Olympics in Finland.

JERSEY GIANTS HARD PRESSED TO HOLD LEAD

Return Home for Double Bill With Only One Game Lead

ROCHESTER WINS

Wings Defeat Buffalo With Johnson Getting His 21st Victory

(By The Associated Press)

Hard pressed to maintain their slight lead in the International Baseball League pennant race, Jersey City Giants return home tonight for a doubleheader with Syracuse Chiefs, third place holders who trail the Little Giants by 2 1-2 games.

With Rochester Red Wings, who have won seven of their last 10 games, only one game behind them, the Little Giants realize that a poor showing in this series might mean the dashing of their pennant hopes.

Last night the league leaders split a twin-bill with the Orioles, losing the opener 9-5 and winning the nightcap 3-1. Roy Bruner went the distance for the Flock in the first stanza to chalk up his ninth win of the year. The Giants took the second behind the five-hit pitching of Roy Joiner.

Buffalo Downed

Rochester downed Buffalo 7-4 to keep a game and a half ahead of Syracuse, which won 6-4 from Newark.

Si Johnson allowed the Bisons only seven safeties in winning his 21st of the year for the Red Wings. Greg Mulleavy homered for Buffalo in the ninth with two on and Beal and Kurowski connected with four-baggers for Rochester.

The Chiefs scored four runs in the second inning off starter Geo. Barley and went on to win in the fifth when Iggy Walters singled home Ed Longacre, who had doubled. Jack Tising went the route for Syracuse.

Only one game separates seventh place Montreal and last place Toronto as the result of last night's 10-6 victory for the Leafs. Jim Walkup started for Toronto and received credit for the win although he was relieved in the eighth.

PICTON PROTESTS AFTER LOSING TO NAPANEE 11-7

Picton Club Maintains Walt Gerow, Jr., is Ineligible

HURLERS SHELLED

Dainard and Abbott Knocked from Box in the Third Frame

Blasting a fierce fourth-inning ofensive that chased Picton's two ace twirlers, Napanee Gibbards continued their powerhouse playoff tactics at Picton yesterday in the second Bay of Quinte intermediate "A" final series baseball game with a crushing 11 to 7 win over the league leaders. The victory gives the Napanee squad a strangle hold on the best-out-of-five series, as the locals have yet to break into the win column.

The fatal fourth saw fifteen of the stout-hearted Gibbardites come to bat and comb out the offerings of three Picton twirlers for ten hits and as many runs. Abbott weathered the slaughter till six had counted, when he was replaced by Dainard.

Abbott was outstanding for Picton on the attack, while Burley and Gerow, oposing shortstops, covered acres to get in front of their fielding chances.

Protest Gerow

Immediately after the game, however, the Picton club through Secretary Lou Yanover announced they would protest the legibility of Napanee's shortstop, Walter Gerow, Jr., who the Picton club contend does not qualify as a player under the O.B.A. residence rule.

"We officially protested and mailed our objections to President Lorne McDougall last night. Player Gerow, we are told, obtained a transfer to play hockey in Northern Ontario, but was never transferred back to Napanee and also he did not qualify under the current season residence rule, we contend," Secretary Yanover was quoted as saying here today.

In all probability the protest will be held in Picton following Friday's third play-off game here.

Oshawa's Comment On Junior Tussle

"Too much hitting power at the plate and a pitcher named Hook who had too much speed for the Oshawa batters proved the big factors at the Stadium Tuesday night as Belleville Juniors "Citizens' Dairy" defeated Oshawa Juniors, Dixon's Coal, in the first game of their series for the Eastern Ontario zone championship. The score was 10 to 6.

Belleville won the game when Ethier leaped in the air in the first inning to rob Rospond of a sure extra-base hit and prevent Oshawa from getting two sure runs. After that, Dixon's did practically nothing at all at the plate until the 6th inning and by that time, it was too late, the visitors having built up a lead of 8 to 0.

Belleville has a smart hurler in Hook, a peppy infield and three sure-catch outfielders. However, if Dixon's can once find their hitting stride as they flashed in the local playoffs, they'll bombard Mr. Hook from the mound and perhaps even up the series. The second game is back in Belleville tonight.

Both Hook and Mullens hurled great ball for their team with the visiting tosser having a little less control but more speed in the pinches. Each pitcher fanned a half-dozen batters.

For the winners, Goyer was to the fore at the plate with Doraty, a left-handed catcher, also doing a nice job by reaching first base four times in succession."—(Oshawa Times).

TENNIS

Splitting points, the Belleville Tennis Club played the Trenton nettsters to a three-point draw in the Bay of Quinte Tennis League on the home courts yesterday. By winning three of the six matches the Belleville Tennis Club retained first place in the league, despite the fact the Tweed Club obtained six points when the Bay of Quinte Country Club nettsters defaulted their matches. Out at Campbellford, however, the Madoc Club staged a surprise victory over the Hydro Town nettsters, winning four of the six matches played.

At the Belleville Tennis Club, where the Trenton and Belleville Clubs split points and games at three each, the results were as follows:

In the first set of men's doubles M. Ackerman and C. Webb of Trenton, defeated H. Kerr and T. Burnett, Belleville, 6-2, 3-6 and 7-5.

In the second set of men's doubles, however, G. Bucker and Spencer Evans, Belleville, triumphed over Jamieson and Tomley, Trenton, 6-4 and 6-3.

Dawson, McLean, Belleville, won the men's singles 6-2 and 6-0.

In the ladies' doubles Marion McLean and Madge Howard, Belleville, won over G. Blachke and H. Franclik 6-4 and 6-3.

In the first mixed doubles Gordon Barclay and Muriel Wardner, Belleville, lost to M. Foster and Elena Westfall, Trenton, 6-2, 4-6 and 6-0, while Trenton also won the second mixed doubles over Jack Dickens and Jo Cruji, Belleville, but only after a torrid match.

Canada Grown by Canadian Skill,

Nature-Flavoured

It's an accepted fact now that the Canadian soil and climate give tobacco an added, exclusive flavour. There's one best way to prove this for yourself—buy a package of Dominion Fine Cut (the big package for 10c), and put it to the test by rolling your own. Remember the name — Dominion Fine Cut — grown in Canada by Canadians for Canadians seeking economy and pleasure.

"EVER SEE A FLUE-CURING BARN? Here's one. Curing takes from 68 to 96 hours in this barn, without let-up, and we have to keep our eyes on the thermometer and hygrometer all the time because we have to control the humidity and adjust the temperature nicely, varying it between 80° and 180° during the various processes of yellowing, fixing and drying. Just a little carelessness and you can ruin a whole tobacco crop." —J. D. (tobacco grower).

Surge of Yanks Largely Due To Joe Dimaggio, Dahlgren, Kellar With Splendid Pitching Defeat Chicago White Sox in Double Bill for 8 Game Margin

REDS ADVANCE

Gain Full Game on Cards by Defeating Philadelphia Phillies 3-0

(By Sid Feder Associated Press Sports Writer).

New York Yankees, to the surprise perhaps of nobody but Washington Senators' Clark Griffiths and a few more wishfull thinkers are far from being the crumbling Yanks these days and instead are limping along at a mere .800 baseball clip.

By taking 12 of their last 15 games, the most recent a doubleheader sweep at 7-2 and 6-41 over Chicago White Sox yesterday, the Yankees are in a spot now where, by playing .500 ball the rest of the American League season, Boston Red Sox could overtake them only by moving at a .730 pace.

In the National League it appears the parties of the second part in this fall's world series will be those Reds from Cincinnati. They knocked over the Phillies yesterday for a 3-0 decision to climb 5 1-2 games in front of the league, while St. Louis Cardinals lost their third straight to Brooklyn, 8-3.

Eight Games in Front

The surge of the Yankees, although largely due to Joe DiMaggio, skyrocketing back to the .400 mark, and twirlers Red Ruffing and Atley Donald, who turned in yesterday's twin wins, has been more successful because of the cogs replacing the ailing and worn out parts. Namely these replacements are Babe Dahlgren on first base and Charley Keller in right field. That double-win boosted the Yanks eight full games in front of the Red Sox, who took their single game in St. Louis, 9-1, as Fritz Ostermueller tossed a four hitter.

Hurls One-Hitter

Bill Boposedel pitched a one-hitter which gave the Borton Bees a 1-0 decision over Pittsburgh Pirates. Only Pep Young's scratch single spoiled the no-hitter. Deacon Danny MacFayden muffled the Buc bats, 3-1, in the nightcap.

Seven homers were hit in Detroit before the Athletics nipped the Tigers, 7-6 in 11 innings, the only other American League game. The Chicago Cubs collected a dozen hits and trampled the weary New York Giants, 8-3.

SHELL 'OILERS' DEFEAT POINTERS

Cementmen Go Down 5-2 in First Game of City Play-Offs

Making their hits count into runs the Shell "Oilers" took first honors in the City League softball finals by defeating the Point Anne "Cementmen" 5 to 2 at Coleman Flats last evening. The game developed into purely a pitchers' battle between Johnnie Bawden, on the hilltop for Shell, and "Ski" Brant, his opponent. The hits were rather even, the "Oilers" cut-hitting the losers nine to eight.

Errors paved the way for the Cementmen's loss, as they booted the spheroid for five costly errors, three of which entered into the ultimate scoring and placed Shell batters in scoring position, with the moneyed hit following in a prolific manner.

Moon's double and a fielder's choice gave Shell the first run in the third. Consecutive hits by Sero, O'Neill and Whalen gave the Oilers two more in the fourth while Loft and Hutchings hit to give Point Anne their first run in the sixth, while Brant doubled and later scored in the seventh to complete the visitors' scoring threats with Bawden showing some fine spot hurling in the eighth with two aboard. The Oilers scored one on an error in the seventh and another in a similar manner in the eighth. Bawden struck out nine to Brant's three.

Sero had two hits for Sheil, as every member of the winning squad hit safely once. Loft, Hutchings and Brant with two hits each acounted for the bulk of the Cementmen's attack.

The lineups:

Point Anne: Genereaux cf; Whitehead ss; Bennett rf; Green c; Gaulin 1b; Loft 3b; Hutchings lf; Whalen 2b and Brant p.

Shell-Aajmaa: Ronsky 3b; Amo lf; Bawden p; Sero ss; O'Neill 1b; Whalen cf; Reynolds rf; Moon 2b and Rowbotham c.

Score by innings:

Sports Roundup

(By Eddie Brietz Associated Press Sports Writer).

New York, Aug. 24 (AP)—Jimmy McLarnin, the Vancouver belter, is simply itching to get himself a fighter and return to the fight racket as a manager....You hear only two names mentioned in the American League—DiMaggio and Jimmy Double-x.

Lou Holtz, the comedian, went for 10 grand on Armstrong—largest single bet of the fight....Don't be surprised if "Spider" Baum, recently ousted President of the San Diego Padres, bobs up as a candidate for President of the Pacific Coast League.

Experts were a dime a dozen after the fight....One poll showed 'em divided 10-10 on the outcome; another 13-13....One thing the gals in the women's golf tourney at Darien agree on is that Virginia Guilfoil, the Syracuse bundle, is the best looking of the lot.....Mike Jacobs flew to Detroit today to open the Pastor-Louis ticket sales tomorrow.

Henry Armstrong will start work on a picture short as soon as his bunged up peepers mend.... Jack Doyle, Broadway's No. 1 bookmaker who closed his book on the Reds some weeks back is reopening same ....Ambers and Armstrong are both washed up and done as top flight drawing cards.

Gov. Chandler of Kentucky, here for the fight, visited the Giants' clubhouse and gave them a pep talk ....His honor may Colonel Lou Ambers before this edition hits the street.

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

with Ken J. Colling

They do say patience is a virtue, so it would appear we must be of a virtuous nature because we've waited a long time for this evening to arrive. For these good many years past we've been ridiculed, called a "blind Tom" and really fell upon by the Oshawa scribe, one George H. (Soup) Campbell, who always took great pleasure in making ouh old Central League baseball umpiring efforts in Oshawa just about as pleasant as the proverbial skunk at a garden party. However, now we hear the shoe is to be on the other foot, because our good friend (?) Mister (Soup) Campbell is slated to umpire the Oshawa at Belleville junior O.A.S.A. game here tonight. Incidentally Mrs. Campbell's little boy, George, proved highly satisfactory as a base umpire in the initial contest. (We imagine the Peterboro scribe would enjoy sharing the press box with us tonight at the Flats, just to give Umpire (?) Campbell the well known raspberry plus an additional Bronx cheer for good measure).

Away with this prattle, however, and let's get down to more serious things, such as who's going to win tonight's junior O.A.S.A. struggle. Naturally Cy Young's charges feel they can repeat that dose administered to the Oshawa kids on Tuesday, but Umpire Don Thomas informs us the Motor City nine is a smart a junior softball club as one could wish to see. "The Belleville kids played great ball on Tuesday and deserved to win, but it was Ethier's leaping one-handed catch of Rospond's stinging line drive in the second frame, that left the homesters bewildered, as Belleville continued to mount an early score. You can expect the season's best junior game tonight," predicted Umpire Thomas after reviewing Tuesday's game. Steve Hook, who hurled the first game for Belleville will be back facing the Motor City kids tonight, while Oshawa will have to send Mullens right back, as they face elimination in defeat. The Belleville kids were highly impressed with the fine Oshawa softball diamond at the Motor City stadium and hope til live and see the day when Belleville will have one equally as good.

It's win, or else, for the Belleville "Orfuns" at the Airport tonight. Surely Bud Wilkins' charges can't turn in two such miserable defensive efforts as they displayed on Tuesday. A little tightening up around the infield and the locals should beat the Flyers right on their own balliwack. The locals suffered a severe loss when Russ Ripper) Collins, their sterling second baseman, left the city for Kentucky. Collins returned to Kentucky with an uncle and may remain in the south for the remainder of the year. However, Jarrell filled Collins' shoes in ship-shape manner Tuesday and came through with timely hits. Incidentally if the locals can find Harry Dole or Lefty Collins, either of the Flyers' moundsmen, for another 15 hits, they should force the series into a third game, which would be played in Belleville Friday night in the event of a Belleville victory at the Airport this evening. The Belleville squad has its back to the wall this evening, as they face elimination in defeat.

Frank Sedore's Shell "Oilers" drew first blood in the City League softball finals, winning 5-2 last night over the Cementmen. The "Oilers" did not look nearly as impressive against Bubby Gaulin's crowd as they did last week against the Corbys A.C. and with an O.A.S.A. series coming up versus the strong Kingston "Tanners," the Shell outfit had better look to their laurels and snap out of their present dilemma. Last night's game developed purely into a pitchers' battle between "Ski" Brant and Johnnie Bawden and had Brant not have been the victim of several bad errors on the part of his team mates, the shoe of victory might well have been on the other foot today. The series resumes at Point Anne Friday. Incidentally Bubby Gaulin, skipper of the Cementmen, personally assured us last night he was of the opinion that the City League finals would not commence on Monday last if Point Anne had to play in the O.A.S.A. playdowns, as was the case. There is no doubt of Gaulin's snicerity, we are certain.

Cuffing the offerings of both Abbott and Dainard, the Napanee "Gibbards" made it two straight in the Bay of Quinte "A" play-offs yesterday as Walt Gerow's charges trounced Picton 11 to 7. Napanee scored 10 runs in the third inning when they knocked Abbott out of the box. Dainard was rushed to fill the gap and threw exactly three balls, which resulted in three hits and the exodus of Mr. Dainard. The veteran Ron Church took over the Picton pitching duties as this point and immediately halted Napanee for the remainder of the game. Switzer started for Napanee, but gave way to Jocko in the sixth and now Napanee have their ace hurler left for the third game Friday in Stan Spratt. There's a joker in the pack, however, as Picton have lodged a protest against Napanee, contending that Walt Gerow, Jr., Gibbards' shortstop, does not qualify under the O.B.A. residence rule. Well, if he doesn't qualify now, he didn't qualify last June, so where does that leave Picton, who knowingly played against an alleged ineligible player?

Sport Spice — The Brooklyn Dodgers are very much in the National League these days, at least the Cardinals think so.... Yesterday the "Daffiness lads" from Flatbush handed the Cards their third successive defeat, while the Reds were blanking the Phillies 3-0, despite the fact the former were out-hit....Crafty pitching by Paul Derringer and a homer by Craft gave the Redlegs the edge.. The Yankees walloped the White Sox for two games yesterday and enjoy an eight game lead in the junior circuit....Hank Armstrong and Lou Ambers meet in Madison Square Gardens on Nov. 1st for the former's welterweight title.. Tommy Pointer hurled the Port Hope Ontarios to a 4-1 win over the Bowmanville Royals, for the former's first play-off win in the Lake Shore League yesterday..... Pointer scattered six hits masterly....Shades of autumn — the Belleville Fair next week plus the announcement of football schedules.

How To Overcome Piles And Rectal Soreness

If you are annoyed with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not neglect the same or run the risk of an operation. Any itching, soreness or painful passage of stool, is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once. For this purpose get from J. S. McKeown or any druggist, a package of Hemroid and use as directed. This formula, which is used internally, quickly relieves the itching and soreness and aids in healing the sore, tender spots. Hemroid is a physician's prescription and is highly recommended. It is easy to use and it seems the height of folly for anyone to risk an operation when a simple remedy, which is so pleasant to use may be had at such a reasonable cost.

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

MODERATELY malefic aspects bearing rule on the affairs of this day make it difficult to presage the nature of th issues. The signs indicate that success and good fortune and happiness are to be captured by sound methods, good judgment, merit and by winning the support of those in influential positions. The latter may not be impressed without shrewd effort or tactful manipulation. A change of plans might best assist such maneuvering.

Those whoes birthday it is may encounter a year in which success and fortune are to be won by individual effort. It may take cleverness in developing plans, diplomacy in securing endorsement from those in power, and strategy in manipulating sudden opportunities that arise. Progress, prosperity and personal happiness depend upon fortuitious grasp of circumstances.

A child born on this day may achieve success and fair fortune in life by its own cleverness, practicality, worthy ambition and personal good graces, wrested from rather dubious conditions and circumstances.

HIT HUSBAND WITH DOG WHIP

Mrs. Allen Testifies Before Crowded Court Room at Calgary

Calgary, Aug. 24—(CP)—Mrs. Ethel Allen, 53, who claimed to have spent most of the last two years under ill-treatment by her husband, Dr. J. L. Allen of Calgary, today continued her story in police court of tarring and feathering Miss Alice Knowles, 28-year-old nurse last July 18.

Mrs. Allen, charged jointly with her daughter, Betty, 22, with causing actual bodily harm to Miss Knowles, told a crowded court room yesterday that she had purchased tar and split a pillow of feathers eight months earlier in preparation to "tar" the woman.

She said, however, that the tar was sent back because both Dr. Allen and Miss Knowles promised not to see each other during an interview in the last week of 1938.

Discovery Made in 1938

Mrs. Allen said that on Dec. 10, 1938, "I discovered he had a woman." During the argument that followed, Mrs. Allen said she snatched two letters from Dr. Allen's pajamas and "my maid came to rescue me."

"The letters started 'my darling' and told of how sorry the writer was to learn of Dr. Allen's illness.. did he love his wife?....and how the writer longed for some of the nights they had had together," testified Mrs. Allen.

"Where are the letters now?" asked Mr. Cameron.

"My husband stole them from my purse," she replied.

She told of futile attempts to break a friendship which she claimed Miss Knowles told her was "lewd and lascivious" between the nurse and Dr. Allen, and of her discovery after six months of reconciliation that Dr. Allen was still communicating with Miss Knowles.

Struck Husband With Whip

On July 18, the day Mrs. Allen admitted tarring and feathering Miss Knowles in the nurse's suite, Mrs. Allen said she called her husband "a wicked man and a liar" and struck him across the face with a dog whip, making his head bleed.

After an unsuccessful attempt that afternoon to get Miss Knowles to interview Dr. Allen with her, she said she slapped the nurse's face and broke her glasses, and told the court if the woman had accept- night, July 18. ed her suggestion no assault would have occurred at 9.30 p.m. that

Joseph Brant, 20-year-old Tyendinaga Indian Reserve youth, appeared today in County Police Court held here before Magistrate J. L. Lloyd, charged with the seduction of an Indian girl of previous chaste character. Robt. McCulloch, local barrister, appearing for the accused youth, requested an enlargement, which was granted until September 7th. Both Brant and the girl were in court today, the accused youth later being admitted to bail.

Murney Foster, former Frankford bailiff, who was arrested in Peterborough last week on a warrant charging him with obtaining money under false pretences, appeared today and his case was further enlarged for one week. Foster is alleged to have taken $191.00 of taxes and converted same to his own use in 1936, at which time he was arrested, but failed to keep his bail bonds at that time. He was arrested in Peterborough by the Provincial Police. Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C., agreed to the additional postponement.

Motorcycle Patrolmen H. Caldwell and Ervine presented several informations charging motorists with speeding and other infractions of the Highway Traffic Act, to which pleas of guilty and assessed fines had been previously paid in writing. An inebriate who was apprehended on the highway last night, was fined ten dollars and costs to conclude the proceedings.

The Morning After

By LILIAN OAKLEY

When Fred Lawrence decided to have a party and prove to the boys how much better his home-brew was than the pale anemic liquid they bought over the counters downtown, Bill Hay was the first man he called.

Bill's wife was a hyena about poker playing, and since his marriage, Bill had been forced to go contract. But business is not always business when it keeps a man downtown late, if you know what I mean. Anyway, Bill said:

"Okeh, old boy, old boy. I'm dry as a cotton batting camel and lucky is my middle name."

Then Bill called his wife.

"Hello, darling," he said in a voice heavy with business worries. "I just phoned to tell you not to wait dinner. From the way things look now, I won't be able to get away from the office before nine or after."

"Well, that's funny," his wife told him, "I thought you said at breakfast that you didn't have any business and that you just kept the office open to fool the neighbors."

"Yes—yes, I did say that this morning. But I've flushed a covey of orders and I've got to stay with 'em until I get 'em in my bag."

"I don't believe one word you say, Bill Hay, not one word. I think you're just trying to get out of going to Madge Cook's reception with me tonight."

"No, honestly, darling, I'd forgotten all about the reception. But this thing may break big for me and I've got to stay with it. And if things turn out as I expect them to I'll buy you the prettiest hat in town."

"Well, of course . . . But I still think it's queer that you have so much business tonight after saying what you did at breakfast."

"I told you that all of this came up since noon. And I'm going to have plenty of competition, so don't sit up for me for it may be 'leven, even twelve, before I get home."

When Bill got to Fred's house the party was on. And what a party it turned out to be! The home-brew had a kick to it and the cards ran high, wide, and handsome. Kings consorted with kings and the four aces clung closer than the Marx brothers. That is except when they were in Bill's hand. Bill had lots of luck but it was all bad.

They called the party off at four-o'clock, Bill was seventy-five dollars in the hole and had a cramp from writing I.O.U's. He borrowed twenty-five dollars from Fred to stem the current of his wife's wrath if the worst happened and started for home.

When Bill reached his house the moon had called it a night and gone to bed, the sun was shaking out its rays and Mandy the cook was in the kitchen starting her breakfast. Bill gave Mandy one of his borrowed dollars not to tell his wife what time he got home. Then he crept silently up the stairs to bed.

The next thing Bill heard was the clock striking seven. He opened a cautious eye and looked across at his wife's bed. She was gone, the covers were neatly folded back, the room was warm, the cat was purring on the window seat. Everything sang of peace and amity. Bill bounded out of bed with a light heart.

He went whistling down the stairs some ten minutes later and opened the breakfast-room door with a bright "Good morning, darling!" But the words froze in mid air. One look at his wife's face told Bill that she knew all. Bill did his part but he didn't get anywhere.

"Oh, stop lying to me, Bill Hay. I know exactly where you were and what time you got home," she said.

"I don't see how you know what time I got home," Bill said. "You were sound asleep snoring loud enough to wake the dead."

"I was not. You're just making that up, for I don't snore. I know what time you got home because Mandy told me."

"Mandy? What does she know about it?"

"Yes, what does she know about it? She knows that I lay here all night by myself with thieves and murderers running around everywhere, while you were out carousing with that awful Fred Lawrence, Drinking his vile home-brew and playing poker with that gang of cut throats he runs with. And telling me it was business! I ought to pack my trunk and go home to mother, that's what I ought to do!"

Bill knew when he was beaten.

"Well, to tell the truth," he said, "we did play a few rounds of poker after we got through our business. I was feeling pretty lucky, and I thought you could use a little sugar money."

Bill pushed one of the borrowed tens across the table to his wife. She eyed it with scorn. With an inward sigh of resignation he fished the other ten out of his pocket. Still hot words and cold looks. Then the telephone jingled. His wife went to answer it, pocketing the two tens before she left the table.

Bill made a bee line for the kitchen. He'd tell that colored Mandy a thing or two. But Mandy had gotten a cheerful little ear-full through the keyhole and she beat him to the first word by two breaths and a snort.

'Don't you come in here blamin' me, Mistah Bill, cause I never tol' yo' wife what time yo'all got home. Hones' to Gawd, I never. She come in here axin' me an' I said, 'No, mad'am, I don't know nothin' atall 'bout what time Mistah Bill got home—I was too busy gettin' my breakfus ready to look at de clock'."

Although the photographers that took these pictures did not have any idea of raising a controversy on the relative grace of male and female athletes, nevertheless, beauteous Kay Stammers was caught in a rather awkward pose as she slams one back over the net as she and Mrs. Freda Hammersley LEFT, defeated Helen Jacobs and Dorothy Workman to enter the finals of the U.S. National tournament. WHERE IS DEMOCRACY GOING?

pen to some of these national problems if we suddenly had a dictatorship imposed upon us in Canada as exists in Germany. It is not pleasant to conclude that under such a form of government many of our difficulties would quickly evaporate, or will it be a government of a free people representative of a new and improved democracy—a government made possible by a new approach and a new technique on the part of democratic institutions in Canada?

I am very hopeful for the future. I do not at all take as gloomy an attitude on the future of democracy in Canada as that of Major Vernon Bartlett, M. P., towards "Peace" in the British House of Commons when he said: "We shall not be able to enjoy ourselves until France's widow tells Stalin on his death-bed that Hitler was assassinated at Mussolini's funeral." We have had similar periods of hesitation in the progress of reform in the past. The Duke of Wellington said on his death-bed in 1851; "Thank God. I shall be spared from seeing the consummation of ruin that is gathering about us." There is hope. Remember the past. Lord Macaulay once said: "On what principle is it that when we see nothing but improvement behind us, we are to expect nothing but deterioration before us." A single breaker may recede but the tide is coming in. It is up to us and the only way to insure democracy's survival is to make it operate efficiently and effectively in the interest of all the people.

The country where the ideal democracy exists has not yet been discovered, but fatih in its existence has survived many disappointments and disillusionments. Many more will follow but an unconquering faith will survive them too. From time to time hope is revived by the appearance of a group of disinterested reformers whose zeal arouses a nation to sweep away abuses and leave things better than they found them. When speaking in New York before the Congress of Education for Democracy a few nights ago Earl Baldwin declared: "The world is not safe for democracy; it faces perils from without and within, and the perils from within can be averted only by reliance on spiritual foundations." That is the challenge to us today. Mental and moral inertia is the greatest danger. Lack of interest and acquiescence in things as they exist is deadly.

The call for leadership of a militant democracy comes today to North America. It comes to Canada. The Call for leadership in the development of a new interest in and the better functioning of democratic institutions in Canada comes to you as citizens of the first City in the land. It comes to you as members of this great and dynamic Kiwanis Club—leaders as you are in your various professions and avocations by virtue of your Club membership. It comes to you —to all of us as parents in the interest of our children and our children's children. It comes to us finally as Canadians, members of the great British Commonwealth of Nations, which as one eminent British statesman recently declared was the last bulwark of democracy remaining on the earth.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlmen: this is my final word—Canada needs an IMPROVED DEMOCRACY. I use the word 'improved" advisedly because I believe in it. I believe in democratic institutions as far as they go. I believe that popular self-government is the best means yet devised by men for governing themselves. The Macedonian call comes to us in Canada to grasp the torch and hold it high so that it may be a beacon of freedom throughout the world.

Mark you, my friends, the hour is getting. It is later than you think. There is little time to be lost. All around us other forms of government and other political theories are on the ascendancy. We hear their echoes even in this land of ours. It must not happen here.

Democracy is being attacked from without and assailed from within. Let us all today revamp our ideals of free government and see to it that the evils which beset it from within are abolished. Let us rededicate ourselves as members of our various political parties to the principle that we shall put our nation above our party. Let us reconsecrate ourselves to the determination that Democracy shall survive because of its own virtue. Time is always on the side of progress. There are great social forces at work in Canada today. To be or not to be, that is the question. Let us all provide a leadership so that these great forces may be harnessed to guarantee a NEW LIBEBRTY, a NEW EQUALITY and a NEW FRATERNITY, and see to it that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth.

Eat for Beauty

By HELEN FOLLETT

DON'T BE a snatch-and-run eater if you would have a good complexion. You won't be doing well by your digestive motors they'll get mad and have their revenge by giving your facial coat a grey cast or producing horrid blotches. Maybe they'll make the skin coarse-grained and you'll be dabbling on astringents the rest of your life.

Hasty Eater is Foolish

The business girl is all too often a hasty eater. Gulps a cup of coffee for breakfast, has luncheon on the run, hurries through dinner to start on the merry evening adventures. She is a foolish girl. Somebody ought to give her a good talking to.

Meal time should be rest time, especially at noon and night. Every meal should be a pleasurable occasion. Then the digestive juices are ample, nothing disturbs the nervous system, assimilation is normal.

The sensible person who respects the laws of health never gets into discussions while eating, nor does she choose a restauant that is crowded and noisy.

The time comes later on when one realizes that many beauty defects are largely the products of a hurried, disorganized existence. Difficult it is to drill this idea into the minds of young women who believe that cosmetics can make up for neglect of the health.

RUTH HUSSEY obeys health laws and earns beauty dividends

The florid brunette has to be pretty clever in choosing make-up and clothes. Strange though it may seem, her complexion is sometimes improved by the application of commercial blushes, especially when the natural flush carries a blue cast, as sometimes happens.

Black is a flattering color for hat or frock, especially if her eyes are blue, grey or hazel. She can wear deep, rich browns; should avoid the cinnamon tones. Beige has too little character to suit her type. Blue-grey is good; steel grey is cold. Lavender, purple and orange are her color enemies. Coral is acceptable; red should be used as trimming only.

When a Busy Woman NEEDS A NEW FACE

By HELEN FOLLETT

IT HAPPENS often in every woman's life that she has to make a new face for herself in a hurry. Sudden invitation to go places, and maybe she's been making a cake or digging in the garden; fancies that she looks like the breaking up of a hard winter. Let her not despair.

First the soapy cleansing with a heavy washcloth; thin ones aren't worth buying. A rinsing follows, and with the cloth that has been dipped in water fairly hot she gives her portrait a hasty steaming, holding the cloth close to her face with palms and flattened fingers.

Freshens the Skin

The wash bowl is filled with cold water and she indulges in an invigorating splashing. Nothing like hot water followed by cold to make blood streams skip about their business; to give the skin surface color and freshness.

A gentle drying with a soft towel, a speedy creaming, the cream being removed with tissues.

Powder is fluffed on, first on the neck, then patted upward, the nose being treated last. A bit of cheek coloring, if desired, a dash of rouge on the ears.

Eyes Get Attention

There's more, of course. Eyebrows and lashes are swept over lightly with the eyebrow brush. A tiny bit of mascara on the bristles will prove effective. Lastly a drop or two of the favorite perfume back of the ears. Then into the gay frock —and away she goes!

ANNABELLA, active and vivacious, always looks as if fresh from a beauty salon

Knees are about ready for an overhauling. What with wearing shorts and lolling on bathing beaches, the knees are not improved in appearance. They're nothing to brag about, anyway, as the skin is nearly always coarse, there, not of good coloring.

Use soap suds and a heavy brush, digging in the bristles with plenty of energy. Rinse with warm water, dry, give your leg hinges a brisk massage with cocoanut oil. If you are an outdoor girl you'll probably roll off some dead skin scales. Make a cup of your hand rub round and round.

While the oil remains on, pat in borated talcum; it will give the skin a nice, new, satiny finish.

Home Finishing Touches

By ELEANOR ROSS

SOME MORE of those clever household hints furnished by thoughtful readers. Here we go with an excellent suggestion for those who like pewter and like it shining bright.

Dissolve a little potash in hot water. Soak the pewter pieces in this and then rub with a soft cloth very slightly moistened with olive oil. Now rub lightly with a leather and watch the "shine" appear.

Those lovely linen table mats edged with lace that add such beauty to summer table settings cause plenty of grief when it comes to laundering them. The principal trouble is that the lace edge tightens and the linen centre bulges. This can be avoided in the ironing. While the mat is still wet, stretch the linen centre to its correct shape and dimensions, and pin it to the ironing sheet. Keep the pins close together at the joining of the lace and linen. Stretch the lace border into shape and pin this also. Iron the linen centre with the tip of the iron pressing in straight lines. Let the mat remain pressed in shape until the lace is quite dry.

Cleaning Wood Furniture

Keeping the woodwork of furniture clean is a task that is sometimes overlooked. Use a solution made up of one quart of boiling water, three tablespoons of linseed oil and one tablespoon of turpentine. Wash one section of the wood at a time with a soft piece of flannel dipped into the solution, then dry with a cheesecloth. Or the furniture can be prepared for polishing by wiping it with a cloth dipped in vinegar and water.

When there are scratches on the furniture, try rubbing them with the meat of a pecan nut to cover the marks, or use iodine in the case of mahogany furniture.

When there are white spots on the furniture caused by heat on the lacquer finish, apply warm camphorated oil with a soft flannel cloth and then rub briskly to restore the polish. To conceal cracks in the furniture, apply melted beeswax on the end of a knife and press firmly and smoothly into the cracks.

Save Beauty of Nails

And here's a beauty note from a reader. She advises woman to dig their nails well into a cake of soap before starting on a job such as cleaning, dyeing or gardening. Then there's no chance of the nails becoming stained. Afterwards remove soap with a nailbrush and the nails will be nicer than ever.

Getting Your Just Desserts

By Alice Lynn Barry

IF YOU are a sherbet addict you will probably give this recipe for orange sherbet a quick trial. It is a splendid formula because it is so simple and it turns out a sherbet that is velvety smooth.

Boil one and one-half cups sugar and a cup of water together for five minutes. Add slowly to two beaten egg whites. Add two cups orange juice and three tablespoons lemon juice. Pour into freezing tray and set cold control at fast freezing. Freeze stiff and beat or stir thoroughly. Return to freezing compartment and finish freezing. May also be made in crank type freezer. Serves eight to ten and makes about one quart. Use this sherbet for the meat course or with wafers as a dessert. Nice also as a dressing with fruit salad and as a float for orangeade or lemonade garnished with mint.

Mentioning desserts brings to mind a dish that youngsters love. Combine one cup each orange slices and banana slices and one cup quartered marshmallows. Save juice when slicing oranges and pour over mixture. Chill, if desired. Serve in dessert glasses. P.S. Grown-ups won't refuse it either!

Bananas don't like to be kept in the refrigerator. They like to ripen at will in the fruit bowl. But once a banana is out of its yellow jacket and into a cream mixture for freezing, it should take to the refrigerator tray. Bananas and macaroon crumbs can get together and mingle in a delicious dessert.

With Macaroons

Banana Macaroon Ice Cream is made with one cup mashed ripe bananas, two teaspoons lemon juice, one-quarter cup sugar, one-quarter teaspoon salt, one-third cup milk, two egg whites, one cup whipping cream, two egg yolks and one-half cup coarsely crumbled macaroons. Mix together bananas and lemon juice. Add sugar, salt and milk, stirring until mixed. Beat egg whites until stiff. Whip cream until thickened but not stiff. Beat egg yolks until thick. Combine bananas, egg whites, egg yolks and cream. Turn into freezing trays of automatic refrigerator. Freeze with indicator at coldest setting, stirring every thirty minutes until mixture begins to hold its shape, adding crumbled macaroons at final stirring. Then freeze until firm. Makes eight servings and is a swell company sweet.

Nourishing and Tasty

Another splendid dessert for youngsters, a sweet that is wholesome, nourishing and tasty, is made with a cup of washed, soaked rice, a cup of chopped raisins and two cups of finely chopped cooking apples. Stir all these into one and one-half pints of milk. Add sugar to taste and a good pinch of powdered cinnamon or clove. Pour into well-buttered pie dish and cook very slowly for at least two hours. Serve hot or cold with plenty of cream.

Halloway

Halloway — On Friday evening a large number of friends and neighbors gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Ackers, who were recently married, and presented them with a chest of drawers, an end table and satin cushion. The following is the address.

Frankford

Stirling, Aug. 24 (Special)—Marked down amongst the most successful social events in the history of Frankford village was the Street Dance and Carnival held on Wednesday night under the auspices of the Frankford Citizens' Band. Hundreds of dance lovers from all parts of the province joined in the merriment of this annual event that is gradually gaining renown in all parts of the province.

There is little doube that its purpose is one of the main attractions for out of the funds made, the musicians of the Frankford Citizens' Band numbering about twenty in all, are given the opportunity of broadening their musical knowledge buying having their expenses paid to the Annual Music Day at the Canadian National Exhibition. Each member of the band is given funds to permit him to attend this function which is listed among the nation's annual achievements.

Band For 65 Years

For sixty-five years Frankford has, in justification boasted the possession of one of the finest bands in the district, and in that time no less than ninety musicians have learned to play various instruments. The present group of musicians numbering about twenty, have played together for the past sixteen years and among them is Bandsman Ferguson, who has played in the Frankford Band for more than half a century. During the activities of the most recent organized group of musicians, it is revealed that the sum of $6486.00 has been spent in equipment and uniforms etc., etc., in consideration of the fact that the band is entirely self-supporting is really something to be proud.

Much of the success of the event fell upon the shoulders of those who willingly accepted the responsibility and the committee worked under the direction of the following bandsmen and officers of the organization: Band Leader Floyd Ketcheson, Manager Percy Bell, R. Lockwood, M. Laws, Treasurer C. Butcher and Bandsman Stickle. These men along with countless others who worked under their direction are to be highly commended for the manner in which the affair was organized and conducted. Frankford streets were crowded with cars and happy dancers filled the main business section as they danced until the early hours of the morning.

RUMOR OF NEW PEACE OFFER HEARD IN BERLIN

Hitler is Likely To Reject Plea Of Roosevelt

Nazis Give Poland, Britain and France "Day of Grace" to Capitulate to German Demands

PRESSURE EXERTED

Reports Show Hitler Was Near Point of Giving the Command to Start a Conflagration

Berlin, Aug. 25—(CP-Havas) — The German news agency reported tonight that Polish anti-aircraft batteries fired at noon today on a transport plane carrying Dr. Wilhelm Stuckart, Secretary of State for Political Affairs in the Reich Interior Ministry.

Dr. Stuckart was returning from a congress of German jurists at Zoppot, Danzig Free City, when the incident occurred, the dispatch said.

No Damage Reported

The report said nothing about damage to the plane or injuries to any of the passengers.

The German news agency also reported that the German intelligence service has ascertained a half dozen Polish divisions were on the frontier of East Prussia and eastern provinces of the Reich.

The agency said preparations made by the Poles "cannot be considered of a defensive nature."

It was said the Poles brought up much cavalry within striking distance of the border and that this indicated an offensive action was contemplated.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Skylight! We usually think of light as coming directly from the sun, but the indirect light received from all portions of the sky is not inconsiderable. When the sun is about 40 degrees high the light from the sky is about one-quarter of that received directly from the sun itself. This diffused light must of course be added to direct sunlight, and has the same effect as though the sun were higher in the sky when the illumination on a horizontal surface is considered. The great value of skylight is to throw light on all sides of an object, thus softening the shadows. It also prolongs the hours of daylight by giving us the twilight periods at dawn and sunset.

NEWS ODDITIES AND BRIEFS

THE "LITTLE" DRINK WAS TOO MUCH

Pittsburgh, Aug. 25 (AP)—"I took a little drink", George Smith, 73-year-old tinker said in court, explaining why he struck a companion. "How much?" asked the Judge. "Twelve doubleheaders of whisky, 12 glasses of wine and some bottles of beer," Smith related meekly. "Six months to one year," sang out the Judge.

MICHIGAN GOVERNOR DISLIKES SHORTS ON BOY SCOUTS

Lansing, Mich., Aug. 25 (CP)—From now on Boy Scouts serving Governor Lurn D. Dickinson will wear winter breeches no matter what the weather, Scout officials said today. Two youths assigned to aid the 80-year-old Governor at a fall fair were reprimanded for their shorts. "I don't like to see young men in shorts," Governor Dickinson said.

Say Polish Insurgents Killed 7 German and One Czech National Berlin, Aug. 25—AP)—The Berlin Evening newspaper Nachtsausgabe in a dispatch from Machrische-Ostrau, Germany, declared "Polish Insurgents" shot and killed seven Germans and one Czech National at Bielitd, across the Polish border.

The newspaper's correspondent reported the Poles rounded up 25 Germans and several Czechs at Bielitz Thursday morning on charges of subversive activities. Loaded into trucks, the arrested men tried to flee into a nearby forest when one of the vehicles swerved from the road, the newspaper account asserted.

The Insurgents immediately fired several volleys, instantly killing eight and seriously wounding seven others, the dispatch said.

Appeal for Prayer On Sunday Next Made by Archbishop

London, Aug. 25—(CP)— An appeal for "prayer that even now the crime and horror of war may be averted" appeared in a letter to The Times this morning over the signature of Most Rev. Cosmo Gordon Lang, Archbishop of Canterbury.

The primate of the Church of England fixed Sunday, Aug. 27, for "special and united acts of prayer" that time be given "wherein nations may try to settle their differences by peaceful means, prayer for all to whom the tremendous responsibility of government has been committed that they may be restrained and guided by the spirit of God; prayer that through all these confusions God's will may be done."

The primate said there was no need for any special forms and that "the lessons appointed for Sunday....have an appropriateness of their own."

Hungary, Rumania Ready to Sign Non-Aggression Pact

Bucharest, Aug. 25—(AP)—Authoritative quarters said today that a non-aggression pact between Hungary and Rumania "is nearly ready for signature."

They said discussions were "very far advanced" and that the proposed treaty had been drawn up.

Official quarters in Budapest denied that any such negotiations were in progress but declared: "There may be something in the future."

Informed quarters here said the conversations had been proceeding between members of the Hungarian legation and the Rumanian foreign office. They declared Germany had expressed pleasure at the project.

It was recalled that in March Hungary offered a non-aggression treaty to Rumania in return for "better treatment" of the large Hungarian minority in Transylvania. Recently the Hungarian press has expressed satisfaction with the new treatment accorded Hungarians in Rumania.

POLAND'S RIGHTS IN FREE CITY MUST REMAIN

Country Determined to Fight if Status Changed in Any Way

PAPERS COMMENT

Construction of Shelters and Trenches Rushed at Warsaw

Warsaw, Aug. 25—(AP)—Poland's determination to fight if Danzig's status violates Poland's basic and vital interests and rights in the Free City was emphasized today in Warsaw's two leading pro-government morning newspapers.

Poland cannot permit, according to almost identical articles in the Kurjer Poranny and the Express Poranny:

1. Any attempt at union between Germany and Danzig;
2. Exclusion of Danzig outside the policy customs frontiers;
3. Submission of Polish rights in Danzig to the control of a third power (particularly meaning Germany);
4. Depriving Danzig Poles of their rights of national development.

The seemingly inspired survey of the situation coupled with widespread reports that the Polish government had sent—or was sending—a note to the Danzig Senate, led to the belief among observers here that the note contained in essence the four rights, which Poland considers vital to maintaining its outlet to the Baltic Sea and its continued independent economic existence.

KING RECEIVES SIR S. HOARE

Discuss Projected Orders-in-Council to Implement Defence Act

London, Aug. 25.— (CP)— The King today received Sir Samuel Hoare, Home Secretary, presumably to discuss projected Orders-in-Council which would implement the sweeping Defence Act passed last night by Parliament.

Sir Samuel gave the House of Commons assurance that while the powers of the Act were "wide, flexible and indefinite' 'the Government would bring into force only those of the regulations "that are actually necessary at the present time".

It was indicated the immediate scope would be compulsory air raid precautions and regulations inflexibly preventing the flight of capital from Britain. Certain "priorities" undoubtedly were contemplated to ensure precedence for the manufacture of arms and war supplies over commercial orders.

"I give assurance", Sir Samuel told Parliament, "that so far as the whole press is concerned there will be no censorship until and unless this country actually is involved in hostilities".

PROCLAMATIONS DRAFTED BY U.S.

Will be Used in Case War Breaks Out in Europe

Washington, Aug. 25—(AP)— A series of government orders and proclamations was nearly ready today for issuance the moment war should come in Europe, so as to protect the United States from the hooks of the conflict.

The drafts, prepared at meetings of high Federal officials, cover steps to be taken for the financial markets, commodity markets, shipping, airplane services, communications, and the like. They are authorized under the Neutrality Act.

Short wave wireless transmission, it was learned, would be controlled by government attaches. Because short wave transmission goes to Europe, its operation might be regarded as prejudicial to the country's neutrality.

Another problem that confronted officials was transatlantic flying service. They had to decide whether, if war comes, the service should be permitted to continue.

PREPARATIONS IN CITY OF DANZIG BROADENED TODAY

Business Goes on as Usual Under Increasing Tension

GAS RATIONED

Danzig, Aug. 25—(AP)— Poland protested today to the Danzig Senate against the elevation of Nazi district leader Albert Forster as Chief of State of the Free City.

Well-informed sources said it was unlikely the Polish note would be answered.

The Danzig Vorposten, Nazi organ in the Free City, described the Senate's action yesterday as the "final prelude" to the return of Danzig to Germany.

Poland also protested against what she described as an attack on Polish management of the Free City railroads through the arrest of a number of railroad men. Military preparations continued.

It was almost impossible for private automobile owners to buy gasoline, so heavy had been the demands of Danzig military machine.

The Free City sent large contingents of troops to points near the Polish border last night. Road blockades were ready to be thrown into place. Some small roads leading to the frontier were cut off by storm troops a mile or so from the border.

However ,traffic on the main road between Danzig and the Polish port of Gdynia was permitted to continue.

The heavy concentration of troops followed reports published in the official Nazi newspaper, Danziger Vorposten, of "general mobilization" and "threatening movements" across the border in Poland.

Polish Guns Trained

The newspaper reported that Polish guns were "trained on the German border," new trenches dug and forests partially cleared to provide an open field for shooting.

The impression given was that Danzig was in a critical position and many observers saw in the press campaign the foundation for an appeal to Fuehrer Hitler for help.

All flags were ordered out today to welcome the 13,000-ton cruiser Schleswig Holstein which is making a formal visit announced some weeks ago. The ship which carries four 11-inch guns and ten 9.8-inch guns has 750 men aboard.

Albert Forster, Hitler's representative in the Free City who yesterday became head of the government as well as the Danzig Nazi party, was scheduled to exchange visits with the commander of the vessel.

Mystery Surrounds Discovery of Car

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 25.—(CP)—Mystery surrounds the discovery of a water soaked car, accidentally raised by a derrick cable at the Lasalle causeway here. The car still had a 1937 licence plate attached, but this morning the police had not yet identified the owner.

The exterior of the car was not badly damaged, showing no sign of highway accident. Air still remained in the tires. The licence plate was 87-U-78, issued in 1937.

When the car was opened the key was still in the ignition switch and ignition was on, indicating that the car might have been run off the bank

FIVE ARE KILLED SCORES INJURED IN AN EXPLOSION

Fears Aroused I.R.A. Has Renewed Its Bombings in England

3 STORES DEMOLISHED

Coventry, England, Aug. 25—(CP)—An explosion of terrific force today was reported to have killed five persons and injured scores in the main street of the manufacturing centre of Coventry and aroused fears the Irish Republican army had renewed its bombings.

Three arrests were reported immediately after the explosion.

Coventry is nearly 90 miles northwest of London. Its principal shopping street, Broadgate, was ankle deep in shattered glass and debris. Three stores were demolished. Passing motor cars were wrecked and cyclists were hurled from their machines.

By coincidence a bombing plane had been seen over the city shortly beforehand and the occupants of one restaurant ran into the street shouting, that war had started.

LEPKE BUCHALTER GIVES SELF UP

Tells Federal Agents He Has Not Been Out of Borough of Manhattan

New York, Aug. 25—(AP)—Louis (Lepke) Buchalter, fugitive racketeer with a $50,000 price on his head who gave up in a surprise surrender, was questioned today in closely-guarded secrecy.

Evading a two-year search that cost the United States Government and New York State $400,000, the 43-year-old gangster voluntarily put himself in custody of J. Edgar Hoover, Chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, at an undisclosed place in Manhattan last night.

Hoover declined to give details of the arrest, other than to say he and Lepke were alone when the latter surrendered.

"He told me he had never left the borough of Manhattan," Hoover announced. "He surrendered. There was no money promised or paid by the F.B.I. We made him no promises of immunity or anything else."

Surrender Saves Money

The surrender apparently saved both the F. B. I. and New York City the $25,000 rewards each had posted for capture of the man whom Hoover listed as "Public Enemy No. 4."

The search for Lepke following the offer of a $50,000 in rewards spread over most of the United States and Canada. As recently as yesterday a rooming house keeper at Port Frances, Ont., reported a man resembling Lepke stopped at her establishment. Previously a man "with a mean look" resembling Buchalter was reported seen in the Muskoka Lake district.

BIG GAIN PLANE PRODUCTION

OTTAWA, Aug. 25.—(CP)—Production of the aircraft industry in Canada in 1938 amounted in value to $6,927,105, a sharp increase compared with $1,730,724 the previous year, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported today. There were 13 aircraft industry factories compared with eight in 1937.

London Sees Workmen Strengthening Home Defences in Crucial Hours

GERMAN SHIPS CALL

London Papers Comment as to Reason for Hitler's Pause

By GUY RHOADES
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 25—(CP Cable) — Great Britain worked to reinforce its home defences today — grimly calm as the world sat with fingers crossed waiting for one man to make the sign that would mean peace or war.

While Adolf Hitler and his high chiefs kept silent in Berlin, Londoners saw more khaki on the streets and watched more military trucks trundle through traffic.

The newspapers sought some comfort in Japan's apparent annoyance over the Russo-German Act. They expressed appreciation of the peace proposals by Pope Pius and President Roosevelt.

Workmen piled sandbags against the mansion house walls, packing of the national treasures continued and churches removed stained glass windows and placed them in cellars.

Cruises Cancelled

Numerous shipowners cancelled cruises scheduled for the weekend. Tourists poured back from the continent. Those who planned to evacuate their London homes began moving from the city in case transport later might be monopolized by the military.

In the midst of these preparations it was noticed that German ships continued to call regularly at British ports. A delegation of German scientists arrived for a conference of geneticists and German newspaper correspondents were told to remain at their posts.

WOMAN'S DEATH AT WINDSOR, ONT., TO BE PROBED

Mrs. Harold Goyeau, Windsor, Discovered by One of Her Daughters

HEAD IN TOY

Windsor, Ont., Aug. 25—(CP) — Mrs. Harold Goyeau, 26-year old mother of three children, was found dead on the floor of her bedroom today, her throat jammed tightly between the curving neck and back of a two-foot toy swan. Death apparently was due to strangulation.

Coroner Dr. James M. Young asked police for a complete investigation of the woman's death, discovered by her seven-year old daughter, Dorothy Jean. The girl told police that as she awakened and discovered her mother was not in bed she heard a gurgling noise." The girl's screams brought Alfred Kelley, a neighbor in the rooming house, to the Goyeau's room.

Applied Respiration

Another neighbor, Ed Allan, applied artificial respiration but Mrs. Goyeau was pronounced dead when doctors arrived. Mrs. Goyeau's husband was away at Leamington where he worked.

"Her neck fitted right into the swan's, so tightly I couldn't pull it out," Kelly said. "Finally I had to break the swan to release her. It's hard to understand how she came to be jammed in the toy that way. There was a kitchen chair across her lower limbs."

Dr. Young withheld decision as to an inquest'

Engineer May Lose Sight of One Eye

Brockville, Ont., Aug. 25.—(CP)—George Jarreld, Kingston, chief engineer of the Canadian Government steamer "Grenville" was looking over the machinery in the engine room of his craft at the Marine Works in Prescott last night, when the glass water indicator burst.

Fragments of the glass struck him in the face and right eye.

Jarreld was rushed to the hospital and given temporary relief. Later he was transferred to a Kingston hospital for special treatment. It is feared he will lose the sight of the eye.

Hitler Summons British, French Ambassadors

Nature of Talks at Reichchancellory in Berlin is Not Known — Italian and Japanese Ambassadors Are Also Called in by German Fuehrer — Talk With Sir Nevile Henderson, British Representative Lasts for Three Quarters of Hour

SPECULATION AS TO CONVERSATIONS

Britain and Poland Today Sign Mutual Assistance Pact Which Confirms Temporary Agreement Signed at Time Polish Foreign Minister, Joseph Beck, Visited London Some Time Ago as Britain and France Projected Anti-Aggression Bloc in East Europe

Berlin, Aug. 25 (AP)—Talk of a new peace offer in the German-Polish crisis spread like wildfire through Berlin this afternoon after Fuehrer Hitler had seen a number of foreign diplomats.

Hitler was closeted for a half hour with Sir Nevile Henderson, the British Ambassador. Later he received the Ambassadors of France, Italy and Japan. The nature of the talks was not revealed.

Berlin, Aug. 25 (AP)—Fuehrer Hitler early this afternoon asked British Ambassador Sir Nevile Henderson to visit him. Sir Nevile called about 1:30 p.m. (8:30 a.m. EDT). The nature of his talk was kept confidential.

Sir Nevile was summoned as authoritative Nazis forecast German refusal to follow President Roosevelt's suggestions for settlement of German-Polish differences.

While Sir Nevile was talking with Hitler, Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop summoned French Ambassador Robert Coulondre to the Foreign Office.

ANGLO-POLISH MUTUAL PACT SIGNED.

London, Aug. 25 (CP)—A formal agreement of mutual assistance between Great Britain and Poland was signed at the Foreign Office late today by Viscount Halifax, Foreign Secretary, and Ambassador Count Edward Raczynski.

"This agreement replaces and gives formal effect to the provisional stances under which the parties would go to each other's assistance.

"It is a source of lively satisfaction to both governments that the negotiations for the present agreement have been so speedily and satisfactorily concluded," a Foreign Office official statement said.

"This agreement replaces and gives formel effect to the provisional agreement reached between the United Kingdom Government and the Polish Government during Foreign Minister Joseph Beck's visit to London last spring and announced in the House of Commons on April 6," the statement added.

Timing of the announcement of the signatures was soncidered significant in the light of the reported attitude of skepticism in Germany toward Britain's determination to aid Poland.

SETTLES DOWN IN NEW ROLE.

Moscow, Aug. 25 (AP)—Soviet Russia settled down today to her new role of European isolationist and a friend of Nazi Germany.

The British and French military missions, having wasted time and money in vain to bring Russia into a tripower mutual assistance pact, prepared to go home. Diplomatic circles considered reports the talks might be resumed as most doubtful.

It was officially announced the supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. would convene in extraordinary session Monday. The Red parliament will meet presumably to ratify the non-aggression pact with Germany.

Symbolical of the Soviet about-face in the European diplomatic line-up the Moscow radio station last night put on a special program of music by German composers.

ITALIAN RESERVISTS CALLED.

Rome, Aug. 25 (AP)—Two classes of Italian reservists were called to the colors today, bringing those under arms to a total of six classes.

The classes called today were composed of those men born in 1903 and 1913.

They were unofficially estimated to add about 500,000 men to the 1,300,000 already under arms.

It was officially announced the naval and air ranks of Italy's fighting machine had been "almost completely filled" since August 21. In addition to the six army classes, thirty-five battalions of militiamen have been called up, as well as specialists of other army classes.

MUSSOLINI APPEARS.

Premier Mussolini made a brief appearance on the balcony of his Palazzo Venezia to acknowledge the cheers of a crowd, but refrained from speaking.

The Italian liner Saturnia was held at Trieste after postponing its sailing yesterday as did the Conte Di Savoia and the Augustus at Genoa.

SURPLUS NOW NO PROBLEM

Ottawa, Aug. 25— (CP)— With war threatening the world, Canada's surplus of wheat does not loom as the problem it was a few weeks ago.

It was a coincidence that yesterday when George McIvor, Chairman of the Canada Wheat Board, and the Secretary, Dr. T. W. Grindley, arrived in Ottawa to discuss wheat quotas with Trade Minister Euler to see how the surplus could be disposed of without breaking the market, the war scare was shooting wheat prices upwards.

SWIFTS CONGREGATE FOR FLIGHT SOUTH

Chimney swifts are preparing for their annual fall flight to the southland, an air trek which regularly occurs early in September. This week hundreds of the birds have been congregating on the wires near the government dock, sagging the electrical lines with their weight of numbers. Further small flocks are apparently arriving in the district daily. Their interminable warbling fills the air, and due to their presence fishermen gathering at the docks evenings have basked in the comfort of a total absence of late season bothersome flies and mosquitoes.

SIDNEY EXHIBITOR MAKES GOOD SHOW

J. Miller Carl, Sidney Township was one of the successful exhibitors at the Peterborough Exhibition last week, in the grain and seeds department. Mr. Miller won first prize for winter wheat, third in both early and late oats, came second in the barley class, first in field peas, second in field beans and first in sweet clover exhibits.

NO CALL FOR TOMATO PICKERS

In spite of the fact that the tomato harvest is now well under way, there has been little or no call for pickers at the local Employment office, officials stated today. Lightness of the crop and reduced acreage in the district is said to be responsible for the little demand for help.

FRED JOHNSON LEAVES HOSPITAL

Fred Johnson, bookeeper of the Martin Transport Company's Belleville office, who suffered fractured vertebra last week when he was involved in a motor accident was removed from Kingston General Hospital to his home in Toronto the other day.

Mr. Johnson, who has been placed in a cast, is said to be recovering satisfactory.

LOCAL SALVATIONISTS EXPRESS PLEASURE AT APPOINTMENT

Confidence in the ability of Commissioner George L. Carpenter newly appointed head of the Salvation Army and distinct pleasure in his promotion was voiced today by prominent local Salvationists.

Pride in the fact that Commissioner Carpenter is a Canadian and the first to be honored with such a high position was evident in the manner of the speakers. "We are proud to have the new general at the head of the Army", they smiled. "He is very popular with his colleagues and will continue the fine work in his new position that has characterized his activities since he joined the Army forty-five years ago."

An estimated 150 junior farmer boys and girls from the counties of Hastings, Prince Edward and Northumberland will take part in the judging of livestock, home-making and economics competitions during the Belleville Fair, it was stated by Lynn Fair, Hastings County agricultural representative this morning. This number is an increase of last year's registration and keen competition is expected to result.

On the evening of August 30th., the annual banquet for the junior farmers arranged by the Trenton Dairies, Swift Canadian, Maple Valley Dairies and Stirling Creamery will be held in the special big tent. Mr. Wm. Newman of the Co-operative and Marketing branch of the Department of Agriculture, will be guest speaker.

OBITUARY

LATE MRS. MARY B. HODGEN
(Plainfield)

The funeral of Mrs. Mary Beatrice Hodgen, widow of Robert Ernest Hodgen, took place Thursday afternoon, Aug. 24th., from her late residence in the 7th concession of Thurlow Township, near Plainfield. The service in the home and at the graveside in Victoria cemetery was conducted by the Rev. George McKenzie, pastor of the United Church at Plainfield. During the service a vocal duet in keeping with the occasion was rendered by Mrs. A. P. Hall and Mr. Joseph Gow.

The bearers were Messrs. James W. Hamilton, Erle Denyes, Charles Beatty, Raymond Sullivan, John Colden and Walter Hall.

Transients Reported on Move to East

The great transient army of the country is on the move east from the grain fields of the west. This has been clearly evident by the number of workless wanderers that have been observed on the city's streets during the past week or so, many of whom are past masters at the adept art of wheedling dimes and nickels from residents.

Restaurant proprietors also report a decided influx of the transients with a correspondingly heavy increase in the number of requests for free meals lately.

The majority of the wanderers are headed with pack and kitbag to Eastern Canada where the promise of work on boats which will be needed in the event of hostilities abroad is given. Others are of the 'soldier of fortune' type who hope by hook or crook to get passage to the Old Country where work and good wages in munition factories and other trades reportedly waits.

Lad Falls in Bay Catching First Bass

In the excitement of catching his first bass last evening, 10-year-old Ray Thompson of the city tumbled from a concrete pier at the north end of the bay bridge into the deep water where he floundered helplessly, his legs wrapped in several turns of tangled fish line.

Surprised by the strength of the bass he had hooked, the youngster dropped the pole and commenced hauling the fish by line hand over hand. Overbalancing while leaning too far out, he slipped from the edge of the pier and became entangled in the line at the end of which the fish still threshed. Aware of the child's predicament, Wilfred Tettler of Rossmore, managed to reach the side of the struggling lad and hauled both fish and boy to safety.

Police Blotter

Constables Thomson and Taylor investigated a break-in at Patterson's service station, bay bridge road, shortly before 6.00 a.m. today. Entrance to the premises had been gained by forcibly opening the front door of the premises. After the proprietor had been notified of the incident the only serious loss found was that of a portable radio.

Ray Lockyer, Belleville, reported the theft of a $15.00 fishing rod and reel, which was stolen from a truck parked at the rear of Bowra's store yesterday afternoon.

City police were busied last night rounding up several citizens, who had imbibed freely, but not well, of intoxicating beverages with the result, that four persons appeared before the Cadi in today's police court as the result of their last night's escapades.

Motorists continued to violate the city's one hour parking bylaw in the downtown area with the result that daily such infractions are recorded by police with the guilty persons subsequently enriching the city's coffers with one dollar fines. Other delinquent drivers have been apprehended for failure to observe designated stop street signs as the result of a police investigation looking into this matter.

POLICE COURT

Today's city police court, held before Magistrate Shea of Kingston, consisted entirely of charges of violations of the Liquor Control Act and found pleas of guilty registered in every instance. Jules Bentley, Belleville, pleaded guilty to infractions of the L.C.A. but his case was enlarged for sentence.

Two others pleaded guilty to the illegal consumption of liquor while still two more readily admitted intoxication and enriched the city's coffers accordingly.

READINESS

Prepared against all eventualities and determined that justice shall not be crushed from the earth, Britain and France stand by their guarantees to Poland against aggression, despite the German Chancellor's declaration that he must have a free hand in Eastern Europe. He would place responsibility for war upon France and Britain but that is not as history will view the attitude which the democratic powers have taken. History will record their stand as just, whatever the event.

Small and great nations realize that their only hope is in the great freedom-loving Powers, who try to carry the burden of civilization against the spirit which would play fast and loose with agreements.

Every step has been taken for defence and the step which everyone is thinking of is the step which Adolf Hitler will take. What will that be?

Appeals have been made by the small Powers through the King of the Belgians, by President Roosevelt to the King of the Italians and by Pope Pius XII. Services of prayer and supplication have been arranged in churches and in hundreds of millions of hearts there still is hope though it is not very bright. But while there is peace there remains hope that the hand of war will be stayed, though so much effort for peace so far has proven fruitless.

IN ARMED STATE

'War and peace' at the same time seems to be a description of what has been in progress for many months. Such a world as has been known for the past year or two would have been unknown before 1914, for that war sprang out of the clouds as far as the people of earth were concerned, though statesmen knew whither Europe was tending.

Today it is estimated by observers that ten million men are under arms. Every nation is as it were mobilized. Most nations who might play a major part in the event of war and some smaller nations are armed to the teeth. This estimate does not include two million Soviet troops under arms.

No one knows the numbers of men in the various air forces of the world. But Britain is still supreme on the seas. Many thousands of men have been called up in the last few days as a matter of precaution.

A rough survey places the present strength of the armies under arms as follows:

France—More than 1,000,000. Her standing army of 800,000 has been augmented by 300,000 to 600,000 men recently.

Britain—Between 600,000 and 700,000. The British Cabinet acknowledged last night that additional personnel was being called up. (This does not take into account Egypt and India.)

Poland—Approaching 1,000,000.

Turkey—300,000.

Greece—200,000.

As for the Rome-Berlin Axis the latest Italian figure mentioned has been 1,300,000.

Recent troop movements in Germany have swelled the land forces to somewhere between 1,570,000 and 2,000,000.

Considered separately are figures of 150,000 upward for Spain; 300,000 for Yugoslovia; 275,000 for Rumania; and 200,000 upward for Hungary.

In still another bystander or neutral category might be listed 500,000 for the combined forces of Bulgaria, Belgium, the Baltic States, Portugal and Switzerland.

AT GREATEST TENSION

The world is at the greatest tension since 1914. In 1938 the possibilities of the situation in Europe were not fully felt for Europe was not quite ready. Today nations can go to war, the totalitarians at their greatest strength no doubt and perhaps looking upon this as an apt hour, perhaps the last hour when they could strike with any hope of success. On the other hand peace-loving Powers labor for peace, though they are prepared for the direst emergency—war—if it should come and though they are growing in their strength.

The world realizes that war might come very near to every part of it should conflict break out. The world has been drilled in ideas of what war would mean and yet what it has realized is but a faint rehearsal of such a dread event.

So far has it gone that to observers the question comes—Is Adolf Hitler making his most gigantic bluff? or will he fight if opposed in Germany's ambitions? To observers this is the situation—Poland will stand resolute, defend her borders if attacked and Britain and France will come to her defence if Germany dares to cross the Polish border. If Hitler is not bluffing, it is an optimist who can see anything but war, for yielding means but a repetition of nerve-racking tensions and grabs by force as in the case of the lamented Czech republic, with the steady gobbling up of Europe. That the democracies will not permit.

ON GUARD

"Wars and rumors of wars"—the clouds lour over the sea.
And a man must now be a man, if ever a man can be;
"Wars and rumors of wars"—a cry from the flaming East,
For the vultures are gathered together and the lions roar over the feast;

War! Shall we flinch—Shall we tremble! Shall we shrink like cowards from the fray?
Better all Britons were dead than their glory passed away,
The clouds may be dark and louring, the storm may be loud and long,
But the hearts of our men are true, and the arms of our men are strong.

From the thousand years of glory, from the grave of heroes gone,
Comes a voice on the breath of the storm and a power that sweeps us on!
A man must now be a man, and every man be true,
For Britons stand together, when Britain has work to do.

—Frederick George Scott, in Montreal Gazette.

A TOOTLESS TOOTER has been experimenting in Ottawa. An Ottawa motorist is reported by the Ottawa Journal as so impressed with editorials drawing attention to the horn tooting nuisance that when his horn died on him he just let it stay dead and learned to drive without the horn, observing more care, of course, with beneficial results to all concerned. According to the Journal that motorist drove a hornless car for a fortnight, and said that after the first day or two he did not miss the horn at all. He says he realized that he had to be very cautious. He couldn't signal another car that he was about to pass, which meant that he could pass only in most favorable conditions. He couldn't toot at pedestrians, and so had to slow up and give them the right of way. For that period, at least, he declared, he became almost a perfect driver, polite and considerate. He had no accidents, nor even an incident, and if it hadn't been for the law which requires that the horn be in working order he wouldn't have bothered to fix the horn.

The aforesaid motorist is convinced from his hornless experience that the emergency where safety demands a loud warning noise is rare indeed, and that generally speaking, driving would be better and safer without horns. At any rate it would be a good deal quieter.

CASPAR MILQUETOAST, a cartoonist's idea of a mild-mannered citizen, very shy and afraid to face most everyday things which most of us take in our stride, may be a bit exaggerated but at that has his counterpart in real life. All of which induces the Halifax Chronicle to comment upon the subject thus:

"To most people from time to time comes the experience of one of those incidents which bring out a sense of inferiority. There is something of the Caspar Milquetoast in all of us and the quiet tolerance or imagined scorn of another person is disturbing. The city dweller may feel it while attempting to milk a cow under the watchful eye of a farm lad, or attempting to cast from a tree-lined bank while a quiet guide watches his efforts. The country man, similarly, may feel the same uncomfortable sensation while trying to cope with city traffic, or some other phase of urban life. And so on and so on—and there are lots of people who never quite lose their awe of their old school teacher. Most of us have experienced the inferiority complex in one guise or another but we smother it up with a display of nonchalance, if possible, and just keep on pretending.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

By James W. Barton, M.D.

Breathlessness May Be Due to a Failing Heart or to other Causes

The fact that breathlessness is the first sign of a failing heart is now known to almost everybody. While it is well that this is known, as it may prevent many heart patients from taking too many chances, it is just possible that a number of individuals who get out of breath easily may believe they have heart disease when some other condition is the cause.

I have spoken before about two common causes of breathlessness—a blocked nose and eating too much acid food. The blocked nose may require operation or perhaps just the use of salt and water, adrenalin or ephedrine to shrink the lining of the nose and so provide more air space for breathing. There are fewer operations for blocked nose now than formerly.

What are known as the acid foods are all nourishing and should be eaten daily but the amount should be cut down if there is a tendency to get out of breath easily.

The acid foods are—meat, eggs, fish, poultry, breads of all kinds (both white and whole wheat), cereals, pastries, puddings.

The alkaline or base foods are—milk, nuts, fruits (except cranberries, plums, prunes, rhubarb), vegetables. Some of these alkaline foods contain acids but in the body they become alkaline and have an alkaline effect upon the tissues.

Sometimes the overweight individual who is reducing finds himself getting out of breath easily respite the fact that he is losing weight. He can't understand it. It is due to the acidosis which occurs in those who are starving or reducing due to the burning up of fat tissue.

Despite the fact that breathlessness may occur in other conditions than heart disease, Dr. F. A. Williams, Mayo Clinic, says: "The complaint of breathlessness should always be investigated. If breathlessness comes on while at rest and is relieved by a few long deep breaths of the "sighing" type, it is almost certainly not due to heart or lung disease".

If you are breathless, find out just what is causing it. It may be due to heart disease or to other simple causes. Try Dr. William's experiment—some long, deep, sighing breaths.

Press Emphasizes Unity of Kingdom In Morning Additions

By PAT USSHER
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 25—(CP Cable)—News-avid Londoners eagerly snatched first editions of morning newspapers appearing on the streets at midnight to read about the latest developments in the European crisis.

An air of superficial gaiety prevailed among west-end crowds but faces were solemn as they scanned reports from continental capitals.

Editorially the press emphasized the unity of the United Kingdom in an hour of acute danger as typified by the atmosphere which prevailed in parliament yesterday. Many papers still expressed the hope that war might be averted by negotiation, but they remarked that the issue was now in the hands of Fuehrer Hitler.

The Daily Telegraph (Conservative) praised Prime Minister Chamberlain's pronouncement for its "understatement" asserting that the speech "subdued the House to a becoming key and in doing so proved to the outside world how, under free and representative institutions, a nation's unity need suffer no refraction through party divisions."

The Manchester Guardian (Liberal) said, "it is a bitter thought that now, along with allies, we should be on the verge of fighting a terrible war for principles which we had thought to carry to a triumph in 1918 and which more than 50 nations guaranteed. Nevertheless we have no choice."

The Daily Mail (Independent) said, "the anxious attention of the world is now focussed on one man—Adolf Hitler now in Berlin. On him alone rests the terrible responsibility of deciding the issue of peace or war in Europe."

The Times (Ind.) said: "What Great Britain calls in question is the right of any nation forcibly to suppress the independence of another. If that were to be condoned in Eastern Europe, then it would only be a matter of time before similar demands, pressed by similar methods, would be made elsewhere and eventually, no doubt, upon the British Empire. Such demands and such methods would, therefore, have to be resisted even if we stood alone in resisting them. But we are far from standing alone."

The Daily Express (Ind.) summarized four major points of Mr. Chamberlain's speech thus:

"1. We are confronted with the imminent perils of war.

"2. The Poles have always been ready to discuss their differences with the Germans provided it could be done without threats of force.

"3. We cannot agree that national interests can be only secured by shedding blood or the destruction of the independence of other states.

"4. If compelled to fight we shall be fighting for those principles the destruction of which would involve the destruction of all possibility of peace and security."

"In these words," The Express said, "there is an appeal for sanity and reason and a determination to resist aggression, Britain stands by her word."

The News Chronicle (Liberal) maintained that "black though the prospect is there is still a possibility of discussion on the matters in dispute provided the threat of force is removed. The world hasn't yet abandoned itself to cataclysm."

"We stand on the very edge of war," said the Daily Herald(Labor). "Even yet at this 11th hour let none of us believe war to be inevitable...."

"We are not at war and war may yet be avoided," was the comment of the Liverpool Post (Liberal).

The Birmingham Gazette (Liberal) said "parliament showed there was no doubt in the minds of spokesmen of all parties about the absolute necessity of standing firm for maintenance of agreements and against territorial change under threat of force."

The Edinburgh Scotsman (Conservative) affirmed: "The nation has closed its ranks. There is no excuse for misunderstanding abroad. This country is to fulfill its pledges."

The Manchester Daily Dispatch (Ind.) remarked "dark though the hour may be potent forces are laboring for peace."

In Dublin the Irish Independent said "it rests with one power in fact, one man to decide whether Europe is to be plunged into a terrible catastrophic war or whether the sane methods of negotiation is to be pursued."

The Yorkshire Post (Ind.) regarded often as expressing the views of the former Foreign Secretary, Anthony Eden said, "if war there must be, then it will be a war of liberation from a monstrous threat to nations whose only offense is that they desire to lead an independent existence."

BRITAIN ABANDONS POUND SUPPORT

Sterling Falls to $4.37 and Rises to $4.42 as Nation Husbands Resources

London, Aug. 25—(CP)—Britain took urgent and far reaching steps today to husband her financial resources for possible war needs.

The necissity for preserving the nation's gold stocks became so compelling that the British stabilization fund for the moment at least abandoned its market support of the pound in relation to the United States dollar. This support has been exerted under great pressure in recent weeks and consequent heavy losses of gold.

When the government overnight "pulled the plug" which had pegged the pound at $4.68 1-8, sterling opened at $4.59, fell to $4.37 and then followed a zigzag pattern which came to $4.42 at noon.

France Touches 2 1-2 Cents

Paris, Aug. 25—(AP)—The franc tumbled to 2 1-2 cents, or 40 to the dollar, this morning at unofficial bank rates, compared with yesterday's closing of 37.755 to the dollar.

The Franc moved down with the pound in the midst of the international crisis. (The pound was $4.42 at noon in London.)

The pound dropped only slightly against the Franc ,being quoted at 176.65 francs, against yesterday's 176.72.

Members of the Chamber of Deputies said the movement of currency was being directed in Paris "in complete accord" with London.

Insect Warriors Will Strut Their Stuff at Belleville Fair

In response to the suggestions of a number of farmers and others in the community, the Dominion Entomological Branch, with the co-operation of the Fair Board, is arranging for an exhibit depicting insects and their control. This exhibit will feature particularly the work of the parasite laboratory located at 228 Dundas Street, East, Belleville, and will attempt to give the public some idea of the scope and methods employed in the development of this most interesting and important method of controlling pests, known as biological control. Living insects will be used as far as possible and an opportunity given to see some of the little insect fighters in action. It is entirely an educational feature and representatives of the laboratory will be on hand to answer enquiries regarding insect control problems.

Mr. William C. Fownes, RIGHT, retired American millionaire antique lover, is playing host in New York to a London cabbie, Edward A. Barnes, LEFT. Mr. Fownes hired Cabbie Barnes outside of London's Dorchester House and finding they were both interested in antiques invited him to visit the U.S. Said Mr. Fownes, "As he drove me around London it is only right that I drive him around New York."

Belleville Fair to be Marked By Changes and Innovations To Attract Greatest Number

Livestock Exhibits Will be Worth Going a Long Way to See

JUNIOR FARMERS

Boys and Girls of Hastings County Will be Catered to in Prize List

There is one thing of which the directors and executive of the Belleville Agricultural Society are confident and that is that this year's annual Belleville Fair will be marked by many changes and innovations

Those who follow the fair year by year will be aware of some of the changes upon entry in the grounds. Buildings have been repaired, some re-roofed, all of them freshened up with new paint and trimming. Flower beds never appeared more brilliantly colorful; the green of the grass fresher or more inviting on the rolling lawns over which thousands yearly pass to view the district's biggest exhibit of rural and urban produce and manufacture.

The livestock exhibits this year will be worth going a long way to see. Not just on account of their size, but mainly because of the number of new exhibitors. Many are showing stock this year who never exhibited in Belleville before. All are enthusiastic over the accommodation which has been provided. Horses and cattle will be more numerous this year, according to a registration check by Fair Secretary R. H. Ketcheson. There will be increases in the number of sheep and swine. The poultry exhibit, which over the years under the careful management of the well known bird fancier and this year's first vice-president of the Society, Jack Holley, has become known as one of Ontario's best bird shows, will be larger, more complete than ever, according to the vice-president.

Junior Department

The junior agricultural department, always an interesting feature of the local Fair, will be larger and better than ever this year. Special prize lists have been provided for this section for both boys and girls and all judging will be under the direction of the Department of Agriculture. This section will be open to boys from 12 years to 23 years, inclusive. The girls' section will be open to girls from 12 to 26 years of age, inclusive. In this section of the fair will be girls' project judging, boys' livestock judging competitions, girls' inter-club competitions, and boys' inter-club and open demonstrations.

In charge of the junior work will be James Telfer, of the Dominion Department of Agriculture; W. P. Watson, Provincial Department of Agriculture; A. H. Martin, assistant director of agricultural representatives of the province, and well known to Belleville and district residents for his valuable agricultural work in this section, and agricultural representatives, Lynn Fair of Hastings; F. J. Webster of Prince Edward County; Ian McLeod of Northumberland; C. W. Buchanan, Lennox.

Every accommodation has been made by the Society for the thousands who will attend during the three days of the Fair. Visitors may be sure of finding within the grounds everything necessary for the comfort of young and old. Ample restaurant and lunch room facilities will be available. Prices will be governed by the Society so that no overcharge will be possible at any time. Even lost children may be cared for while every effort is made to find parents.

Gates Open Early

The Exhibition will commence on Tuesday, August 29th, and close on Thursday, August 31st. Gates will be opened at eight o'clock each morning and will close just before midnight. The price of admission will be 25 cents for adults, 15 cents for children over ten years, and autos will be charged 25 cents for admission and parking on the grounds.

Dairy products, roots and vegetables, fruit, flowers, ladies' work, and domestic science competitions will be judged Tuesday afternoon, the first day of the Fair. All other classes will be judged commencing Wednesday morning, except ladies' work which will be judged at nine o'clock on the morning of the first day. Belleville and district's own annual baby show, an event which annually has become one of the Fair features will be held on Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the grand stand, favorite meeting place of young and old.

Throughout the afternoon and evening of each day, special music will be furnished by the Belleville Municipal Band which lately has attained provincial prominence as one of the best of civic musical organizations. There will be special attractions every afternoon and evening arranged by the Canadian Vaudeville Exchange, attractions replete with clowns for the young, thrilling, breath-taking acts of specialists in daring for young and old. One of the largest carnival companies on the continent will present new rides, new games and amusements along the famed midway through the centre of the grounds, without which no Fair could long attract.

Special Exhibit

Not least of the exhibit within the interest-crammed buildings on the grounds will be the special exhibit by the local Entomological branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, a fascinating study and exposition of the grubs and insects, caterpillars and worms in the realm with which war is continually waged by the best scientific brains of the country, for virtual existence of farmer and grower of the Dominion. Daily and nightly there will be a play of drama enacted by living insects upon the small stage of glass and screen before the hundreds of curious and eager to learn. Live insects will be used as far as possible by the entomologists of the local bureau, in charge of Dr. A. B. Baird, B.A., to show the extent and scope of efforts of scientists in their ceaseless battle against the winged and crawling invaders of farm and timberland, fruit orchard and grain fields. It is an exhibit which has become in constant demand in other cities since its inauguration at the Belleville Fair some years ago.

Horseshoe Pitching

Down at the side of No. 1 Firehall experts of the game have congregated lately in the cool of the evening to compete in the art of throwing ringers around the steel stakes of the horse shoe pitching courts. Professionals, near professionals and even the mere tyros of the city and district have been limbering up their pitching arms for this Fair classic, the special horseshoe pitching contest which last year was so successful. This year in this competition there will be men's doubles (open); men's singles (open) and prizes for the best eight shoes pitched.

Of late years the special section devoted to an exposition of the talents of school children of public and high schools of the city and county have attracted increased attention. This year again classes are being alloted to boys and girls in competitions in writing, drawing and carving, sewing, nature collections and other arts. Work which rivals that of professional craftsmen in the various lines is yearly displayed in the Fine Arts Building, and from these exhibitions come many new ideas for visitors to adopt.

Not even the class for fairest entrant on the grounds has been overlooked at this annual exhibition. A special prize donated by Lloyd's Service Station of five gallons of gasoline for "the best looking lady driving a car on the grounds" has been announced. As yet, it is reported by the Fair Committee, the names of the udges have not been made known.

Largest Entry List In History of Fair Says Secretary

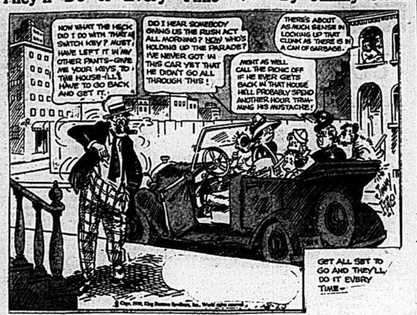
The largest entry list in the history of the Belleville Fair was today announced by Secretary R. H. Ketcheson, who added that increased entries in every line of exhibits had been received for the 1939 Belleville Fair, that swings open its doors to the public Tuesday.

"Just how we are going to be able to house the large number of livestock entries is what confronts the Fair Board today. We will have to press into service large tents to accommodate the increased entries in swine, horses, cattle and sheep, while I am of the opinion that even the poultry building will be taxed to overflowing" predicted Mr. Ketcheson.

With the Fair being lessened one day and presented as a three-day fair, the patrons will be treated to more entertainment in less time, as the usual four-day program will be included in the fair, with the exception of a two-day horse race meet, instead of the usual three. Otherwise the program is fully included in a three-day exhibition.

All buildings have been renovated and redecorated for the convenience of the exhibitors, patrons and exhibits. Space in the Manufacturers' and Merchants' building is at a premium today, practically all such space being fully monopolized by eager exhibitors from all parts of Canada.

They'll Do It Every Time :-: By Jimmy Hatlo



NOW WHAT THE HECK DID I DO WITH THAT SWITCH KEY? MUST HAVE LEFT IT IN MY OTHER PANTS-GIVE ME YOUR KEYS TO THE HOUSE-I'LL HAVE TO GO BACK AND GET IT.
DO I HEAR SOMEBODY GIVING US THE RUSH ACT ALL MORNING? NOW WHO'S HOLDING UP THE PARADE? I'VE NEVER GOT IN THIS CAR YET THAT HE DIDN'T GO ALL THROUGH THIS!
THERE'S ABOUT AS MUCH SENSE IN LOCKING UP THAT CLUNK AS THERE IS IN A CAN OF GARBAGE.

'Forty-Niners' Rode Ox-Carts And Buggies to County Fair

Harrows, Threshing Machines, Quilts, Counterpanes, Part of Exhibit of Those Days

STURDY FOLK

Fair in Those Days Recognized As One of Best in Province — Livestock of Fine Quality

While it is impossible to foretell what advances science will make during the next ninety years in agriculture, industry and other phases of our every-day life, we at least can get some idea of what has happened during the last nine or ten decades.

The grand old men and women of those early days would scarcely believe their eyes could they but vision our modern scientific achievement such as the automobile, radio, airplanes and streamlined trains.

However, the old folks had their good times and in their own homely way took just as much pride in their achievements, in fact, more so than we so-called moderns of today.

Take the country fairs, for instance. Back in the gay "Forties" when a high-stepping nag was the last word in speedy transportation, when the plodding oxen drew more than one family of rugged pioneering stock to the county fair; when Grandma, mother and even sister, sat up under the lights of smoky oil-lamps to finish the "counterpane" for the fair; when father put the finishing touches on harrow, horse-rake and other "new-fangled mechanical implements" that were to be shown at the exhibition, the folks took just as much pride in their accomplishments as do the modern agriculturist or city business man.

Just Plain Folks

They didn't jump into the high-powered family automobile, and within a few minutes arrive at the county exhibition park. They didn't rush to town to get a "permanent' or to get "junior' a white flannel suit and sister the latest thing in abbreviated dresses. They loaded up the family lunch-basket, hitched the faithful Dobbin, or, in many cases, the oxen, to the wagon and started out on the long or short trek to the "District Fair and Cattle Show."

They loaded the "counterpanes, fully-dressed cloths, factory satinettes, woollen socks, home-made carpeting, quilts, leather-goods, butter and cheese,' in the wagon behind them and started with hearts full of happiness, and eyes filled with pride of achievement on the annual holiday that would not only bring them the joy of competitive good-will, but the pleasure of congregating once more in an old-time "mass-gathering with many friends and relatives whom they had not seen for months at a time.

Way back in 1849 when the Victoria District Fair and Cattle Show was the principal exhibition of its kind in this district, such things occurred. They travelled the rough scarcely broken trails from the north country. By the buckboard and wagon, by oxcart and on horseback they came, rugged, sturdy scions of pioneering families whose heart and soul lay in their efforts to hew a living out of the wooded wilderness that surrounds their homes.

Honest, healthy folks. Women strong, full-bosomed, bearing stalwart sons and comely daughters, who in their turn bore offspring that took full advantage of the heritage left them and made this Hastings County one of the best producers in the province. Stern-faced men, bronzed of face and muscular of figure. Sturdy of stature, they toiled with the sun, to till the soil and hew the forest to build for themselves the homes, some of which are now standing.

Prominent Breeders

But in the autumn they came to the "fair."

In that year, there was not the variable list of entries that the splendid exhibitions of the present day boast. In the livestock divisions there were Class "A" cattle, consisting of Durhams and Devons, and Class "B" under the head of which were judged grade herds. Such breeders as S. Ostrom, T. D. Farley, A. Yeomans, J. Gilbert, J. Weightman, J. Spencer, William Wemp, C. Hancock, Mathias Ross, Jr., Caleb Gilbert, John Purdy, and others, entered their stock.

Horses were horses in those days and were classified as draught, carriage, and just plain horse. Sheep classes consisted of South Downs and Merinoes and common sheep.

Peculiar pride in entries of farm implements, something that has died out, was evidenced by the farmers of this day. Ploughs, harrows, threshing machines, horse-rakes, cradles, cultivators, lumber wagons and even chopping axes, as they were termed, vied in competition.

"A Great Day"

"Tuesday was a great day for the agricultural and manufacturing portion of this district," the reporter of those days states in his story of the fair. "The streets were thronged with stock, etc., for the fair. It was a glorious sight that presented itself as team after team arrived conveying articles of manufacture and produce which would do credit to any country in the globe."

The ancient scribe goes on to say the livestock and horse exhibit was the finest seen anywhere. Sheep and swine were of excellent sample.

"The threshing machines, we understand, are a decided improvement over those exhibited two years ago," he continues.

"The lumber wagons were good quality with first prize going justly so, to John Purdy of Sidney. This article was from the shop of Thomas Vermilyea, 4th. concession of Sidney, and is of itself a sufficient recommendation. The exhibition of horse-rakes, ploughs, fanning mills were said to be above an average in quantity and superior in quality." the report says.

ENTERTAINMENT DECIDED FEATURE BELLEVILLE FAIR

Kings, Queens of Vaudeville Will Perform Before Grandstand Each Day

PLENTY OF CLOWNS

Midway, Source of Enjoyment for Young and Old, Will be a Feature

While the hard-working directorate of the Belleville Fair have been devoting a lot of time and effort toward providing sterling attractions for the many thousands of people who will attend the 1939 edition of the annual exhibition, the important item of entertainment has not been forgotten.

The entertainment programs that have featured the fairs of recent years have drawn laudatory comment from the large crowds of people that enjoyed them, and cognisant of the high calibre of amusement that has characterized those previous exhibitions, officials have in no way relaxed their policy this year, of bringing to the fair-going public, the very best entertainment that can be procured.

Kings and Queens of vaudeville, artists extraordinary in their own its country.. right, daredevil acrobats, sensational equilibrists, clowns grotesque in make-up and hilariously funny in their antics, slack and tight-wire walkers and dancers, and last, but not least, a bevy of beautiful ballet girls, whose beauty and talent are outstanding comprise the fine programe of stage entertainment that will greet afternoon and evening performance crowds.

For instance, there is the Royale Ballet, ten young and beautiful dancers, queens of the dance-stage, whose grace and symmetry of action in the perofrmance of their various numbers mark them as one of the outstanding groups of artists in their particular form of amusement.

Plenty of Clowns

Then there is "Fifi," the clown, an uproariously funny little fellow, the delight of the children and a continuous source of merriment to the grown-ups. His side-splitting antics and humorous patter will install him at once as a popular favorite.

The Avalon Troupe, a double-tight-wire duo fresh from conquests of other nations, will perform in an act that will cause audiences to gasp at their sheer nerve and ability. Popular favorites with the famous Barnum-Bailey and Ringling Circus, the Siegrist Troupe, a trio of aerial acrobats will perform high above the crowd in a series of acts that cannot help but please.

Newly arrived in America from the Russian steppes, are the members of the Romanoff Troupe, a novel "teeterboard' 'act that you have never seen before. These daring youngsters perform in a manner that has already installed them as great favorites with American audiences.

The Merrill Brothers and their beautiful sister, will combine in an equilibrist act that will be worth the price of admission alone, while the "Los Gitanos" troupe, sensational lofty perch gymnasts, go through their motions at a dizzy height that is outstanding and daring to say the least.

Band Music

Catering to the musical taste of the attendance will be the sparkling rhythms of the Belleville Municipal Band. These talented musicians, who have already gained prominence as one of the finest musical organizations in Eastern Canada, and whose performances at Victoria Park during the past two months have caused that place to be the mecca for thousands, will hold the spotlight during the three-day fair.

Grandstand performances will be held every afternoon and evening. The midway, the source of enjoyment for young and old, will again be one of the best procurable in Canada. It will carry all the popular rides and tented shows, while a number of new novelties are said to be in store for all. The ever-popular merry-go-round will be in action, while other cogs of this all-important entertainment wheel are "greased" and ready to go.

There will be entertainment for young and old at the Fair.

Characteristics of Old-Time Fair Not Marred by Progress Seen in Last Few Centuries

Present Day Feeling at Fair is One of Mutual Friendship

DECIDED PROGRESS

"Oh, dear, what can the matter be? Johnny's not home from the Fair."

The words of the well-known old song may have had a deeper meaning than most people thought. For even in the days when the familiar words were written the country fair was an institution that has not lost its attractiveness or educational value as the years have rolled by.

In the days when our forebears drove to the "Fair" with oxcart and later with proud, high-stepping horses, the fair was something to be looked forward to. True, there may have not been the modern touch, with its cacophony of whirling wheels, hoarse shouts of barkers, modern toy automobiles carrying their quotas of shrieking, laughing children, and other up-to-date gadgets, but there was that same sincerity of feeling of pride of achievement as proud horses and cattle were paraded before the admiring gaze of the countryside.

Old County Re-unions

And there was the grand old country reunions that none but "fair-time" could bring forth. From the far-flung sections of the county and provinces they came, hot, dusty, tired perhaps, but eager with anticipation for the promised "get-together' so symbolic of the sturdy bonds of blood and other friendships, that held our forebearers together.

Centuries of progress have not marred that characteristic common to Canadians. Down through the years, in spite of the marvellous advances made by science in all forms of industrial, agricultural and other phases of life, that strong link that has bound together in a common bond all the peoples that go to make up this nation of ours, has been strengthened by the country fair.

But fairs, like other great institutions of Canada have progressed and kept step by step with the advancing trend of the times. Farmers, as well as their urban cousins have felt the benefits of science. Agriculture, as well as the great city industries have felt the warm pulse of modernistic methods beating in all its phases.

Many Imported Cattle

Cattle-breeders, aware of the tremendous advancement in the production of blooded strains in other parts of the world, have gone to extremes in some cases and regardless of cost, have imported scions of the finest sires in the world to be the nuclei of the fine herds of dairy and beef cattle for which this country and particularly this district is becoming ustly famed.

Clyesdales and Percherons, Shires and Belgians, the very aristocracy of equine draft-horses — blue-blooded Hackneys and standard breeds, the acme of equine grace and speed, have found their way to the barns of breeders of the district.

Wheat, barley, oats and other grains, processed by the clever hand of scientific agriculture have reached a point of quality that has yet to be excelled. Swine, of all breeds, sheep that can trace their lineage to the flocks of famous Teviot, Hampshire and other famous English downs. Poultry from the aristocratic Turkey gobbler, down to the diminutive bantam, blue-ribbon winners all, can be seen in the flocks of fanciers of this section of the country.

Merchants to Exhibit

These and a thousand other products of the farm will meet at the crossroads of the community, the Belleville Fair next week.

Not only will the agriculturists be represented but the city merchant, one who takes a justifiable pride in this great meeting grounds of the populace of the district, will be represented in his own particular source of pride, his merchandise.

The years have made no difference to this real consolidator of friendships. It is the same colorful, entertaining friendly gathering that our forefathers attended a century ago. Of course there will be more attractions, the modern age demands them, but the deeper feeling is still there, and officials of the Fair feel that it will again, as in years gone by, be the predominating factor that draws the people of this fine old county together in a "mass" gathering that in its very presence will demonstrate its faith in its county, its achievements, and

LIVESTOCK SHEDS BEING IMPROVED

Grandstand Will be Reroofed Before Fair-Opens on Tuesday

Housing conditions in the buildings and livestock sheds are being improved at the Fair Grounds in preparation for the opening of the 1939 Belleville Fair next week. Earlier in the season the Parks Commission redecorated the exterior of some of the buildings, and more recently ordered new roofing for the cattle sheds and grandstand.

This week the entire length of the cattle sheds was covered with a new corrugated galvanized roofing, while today workmen commenced to place a new composition roof on the grandstand, assuring patrons and exhibits of warm, dry accommodations in case of rain. The roof of the poultry building was repaired last year, leaving all buildings and livestock pens completely waterproof.

No effort has been spared to beautify the grounds, the numerous flower beds being in full bloom today all is in readiness for Belleville's bigger and better Fair.

The entrance to the Fair Grounds was repaired and additional lighting added early this summer, as was the foundation to the bandstand at the entrance to the park. As has been the custom since the inception of the new Fair Grounds, the illuminated water fountain will be in full view in its grandeur when the Fair opens its doors on Tuesday.

A DAY of surprising events, with sudden and startling occurrences seeming to spring from nowhere but excerising a galvanic force upon all business as well as private activities, is forecast. Some subtle, obscure or unfathomable undercurrents stir the forces and faculties to high pitches of excitement and imperative action. The situation, while dramatic and thrilling, may bring about a most favorable turn to the wheel of fortune, but this would be arrested should impetuous, reckless or violent tactics be pursued. Be alert to deception and also do not be swept away by a whirl of romantic adventure.

Those whose birthday it is may find themselves swept from their firm foundations by a whirlwind of dramatic events or novel experiences, seemingly arising from weird, curious, inexplicable thought not sinister sources. Surprising benefits, sensational contacts with strange persons and environs may climax these visitations, which are dangerous only if met with ungoverned, violent or rash reactions. Emotional or romantic urges call for discretion and poise.

A child born on this day may be a seeker for novety, adventure and sensational experiences in whatever channel its orginial talents and high-pressure energies may project it. It may be an inventive genius or attain spectacular renown in romantic or revolutionary expression.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

Love-Marriages Last

Marriages made for love are the lasting ones.

Perhaps that surprises you. For of course, you've listened to a great deal of would-be sophisticated talk arguing the very contrary. "Love?" you hear them say. "Why love is the most transient thing in the world. If you marry for love, you fool yourself."

Marry for something sensible, they will tell you. Money, for instance. Or social position. Or a comfortable home. But not for love. That's folly.

There's proof, however, for my statement that love-marriages last even in an age when divorce is considered almost as natural as going to the altar.

There are at least a quarter of a million couples in the United States who have been married more than fifty years. Mr .and Mrs. Henry Ford were only one of a vast number of married pairs who last year celebrated their golden wedding.

It's a matter of a good deal of interest, in this age of easy divorce, to know what it is that has held these couples together. Self-interest, or habit? Or can it really have been love?

To settle this important point, one of the women's magazines sent a questionnaire to nearly 2,000,000 husbands and wives. To both partners of every marriage the question was put: Did you marry for love? And to avoid all possibility of domestic embarrassment, each person replied separately.

The result was startling.

Remember that when these replies were written down, the husbands weren't looking over the wives' shoulders. And yet practically all these happy, aging women said they had married for love. And it had worked!

With the husbands, it was almost the same story. They had married for love, too. Ninety per cent of them wrote themselves down as life-long lovers. Ten per cent left the space blank.

This overwhelming triumph of love wasn't lessened by the fact that in certain cases husbands and wives both stated that they had had secondary motives. They wanted homes, companionship, children. That is to say, they wanted their love to flourish. But although the questionnaires demanded of each person—Did you marry for security—not one of them said Yes! The money question didn't enter even in a secondary way into any one of these many happy marriages.

Just as interesting as the record of these thousands of American love-stories is the admission, in certain cases, that this married happiness had to be fought for. These elderly couples had their moments of temptation, it seems, just as young married pairs do nowadays. But the minute they felt the magnetism of an attractive person, did they leave a note on the pincushion and start for Reno? They didn't dream of such a thing.

Husbands and wives all stated that they had successfully overcome such attractions. They had their own ways of resisting temptation and they told what these were. The women exercised self-control they said. They resorted to prayer. They remembered their marriag vows. So they held fast to their married happiness.

The men's statements were a little different. They "evaded" the temptress. Or the temptation "just faded away from lack of nourishment". One loyal husband had such strength of character that it was sufficient to "dismiss it from my mind". Another believed that discretion is the better part of valor. "I ran like a rabbit", he says gently laughing at himself.

But not one of them gave in. They stuck to their chosen partners. And so at seventy or thereabouts, they are all contented and happy, comforted by their close companionship, their age-mellowed love, the countless ties that now bind them to each other. And they all think the world is a pretty good place.

New heights are noted in many of the latest hats for autumn. A small toque of allover shirred deep blue antelope has three enormous quill set fan-wise at the side and back and shooting high into the air.

Charm and luxury describe the new fur coats. A fitted model of black caracul has its rippled hem banded with a wide border of natural blue fox. The same fur makes the big twisted pouch collar.

More Tips on Tipping

Yesterday I gave some suggestions on the average tips for the average types of service. There are some questions still to be considered. For instance:

If you are stopping at an American Plan hotel (one in which the rates include room and meals) and are paying, let's say, $50 a week for two persons, a fair tip to the waiter or waitress is $1 a week. The chamber maid is usually given at least 25 cents a day, or a dollar a week; the headwaiter, not less than a dollar a week, perhaps two dollars. To the bellboy who brings ice-water, packages, telegrams, newspapers, you give ten cents or fifteen cents; to the bellboy or porter who carries your luggage to or from your room, 25 to 50 cents, depending on the number and size of your pieces of luggage; to the porter who brings your trunk to your room, 25 cents. A cloakroom attendant is given from ten cents to twenty-five cents for checking a woman's or a man's belongings at the entrance to the restaurant.

A passenger travelling first class on a transatlantic steamer usually gives these tips (and they are given at the end of the voyage): $2.50 to the cabin steward (a woman gives the same amount to the cabin stewardess); $2.50 to the dining-room steward,; $2 or $2.50 to the deck steward, depending on the amount of service given. The bath steward is usually tipped one dollar. If you have used the library, you tip the library steward a dollar. If they have given you service, you fee the lounge steward, the wine steward, the bar attendant and the cabin boys. If you have been "indisposed", or have had special services, you should tip accordingly.

For a short cruise, depending on the kind of steamer and the type of accommodation, you give from one to two dollars to each dining-room steward who serves you, the same amount to the cabin steward or stewardess, a dollar to the deck stewardess, a dollar to the deck steward, and from 50 cents to a dollar to the bath steward. As on a transatlantic steamer, if you receive extra service, you fee accordingly.

Likes the Gold Key Idea

Dear Mrs. Beeckman

Will you please help me with a few questions that are puzzling me?

1—I expect to be married soon, and I was very interested in the suggestion in your column the other day, about giving one's fiance a gold key to the new home as a wedding present. I'd like to follow your suggestion, and give my future husband a gold key to our new home. (We won't of course, own the house, but it will be our own apartment.) I would like to have it inscribed something like this—"May this open the door to our happiness", or "May this open our door to happiness." Do you think that either of these would do? If not, what would you suggest?

2—Have you an idea as to what this would cost?

3—I have a girl friend living in a different town, whom I got to know very well in a hospital. She is now at home, but in bed most of the time. Although of course I know that she would not be able to come, I would like to send her an invitation to my wedding. With the invitation I would like to send a note telling her that, although I know she will not be able to come, I want her to have the invitation as a remembrance of my wedding day. Will this be in good taste? Or should I send the note and invitation separately? She is such a sweet person that I would not want to hurt her feelings.

F.

1—I am delighted, and very proud too, that you liked my suggestion about giving a gold key as a wedding present. I am sure your future husband will like the idea too.

Your idea for the inscription is grand. What a charming young lady you must be, to have such an inspired and poetic idea for the message! My only suggestion would be that, for the saving of space, you may have to try to reduce the number of words . . . but perhaps not. If you do have to, perhaps "To open our door to happiness" might serve.

2—See what designs your jeweler has, or can get to show you, for the price depends on the design. As you know, you buy a "dummy key", to be cut later in the correct form for "your" door. You may buy only the key, or the key with a small chain attached, or, best of all, the key attached at the top to a case into which the key fits.

3—Again, from this question I know you're a fine person! By all means carry out your idea of sending an invitation to this sweet friends of yours . . . she will love your generous and friendly thought of her. I believe that, if I were you, I'd send the invitation "as is", in all its glory, and send the note separately, but surely in the same mail. And in the note I suggest that, instead of telling her that you are sending the invitation as a remembrance of your wedding, you tell her that, although you realize to your deep disappointment that you cannot have the happiness of having her with you on your wedding day, you want your invitation to tell her how very much you wanted her. Tell her, too, that you will be thinking of her on your "days of days" wishing that she were with you; that she will, indeed, be with you in the wonderful spirit of your friendship for each other.

Buy Part of Coiffure

By HELEN FOLLETT

YOU CAN WEAR a coiffure that is all puffed up, rolls cuddled atop your brain roof, or you can put your mind on hair growing and display a long fluttering bob. It is easy to understand why the girls love the free, fly-away effect; it makes for youthful appearance. Even the old gals can get away with it if it is beautifully arranged, the crown of the head made decorative with wide shadow waves.

We do wish that some of the long-faced girls would refrain from the single upturned roll in front. It makes noses look longer, foreheads wider, necks thinner. The flattering arrangement for the long-faced baby is a soft bang bearing a single wave line, hair slightly full at the ears to give width to the face.

Whimsy in This Hair-Do

One of the whimsies in the way of coiffures is the high-low hair-do. Soft ringlets around the nape line; a coronet of puffs around the head like a wreath.

Does it sound confusing; too difficult to keep intact? Ha! You buy your coronet at the beauty shop. It is demountable. You wear it only for the festive evening occasion.

Should you possess this treasure, don't try to clean it with soap and water. Dip it in benzine. It will come out clean and shining. Put it up on metal curlers as you do the locks to which you are naturally attached.

Muscles that extend upward and outward from the spinal column, controlling the movements of head, shoulders and arms, become so weakened by poor posture that they lose elasticity and invite the coming of adipose tissues. Fat cells love a quiet undisturbed life. Keep on the move and they'll never catch up with you.

Wrong posture has a deplorable effect upon the backbone, twisting and turning it out of shape, lifting one hip and one shoulder higher than the other. Always the tummy should be flat and held in, the chest kept high, head and body balanced.

Young girls especially should be mindful of posture; without it there will not be normal breast development or sufficient chest epansion to put up a good front.

It was decided to organize a Baby Band and Mrs. Ed Emerson was elected Superintendent. A poem "Little children of the street" was read by Mrs. Don Rose. Another children's hymn was sung and the repeating of the Mispah closed the meeting. Lunch was served by the hostess. The offering amounted to $2.10.

ZION W. M. S.

The August meeting of Zion W. M. S. was held at the home of Mrs. A. Sheffield. The meeting opened with prayer by the president, followed with hymn 240. All repeated the Lord's prayer, followed by the business part of the meeting.

A very fine reading was given by Mrs. Edgar Sims "The gift of a loving heart." Mrs. Lorne Brough had charge of the program which consisted of the singing of hymn 133 and very fine readings by Mrs. A. Sheffield, Mrs. C. Ketcheson, Mrs. L. Brough.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Other Ailments Often Mistaken for Impetigo

I have often come to regard impetigo in babies a lot more seriously. This isn't because of impetigo itself, but because today we know much more about syphilis than we used to.

I recall when quite early in my practice, I was called to see a baby that had some sores on its face. I treated it and treated it, but it was a long time before I discovered that it was syphilis. It was a great shock to me and one that I have never forgotten. As I say, we didn't know so much about that disease in those days. We didn't know then, as we do now, that a person may contract it in perfect innocence and give it to others without ever knowing it.

So in this case, I had known the couple all their lives. They were decent people, and the thought that the sores on the baby might be syphilis never entered my head. So I went right ahead treating for impetigo.

That is the reason we are so insistent about blood tests today—because anyone might contract syphilis in some innocent way, and just as innocently pass it on. Why, in hospitals, blood tests have become merely part of the routine. All doctors undergo periodic examinations, because in handling patients they might contract the disease and pass it on to someone else. I myself have had a number of blood tests, and I intend to continue taking them.

But to go back to impetigo in small babies. I have seen it develop four or five days after birth and under such conditions that you couldn't imagine where the contagion could have come from. I have even taken prospective mothers to the hospital to have a baby, and I have seen the baby develop the disease while right in the hospital. How in the world it ever got into the hospital ward I couldn't figure out, but there it was for us to tussle with.

All of this is to point out how necessary it is to have everything kept clean and sterile around the baby. Remember his skin is much more susceptible to this skin disease than yours.

Diagnosis of impetigo isn't always easy. I have referred already to syphilis. Several times ,too, I have been treating a child for eczema, and although I am sure it started out as eczema, impetigo got mixed in in some way, and what a complication that is! You are trying to find what article of food is causing the eczema, but the rash gets worse and worse in spite of all you do. Then you find that it isn't the eczema that is getting worse, it is the impetigo.

I remember one very unusual case I had along this line about twenty-five year ago. There was an epidemic of smallpox in the community, and a woman who had this disease gave birth to a baby. Well, a few days later the baby developed smallpox too. I wasn't worried about this particularly, because I knew the child would inherit a certain amount of immunity from the mother. However the child's rash, after about two weeks, began suddenly to get worse.

Well, I was puzzled, to say the least. I examined the baby again and again and couldn't account for this. Then I suddenly thought of impetigo. I started treatment, but the smallpox was a dim memory long before I got that other and apparently simple little skin disease cleaned up. And I never could figure out just when the impetigo came into the picture.

Surprise of Major Baseball In Closing Weeks of Schedule Is Amazing Brooklyn Dodgers

Dodgers Down Reds and Phillies Flatten the Cardinals

YANKS WIN AGAIN

New York Team Now Nine Full Games in Front in American

(By Sid Feder Associated Press Sports Writer).

Surprise of Major Baseball today are Brooklyn Dodgers and futile Phillies, the Dodgers with five straight wins, four of them against teh select Cincinnati Reds and the Cards from St. Louis, and the Phillies with an even break in four outings with the same outfits.

The National League surprise packages topped it off last night when the Dodgers downed the Reds and the Phils flattened the Cards 6-5.

Meantime the Yanks, who are almost a cinch to be the American League half of the world series this fall scored an 11-5 win over the St. Louis Browns, tossing in three homers for good measure.

This firing, together with a 3-1 night time party Chicago White Sox enjoyed at the expense of Boston Red Sox, left the Yanks nine games on top in the American League and the Reds 5 1-2 in the National. But Chicago Cubs and Dodgers are coming a'running in the National circuit. The Cubs bumped Boston Bees, 6-1 yesterday to climb within 2 1-2 games of the Cards, and the Dodgers are only 6 1-2 away from Chicago.

Weak Challengers

The Reds, Cards and Red Sox were woeful looking challengers last night. Tot Presnell toyed with the Reds the whole way. The Cards, who were on fire a week ago, not only were chilled by the Phils, but blew a five-run lead in the process chiefly because old Syl Johnson tossed a one-hit, five-inning relief job.

Johnny Rigney, in downing the Red Sox, fanned eight, including Jimmy Foxx four times, which dropped Foxx to .369 in the batting column, while Joe DiMaggio, collecting three hits in St. Louis, got back into the .400 class.

Max Butcher won his second straight for Pittsburg Pirates, nipping New York Giants 4-3 with a six-hitter. Dizzy Trout baffled Washington Senators and Detroit Tigers came through 8-1. Cleveland Indians fired their heavy artillery at the Athletics, banging cut 29 hits for a 10-2 and 17-2 double-header victory.

JERSEY GIANTS TAKE TWIN BILL

Syracuse Chiefs Victims of Double Killing 3-0 and 3-2

(By The Associated Press)

Jersey City fans, who haven't had a baseball pennant winner since 1903, have been watching the Little Giants lead the International League parade all season and a good many of them were begining to believe today that this was their year.

An estimated crowd of 8,500 turned out to watch last night's doubleheader and went home happy after seeing their heroes sweep the bill, 3-0 and 3-2, to extend their lead to 2 1-2 games over Rochester, which went down, 5-1, before Buffalo Bisons.

Johnny Gee was the victim in the first game. The Jerseys touched Mike Meola Syracuse starter and losing pitcher for seven safeties in the second game.

Bill Zuber's five-hit hurling beat Mike Ryba for Buffalo to lift the Herd to within one game of the third place Syracuse Chiefs. The Bisons pounded Ryba for 11 safe blows, including homers by Richmond and Ollie Carnegie.

BROCKVILLE NOW AHEAD

Brockville, Ont., Aug. 25 (CP)—Brockville moved ahead of Cornwall last night in the first round of the Eastern Ontario Amateur Softball Association playoffs with a 14-7 win over the factory towners here. First game of their best two-of-three game series, played in Cornwall Monday, was a 2-2 tie.

TRENTON AIRPORT SQUAD DEFEATED IN SECOND GAME

Belleville Forces Quinte League Finals to Third Tussle Here Tonight

SCORE IS 13-3

"Chuck" Barriage Hurls a Six-Hitter and Strikes Out Five

Trenton, Aug. 25 (Special)—With war clouds hanging low over Europe and within sight and sound of a dozen roaring aeroplane motors, Belleville Intermediates last night decisively outplayed and outscored the R.C.A.F. 13-3 in a game marred by numerous errors. The aerodrome was not exactly crowded with spectators, and those who did come were somewhat disappointed at the showing of the team, that defeated Belleville in the first game of the finals only a few days ago. Whether the imminence of a world war had anything to do with the outcome of the contest is very doubtful of course; but the war scare certainly did have something to do with future games for during the affair a hurry-up message from R.C.A.F. headquarters told Lecompte and Oleskevis of the Airmen to report to their squadron for immediate departure to one of the coast stations, and subsequent games may be played without the services of these two.

Barriage Hurls Game

"Chuck" Barriage and his cohorts got away to an early start, when they pounced on the offerings of "Spider" Webb of the Flyers for five runs in the initial frame and two more in the second; and from that point on the result was scarcely in doubt. Collins replaced Webb in the second and pitched the remaining five innings with rather pleasing results, holding the visitors well in check except in the third when the first four men up scored. Webb yielded six runs during his tenure, and Collins gave out an equal number. The R.C.A.F. ball-tossers really made a grand aggregate in the error department however, when they committed no less than ten miscues with the results noted.

Heavy hitters amongst the Airmen included Legris with a lovely triple in the second which might have been a homer had he been able to hobble a bit faster on his sprained ankle, and Lecompte, who collected on one of his friend's bets in the fifth, when he went for the circuit.

For Belleville Barriage seemed to be clicking perfectly and the six hits he handed out were well scattered. He struck out a total of five, four of them in the last two innings, as compared with four by Collins, and looked better as the game progressed.

The deciding game between the two teams will be played tonight (Friday).

SOCCER OPENING OVERCAST BY EUROPEAN CRISIS

Matches Will Take Place Saturday Unless There is War

FALKIRK ON TOP

Celtic and Hearts Fail to Live Up to Advance Notices

London, Aug. 25 (CP Cable) — The 1939-40 English Football League opening, scheduled for Saturday, is overshadowed this year by the grave European situation. Football association officials are going ahead with carefully-laid plans for the inaugural, and it was reported Thursday that "matches will take place unless there is war, in which case it is unlikely the government will allow big gatherings of people."

The 88 teams which make up the four divisions of the league, are primed for the kick-off. Sun-baked grounds and Jubilee Fund matches accounted for injuries to many players in the past two or three weeks but majority of teams report everything is in readiness for the start.

The Scottish League campaign opened Aug. 12 and up-to-date compilation shows Falkirk on top with a one-point advantage over Glasgow's famed Rangers and Motherwell. Celtic and Hearts, two of the most powerful clubs in the league, have failed to live up to advance notices, each team scoring only one victory in three starts.

Special Interest

Saturday's English League four-star attraction is booked for Wolverhampton with Arsenal providing the opposition. This game is of special interest to critics who contend Bryn Jones, Arsenal's high-priced inside-right is ranked as "one of the best" in the game today.

The gunners paid Wolverhampton $65,000 for the Welsh player last year. Jones did not fit into the Arsenal combination and was "shipped" to the reserve team.

Other highlighted matches include the Everton-Brentford and Stoke City-Charlton Athletic engagements. Everton finished on top of the major loop last year while Charlton ended in third position, nine points behind the Toffeemakers and five in arrears of Wolverhampton.

TIMELY HITTING, SPOT PITCHING DEFEAT OSHAWA

Junior Softballers Win 8-7 and Advance to Second Round of Playdowns

NICE FIELDING

Steve Hook Blanks Motor City Crew After the Fourth Frame

Timely hitting and spot pitching gave the Belleville "Citizens" an 8-7 win over the Oshawa kids and advanced the locals into the second round of the junior O.A.S.A. playdowns last evening at Coleman Flats when the local teen-oged softballers eliminated the Motor City kids in the first round of provincial softball play-offs by taking the series in two straight games, after Belleville had won the initial contest 10-6 in Oshawa.

With Steve Hook, their ace moundsman, scattering seven Oshawa hits in a masterful style and showing some splendid clutch pitching, especially in the ninth after the vsitors' first batter doubled and was left stranded, Hook blanked the Motor City kids after the fourth, only giving up one hit in the last five frames. Romanski, the Oshawa moundsman, was touched for 11 safeties and although none were of the extra base nature, many were of the timely nature and saw Belleville come from behind after Oshawa opened the scoring in the second.

Hit in Pinches

Hits by Goyer and Yarrow gave Belleville three in the second, while Ethier, Yarrow, Clare and Mallory cracked out bingles to add three more in the third and Clare and Yarrow hit in succession to give Belleville their tying run in the fifth and Goyer scored what proved the winning run after a double and erorr in the seventh. Loople, with a triple and home run, led the Oshawa kids with the willow and Rospond whacked out a brace of hits, while Mallory and Goyer counted two hits each for Belleville as the Young-led nine hit splendidly in the clutches.

Between the Lines

with
Ken J. Colling

With so much talk of aggression and the breaking of pacts and treaties throughout the world, the Bay of Quinte League finds itself right up in the news along these lines, as yesterday it was revealed there had been some kind of a non-aggression pact or secret treaty between Belleville and Picton on one side and Napanee on the other. To make a long story longer, it is now revealed that Walter Gerow Jr., Napanee's star shortstop, does not qualify under the O.B.A. residence rule. As can be remembered the younger Walter went to Northern Ontario to play hockey last winter and obtained a transfer from the O.H.A. which is also recognized by the O.B.A. However, early last April the younger Gerow returned to Napanee, after refusing to take employment beneath the ground at the mines. The O.B.A. residence rule calls for bonafide and continuous residence on and after March 15th of the playing year. Frankly speaking we feel that had Gerow applied for a transfer he would have been given one, as he cannot be considered as an import.

However, prior to the opening of the Bay of Quinte League last May, Walt Gerow Sr., aproached Belleville and Picton with the following secret proposition:—"If you will let me play Walter Jr., I won't bring in Herb Handford from Queen's, or even play any of the Kingston seniors this season," suggested Gerow. "That is alright with us, and anyhow we don't think young Walt should be kept out of baseball in our league at least," agreed the Picton and Belleville clubs. The rest is history, Picton beat Napanee six times during the league schedule, but when the play-offs rolled around the tide turned and Napanee soundly shellacked Picton twice, which made the Yanover-Rorke-Church aggregation anything but happy about the summer pastime. Picton protested Gerow's legality under the residence rule. "We did not agree to play against Gerow in any play-offs," bewailed oLu Yanover, secretary of the Picton club in defence of the protest. President McDougall surely has his hands full and there'll be plenty of fun and dirty linen washed at the meeting, we'll wager.

Frankly speaking there may be some rather red faces seen around after the protest meeting and they won't all be hung on Napanee faces either. It seems there is a ruling in the O.B.A. constitution rather makes collusion in baseball rather a serious offence. As a matter of fact the O.B.A. rules provide that —clubs or players knowingly play against INELIGIBLE PLAYERS are equally guilty as the offending club. So now where does that leave Picton in this whole mess, we'd like to know and perhaps so would others, but like all things that are verbally agreed upon the Bay of Quinte League non-aggression pact or secret treaty today finds the biter bitten.

Secretary Dick Ketcheson of the Belleville Fair, informs us he expects the largest stable of harness horses in years when the Fair races open on Wednesday. Nearly $850.00 has been put up by the Fair Board for four races, a free-for-all, 2.27, 2.20 and 2.15 trot or pace listed and we expect several stables of good horses in Belleville while enroute to the Toronto exhibition.

Cy Young's good Citizens' juniors deserve a heap of credit in eliminating the Oshawa kids in the first round O.A.S.A. playdowns. The local kids played sterling ball in Oshawa, they say, and came right back to repeat this effort on the home lot as they won 8-7 last night. The locals now meet Toronto in the provincial O.A.S.A. junior semi-finals. Although his team mates fielded and batted in championship manner, the fact remains that Steve Hook's seven hit spot pitching was the feature of the pastime. Hook's ninth inning hurling effort, after Loople had opened with a double, was the pay-off. Hook made the next two batters pop up and then went to work on a pinch hitter to strike him out and snatch a victory. The mistake Oshawa made was failing to sacrifice in the ninth, when all they needed was one run to knot the count. The Oshawa kids look strong and the majority of the club will be back next year to give the Motor City a formidable junior softball outfit.

Behind Chuck Barriage's six-hit pitching, the Belleville "Orfuns" cuffed the offerings of two Air Force hurlers and skyrocketted to a 13 to 3 win over the Flyers to force the Bay of Quinte play-offs into a third and final game that will be played at the Fair Grounds this evening. The locals lost the initial game through errors, but last night at the Airport the shoe was on the other foot as the Belleville nine played sterling ball behind Barriage with Lorne Jarrell pacing the locals both at bat and with some fine fielding. Barriage whiffed at least six and after a five run splurge in the initial frame, literally coasted in to a well-earned victory. The Flyers saved Harry Dole, their top-ranking hurler to throw in against Belleville here tonight, while Belleville has Kelleher, Ellis, Weeks and Barriage as a relief moundsman for this evening.

PUNCEC DEFEATS JACK BROMWICH

Australian Doubles Team Must Win Match From Yugoslovia

Brookline, Mass., Aug. 25 (AP)—Still in the running by virtue of some amazing tennis by Ferenc Puncec, Yugoslavia's Davis Cup doubles team today faced a crucial match with Australia's world-ronking combination of Jack Bromwich and Adrian Quist.

With the score standing in the interzone final tie to determine a challenger for the United States Davis Cup holders, the Yugoslavs were uncertain up to match time as to who would carry the load against the heavily favored Aussies.

The official overnight nomination team was a team made up of Drago Mitic and Franjo Kukuljevic, but this was made soon after the all-but-exhausted Puncec had scored his 6-2, 8-6, 0-6, 6-2 upset victory over Bromwich. Since a switch could be made up until an hour before match time, many thought Puncec would recover sufficiently to play.

Yesterday Puncec was superb in beating Bromwich. He ran up 38 placements to 20 from Bromwich. All but eight of the latter's, however, came in the third set, which Puncec obviously threw in order to rest.

In yesterday's opening contest, Mitic proved no match for Quist, losing 6-0, 6-4, 6-3.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was eating breakfist with pop and I said, Hay pop, will you take me fishing Sattiday?

Fishing, yee gods, it's been so long since I've been fishing the fish would hardly reckonize me, pop said. Why this sudden urge to go fishing? I thought you didn't like fish, he said, and I said, Neither I don't personly, but I'm going to start to keep a diary and I want to begin it with something unusual, I said.

Well get the part in your hair strate tomorrow morning and start it with that, lord knows that will be unusual, pop said. Or when you come down to breakfist try to spread the butter on your toast so it will look more like buttered toast and less toasted butter, that would be something new for your diary too, he said.

Meaning the pile of butter I use and being sourcastic, and I said, Well G wizzickers, pop, I mean G willickers, that wouldn't be anything special.

Well think of something better, pop said, and said, Sure, suppose, I eat 4 boil eggs instead of just one, that would be a record and people always write about records.

It would be more likely to be something gor the doctor to put in his diary, a most unusual case of egg fever, pop said, and I said, Then suppose I go back to bed after breakfist, I never did that before.

And you're not going to start this morning, pop said. Yee gods, why dont you try eating a meal in thoughtful and dignified silence? That would be an item for everybody's diary, he said.

Wich it would.

"The GLASS SLIPPER"
by MIGNON G. EBERHART

"Is there any reason why she shouldn't have given Julie the cocktail? While Julie waited. Or she could have met Julie outside and taken her some place and tried to persuade the girl not to talk. And perhaps—perhaps Julie wouldn't be persuaded, so Alicia simply called Julie's attention to somebody passing and popped a capsule in the cocktail."

"Don't Andy—it makes it sound so real!"

"It was real," said Andy. "Perhaps not just as I've described it, but something like that must have happened. It could have been Alicia. Why not?" Andy rubbed his hands through his hair and replied to himself. "Why not? Because we can't prove it. She could have done it. But somebody else could have done it. Proof is the thing we've got to have to clear you, and the thing we can't get."

"Alicia could have come to my room last night," said Rue. "But she couldn't have called Brule away. Well, yes, she could have done that. But she——"

"Your room!" Andy stared at her and leaned his hands on the table to look closely into her face; his eyes were alert and frightened. "What do you mean?"

"I'm not sure it was anything, really," said Rue slowly, but told him.

"First time that has happened to Brule," said Andy. "I mean the phony call. It's one of those things doctors are on their guard against. Brule doesn't know yet what the powder in the glass is?"

"I don't think so. I've not seen him since early morning."

"It means," said Andy slowly, "that whoever did it thinks Julie managed to tell you something before she died. It means—good heavens, Rue, it means somebody free to come and go in this house! Somebody who knew just how to get Brule (and the policeman who was left here last night) to leave the house. Somebody——"

He stopped abruptly. The strangest, still look came upon his face. "Rue—are you sure Brule actually left the house?"

And as she stared back at him, half afraid, half caught, testing the speculation that hovered almost tangibly in the air between them, he said slowly and strangely: "He's so strong, Rue. And so—so ruthless. You've seen it as I have. But, Rue—he couldn't have done this. Not to Crystal——"

She wanted to remind him of the things Brule had done; she didn't. She said gropingly:

"There are other people who were in the house or who could have got into the house last night. There's Madge and Alicia and Steven; Guy Cole comes and goes at will and always has. I don't know whether or not the house was locked last night...." She searched her mind for others, and there were none except servants.

"Who had an alibi for the time poison must have been given Julie? How did she get into the house? How long had she been here when Gross found her and brought her to you? Whom had she seen here? What did she know?"

"Steven had an alibi," said Rue unexpectedly. "I heard him at the piano. I know he was there in his studio the whole time."

"I'm going to question Gross. May I?"

Gross came instantly.

"Madam rang?" His blank eyes took in every detail of the little scene, the two of them talking earnestly, stopping abruptly when he opened the door.

"Gross, Mrs. Hatterick wants to know some things about yesterday. Close the door, please."

"Yes, sir." He closed the door quietly and advanced.

"Now then, Gross, we understand that when the young lady arrived yesterday you did not open the door for her?"

"That's right, sir."

"You told the police that?"

"Yes, sir. They asked."

CHAPTER TWENTY

"I don't know who let the young lady in," Gross continued. "Neither of the maids admit to it, sir, and it was the cook's rest period."

"Well, Gross, how did she get in the house then?" queried Andy.

"I don't know, sir. I made sure the front door was locked as usual."

"You made sure?" Andy watched the butler for a moment and then said: "Are you really quite sure of that, Gross?"

"Well...." Gross's eyes wavered, went around the room and came back to Andy. "Reasonably so, sir. It is almost always locked. I mean with the night latch. Naturally there was a little confusion following the arrival of the police and all; I can't exactly swear that the front door was locked. But in any case the young woman wouldn't simply have opened the door and walked in."

"No, I suppose not," said Andy. "Although if she were confused, a little muddled in her mind, she might have done just that. Opened the door, failed altogether to ring and simply walked into the house and sat down in these nearest chair. According to Mrs. Hatterick, the girl wasn't exactly sensible of what she was doing. You got that impression, too, I imagine, Gross."

"Well yes sir. Now that you ask me I confessed that I thought she was...." He coughed delicately with a side glance at Rue and said: "A little under the influence. I—was obliged to tell the police that too."

"Good for you," said Andy. "That helps clear Mrs. Hatterick, you see. Stick to your story." Gross gave Rue a somewhat surprised and wondering glance; he hadn't, it was obvious, realized that such a statement had its value as indicating that Julie had been poisoned before she saw Rue. Andy went on: "And be sure you stick to it, up and down, no matter how much the police question you. Don't waver for an instant. She was poisoned already—before she saw Mrs. Hatterick?"

"Well, I—I wouldn't go so far—"

"Of course she was. No doubt of that, Gross. She had already been poisoned; entered the house probably without remembering to ring; just had a vague notion of getting inside the house and seeing Mrs. Hatterick. When you discovered her sitting in the library, what did she say?"

"Just that she—she wished to see Mrs. Hatterick."

"There was no glass, no cup, nothing like that—"

"Oh, no sir."

"All right. Now listen, Gross. When you let Miss Pelham into the house—"

Gross looked blanker than ever and rather pale.

"I didn't open the door for Miss Pelham either."

Andy jumped to his feet. "What's that, Gross?"

"No sir. Miss Pelham has a key—has had ever since Mrs. Hatterick—that is the late Mrs. Hatterick's illness. The—the late Mrs. Hatterick gave it to her. So she could come and go at will. They were, as you know very well, sir, the most intimate friends."

Andy said slowly: "Then you don't know exactly when Miss Pelham arrived. Do you?"

"No sir."

"Good." Andy had an air of triumph. "That's all, thank you, Gross. Oh yes, wait; there's something else. You remember during Mrs. Hatterick's illness a chart the nurses kept; that is, that Miss Garder and—" Gross was already nodding.

"Oh yes, sir. I remember it very well."

"Well then, after Mrs. Hatterick died, I expect you removed the chart yourself; when the room was cleaned, I mean."

Doubt was again in Gross's face; doubt and a touch of bewilderment. "I—I can't say I remember seeing it, sir."

"Think hard."

"Yes sir. But unless one of the maids took it.... No, I'm quite sure I didn't put it away, sir."

"I see. All right, Gross. I don't suppose it's important anyway. Thank you—that's all."

"Thank you, sir," said Gross and vanished quietly.

The door closed again and Rue said: "The chart. The police asked about it too."

"Yes. That's why I wondered. Funny, where it's got to. If Julie had it—"

"I don't think she had. She wasn't here after Crystal's death. And I haven't got it. Why, Andy?"

"I don't know," said Andy. "It's just that the police want it—so I'd rather get hold of it first."

"It's probably been destroyed long ago."

Someone was in the hall. It was Brule, for they heard his quick footsteps and his voice speaking, apparently, to Gross. He opened the door and came into the room.

"Oh, hello there, Andy. Glad you're here; something rather — shocking has happened."

Brule walked with his usual assured air of possession across the room and took a cigarette, pausing while he lighted it.

Seating himself abruptly in a chair, Brule continued.

"The office girl said she thought you were here. I want you to hear what's happened. We've found some stuff in a glass—"

"I told him," said Rue stiffly.

Brule shot her one dark glance that was instantly arrested and speculative as if the very tones of her voice betrayed something of the thing Andy had told her.

If so, however, he didn't explore then and there but continued:

"Oh. Very well. Then you know the whole thing, Andy. Well, the thing is, it—really was poison. I got a chemical report on it—privately, without letting the police know. It's an amazing combination of a hypnotic drug, some barbituric acid derivative, and morphine. Enough to kill a horse.

"The beauty of this particular combination —to the murderer's mind—is that an overdose of it would certainly induce just what it did induce: a confused heavy drowsiness growing into a coma and presently death. The hypnotic might check the almost instantaneous action of the morphine—although it might not; they might work simultaneously. And they might have been in a capsule which would delay their action. I'm going to tell the police what to look for."

"You mean—give them that chemist's report? And tell them what happened last night?"

"Yes, certainly. The sooner they know it, now, the better. I didn't knew just what it was. Now I — know," said Brule.

Andy cleared his throat and said slowly:

"It didn't take your chemist long to analyze the stuff."

"I told him what to look for" said Brule promptly.

"You—how did you know?"

Brule's eyebrows made a quick, straight line across his face.

"Because that's what I thought it might be, Andy. Any other questions?"

"No-no. Except—are you sure it's a good thing to tell it to the police? You know as well as I how few people could have put that stuff in Rue's room."

"I know. Very few people could have given poison to Crystal too. Any number of people, I suppose, could have murdered the nurse, but who did? Who had motive plus opportunity?"

"But, Brule, you—you were all in favor of keeping the thing quiet," said Rue. "I mean, you said that you thought at the time that Crystal's death was not naural but that you thought it wiser to accept it. You said it was better to think of Madge and of Steven and—"

"And of myself and of Andy. And of you, Rue. Yes, I did think so. Things have changed."

"You—you're going over to the side of the police? Do you mean that, Brule?" said Andy.

"I mean we've got to wade through it now. We can't dodge around it."

"But still there's no use in telling the police all you know. Unless... What's your idea of it, Brule? Who—who killed her?"

"I don't know. But I do know — Listen, Andy, do you know why I'm at home at this hour of the day? Well, guess. It's because there's nothing to do. My calendar had a busy day marked. I got there, and old man Gillette had cancelled his operation; three patients had telephoned to say they were better and were not coming in to the office; the only telephone calls were cancellations of appointments, and the only thing in the world I had to do was to make sick rounds at the hospital. Until this thing is settled it'll be that way. Look at your own desk calendar, Andy, if you don't believe me. We can't dodge this thing. We're in it up to our necks. We've got to go through it and emerge scoured clean. You're ambitious, Andy; sometimes I've thought too ambitious, but I—" t Bruel looked a his cigarette and said with a curious tinge of sadness, "I'm the last who ought to complain of ambition. I only know what—too much of it makes of your life. Well, that's beside the point. You're ambitious and you've got a brilliant start on what's likely to be a brilliant career. Well, you're in this thing along with the rest of us. You can't help yourself. The only thing to do if we want to save anything of our work is to emerge from it as clean as a whistle."

Andy glanced at Rue.

"That sounds fine and heroic, Brule," he said. "Exactly what does it mean?"

"What does it mean" Brule's eyes flashed dangerously. "It means what I've said. Put your cards on the table. Give the police every possible help."

"I see," said Andy slowly. "Then—you wouldn't say that, Brule, unless you see your way through. Unless you know who murdered her and are willing for whoever did it to be charged with murder—or you know who murdered her and know also how to cover it."

Brule's face turned hard. He looked at Andy for a moment, eyes bright and scrutinizing, then said:

"There is another consideration, Andy. In fact there are two other considerations, one of which is that an attack on Rue's life indicates Rue's innocence; therefore I want the police to know of it. But I assure you now that I do not know who murdered Julie, and if I did I would go straight to the police with the knowledge. However, whatever my motives are or whatever motives you ascribe to me, this is the course we are going to take. Understand?"

It was like the crack of a whip.

"Yes," said Andy.

CHAPTER TWENTY-ONE

After Andy had gone, Brule said to Rue:

"Andy hasn't much regard for any ethical consideration on my part. The curious and rather alarming thing about it is that he's a product of my own teaching. Except—except Andy has no basic strength."

She thought of Alicia and of Crystal and of Andy caught between Brule's own selfishness and Crystal's vanity.

"Some people," said Rue, "might call it ruthlessness."

Again he shot her a quick, oddly discerning look.

"Ruthlessness?" he repeated. "Well, perhaps. His strongest characteristic is ambition; you've seen that. And I've taught him that there are times when splitting hairs does nobody any good. And that there are times when what some people would consider cruelty is actually mercy. As at the moment."

She fumbled for his meaning and was confused by the hard, knowing brilliance of his gaze.

"I mean," he said coolly, "it may appear cruelty to deliberately help the police discover the identity of whoever murdered Crystal and Julie; cruel only because we all know in our hearts that it means some very public washing of any soiled linen, and—naturally, inevitably, in the end a tragedy." His face for an instant lost its hardness and certainty. If she had not know his innate indestructibility she would have said it became sad and yet strangely compassionate—foreboding yet deeply perplexed.

He put out his cigarette and looked at her coolly and said, "But I do not consider it a cruelty to stop any further attempts upon your life....Has Andy been making love to you?"

"Andy—" She felt the crimson wave creeping upward over her face. But how dared he ask when Alicia was actually in the house? Rue's house, for she was his wife. He was smiling a little.

"Perhaps I've not much right to ask, considering our agreement. But if he has been—stop it"

Cold rage swept like a wind upon her She tried to speak, tried to cry out against him and against Alicia, and he said: "Don't let him. Andy's good at love-making. I don't intend to give reasons, however, Rue. That's an order."

Produce Market Prices Improve

Toronto, August 25.— Cheese recorded its first price gain in more than a week on the Toronto open produce market yesterday as butter and eggs continued to follow an upward path, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported. Trading in all lines was moderately light.

Although it was again evident that large country producers were shipping their eggs to Montreal instead of Toronto; in view of the higher prices prevailing at Montreal, eggs were not scarce in Toronto. Receipts were on the light side, but were sufficient for the demand. The market was firm, with graded eggs advancing fractionally. A-large eggs in this section of trading moved up to a range of 28c to 29c, while A-medium sold at 27 cents to 27 1-2 cents.

Receipts of Ontario butter were light and were cleaned readily. First-grade creamery solids sold at 21 3-4c to 22c, up slightly from Wednesday. Sales of Western butter were made at 22 1-4c with some holders asking 22 1-2c.

Quebec Butter Improves

Montreal, Aug. 25.—(CP) —Quebec No. 1 and 2 pasteurized butter improved about 1-4c on produce markets here yesterday while potatoes, eggs and cheese all held steady the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported.

Canadian Cabinet Council Called to Meet This Afternoon

Prime Minister Mackenzie King Confers With Lord Tweedsmuir

HAS WIDE POWERS

Ottawa, Aug. 25—(CP)—Cabinet council has been called to meet at 3 p.m. EDT to consider latest developments in the European situation.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King, after studying latest reports from Europe, summoned his ministers, requested yesterday to remain within call. At noon the Prime Minister went to Rideau Hall to confer with Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor General.

Under the War Measures Act of 1914 the Governor in Council may proclaim that a state of war "real or apprehended" exists, and may exercise the widest possible powers to meet the emergency pending the assembly of parliament.

The Prime Minister has stated he will call parliament immediately he is convinced efforts to preserve peace in Europe will prove unavailing, and that he will rely on the powers provided in The War Measures Act to meet the situation during the week necessary to assemble parliament.

May Fill Vacancy

There is a possibility that the finance vacancy, created through Hon. Charles Dunning's resignation (still unaccepted) and his health seeking trip to England, would be filled at once if an emergency session is called. The portfolio of Secretary of State is also vacant through the death of Hon. Fernand Rinfret. Justice Minister Lapointe is acting Secretary of State.

Cabinet ministers told themselves ready, at the Prime Minister's request, to go into immediate conference should occasion demand. At the close of a day-long cabinet meeting yesterday, Mr. Mackenzie King issued a statement declaring that "the government have been proceeding with complete unanimity in outlining the policy which they will announce the moment parliament is summoned, should that step become necessary. Meanwhile, all possible precautionary measures are being taken to meet whatever eventuality may arise."

Consider Many Measures

Yesterday's meeting, he said was devoted "largely to the further consideration of such measures as would require to be put into effect in the event of emergency both in relation to actual defence and in relation to trade and industry."

The Prime Minister's reference to emergency measures respecting trade led political circles to conjecture that the government may be considering, among other measures controlling the export of such war materials as nickel, scrap iron and copper and certain chemicals by instituting a government export licence system.

Assemble in Week

It was assumed that the government has an order in council already for quick execution should it become necessary to summon parliament into session. Fast trains and the new air service across the country could bring the members to the capital within a week, the Prime Minister has estimated.

Defence Minister Mackenzie was in seclusion last night and his aides worked through the night. Major-General T. V. Anderson, army chief of staff, was at his office, and naval and air force heads were also closely in touch.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Aug. 25—(AP)— The stock market nibbled at recovery fodder today and leading issues recovered fractions to a point or so. Buyers were notably wary, however, and dealings slowed appreciably after a quiet opening. Despite the predominance of modest gains, there was an assortment of losers near the fourth hour.

Among stocks support was given Anaconda, Kennecott, American Smelting, Phelps Dodge, U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Motors, Chrysler, U. S. Rubber, Sears Roebuck, Montgomery Ward, Western Union, Pennsylvania, J. C. Penney, Boeing and Philip Morris.

Marked up fractionally among Canadian issues were C. P. R., McIntyre Porcupine and Lake Shore. Dome and Distillers shaded lower. Dominion 4s were under fair pressure in the bond market.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Aug. 25—(CP)—Toronto exchange today registered a sizeable rally, helped by the lull in the issuing of threats from Germany and the fall in sterling. The discount on Canadian funds in New York was deemed to be favorable for Canadian mines as sellers of gold. Gains were showing for golds, base metals and industrials in early afternoon. Western oils showed little change.

From an opening decline of 2 points Noranda came up to show a gain of 2 this afternoon while fractional gains were boarded by Nickel and Smelters. Waite-Amulet rose 40 cents.

HOG QUOTATIONS

Toronto, Aug. 25.—(CP)—London dressedweight bacon-hog prices declined 25 cents to show the only loss on reporting markets today. Brantford, Chatham, Hamilton, Hull and Stratford prices were unchanged.

Dressedweights Brantford $10.35; Hamilton $10.50, Hull, $10, Stratford $10.25 plus transportation, London $10 plus transportation, Chatham $10.20.

Liveweights —Hull $7.50, Chatham $7.50.

Swimmer Catches L. Trout With Hands

Meaford, Ont., Aug. 25—(CP)—Fishing guides vouch for the authenticity of this story. They say Bobby Challis, 15, dived from one of the docks and captured a 7 3-4 pound trout he spied swimming by.

"It certainly is more fun than fishing with a pole," Bobby said. "It was hard to hold but I managed to land him."

A tourist who witnessed the feat purchased the catch.

The Archbishop of Canterbury issued a special appeal for power.

The Duke and Duchess of Kent planned to fly home from Paris, ending a motoring holiday in Europe. Their return adhered to original schedule.

While war clouds loomed dark on the western front of 25 years ago, some newspapers saw a new light in the far east.

Japan's Chagrin

The Evening Standard (Independent) drew attention to Japan's chagrin at the turn of events. The paper quoted Foreign Minister Hachiro Arita's remark: "Urge you not to despise the Chinese" and expressed the belief that if Germany banished the spectre of war on two fronts, Great Britain gained some advantage in that "our fleet won't be needed in the far east."

The Standard suggested that Hitler's pause may be dictated by his generals' misgivings. It recalled other occasions when the German generals sought to restrain the Fuehrer and declared they still have a voice and "it is they and not Hitler who must conduct a war."

Referring to the current rumor that the nigger in the Russo-German woodpile is a secret agreement to partition Poland, The Star (Liberal) said: "If the incredible should ultimately prove true...... and it leads Communist Russia to repeat one of the worst crimes of Tsarist Russia and to partition Poland, it will outrage feeling all over the world."

Evening News Comments

The Evening News (Independent) said it had little hope Hitler would be any more moved by President Roosevelt's appeal than he was by a similar plea before the Munich crisis, but it added:

"An appeal to Herr Hitler to withhold his threatened attack on Poland, for that's what it amounts to, by the chief executive of the world's most powerful democracy cannot lightly or inconsequentially be rejected."

There was no comment on another interpretation that Russia's move was designed to promote conflict that would lay the groundwork for a world-wide marxist revolution.

DR. M. J. MALONEY TO BE CANDIDATE

Dr. H. H. Stevens Says Canada Should Proclaim Self in Present Crisis

Renfrew, Ont., Aug. 25.—(CP)—If those democratic liberties so prized in British citizenship are to be preserved, Canada should proclaim to the world its determination to stand by those principles, side by side with Britain, France and Poland is the view of Hon. H. H. Stevens.

In the present crisis, civilization itself is faced with doom if there is any weakening of the power of the British Empire, he told the South Renfrew National Conservative Convention here yesterday. Accordingly, he urged government leaders to declare themselves clearly.

There is no use in Canadians deluding themselves into believing they can preserve their own civilization by keeping aloof from European troubles, Mr. Stevens said. "If civilization is destroyed in Europe, what is to prevent the forces which hold that the state is all and the man nothing from spreading their power and influence over this continent?" he asked.

Dr. Maloney Named

The convention named Dr. M. J. Maloney of Eganville, Ont., as Conservative candidate in the next Federal election. Dr. Maloney represented South Renfrew in the House of Commons from 1925 to 1935.

Mr. Stevens and Dr. Maloney both declining to criticize the Dominion Government in any way because of the International emergency. Mr. Stevens said it would be "far from proper" for him to harass the government at such a time. Dr. Maloney asserted he also would utter no word against the government so long as these war clouds lasted. "If war is declared, our duty is plain—to forget party and all for the state, to stand shoulder to shoulder to aid the Empire," he said.

Mussolini failed to give any indication of what consideration he might give to President Roosevelt's suggestion that Italy advance proposals to avert war.

King Victor Emmanuel told William Phillips, who delivered the President's message, that he would refer it to his government.

American circles expressed the belief today nobody in Italy, including Mussolini, wants war.

JAPANESE DECIDE TO PROTEST.

Tokyo, Aug. 25 (CP-Havas)—Domei (Japanese) News Agency announced today the Japanese government had decided to protest to Berlin against Germany's non-aggression treaty with the Soviet Union.

Although there have been evidences of official anger in Tokyo since the Reich first disclosed its plan to effect a reconciliation with Russia, the decision to protest marked Japan's first formal action in the matter.

Japan is linked with Germany and Italy in a pact against the Communist International, and until the German-Soviet treaty was signed had been considering joining the Italo-German military alliance.

PROTEST SENT TO AMBASSADOR.

Instructions to protest were sent to General Hiroshi Oshima, the Japanese Ambassador at Berlin, by Foreign Minister Hachiro Arita.

Japanese representatives who were to have attended the Nazi Party Congress at Nuremberg next month sent word they had changed their itinerary. From Marseille, France, the delegates, General Juichi Terauchi and Admiral Mineo Osumi, will go to Switzerland, where they will remain until the situation has been clarified, according to Japanese dispatches from Berlin.

The Japanese protest to Germany, it was authoritatively reported, will state flatly that the Moscow pact violates the spirit and provisions of the agreement against the Communist International which has been the basis of German-Japanese co-operation.

AT THE BELLE

"GOODBLE MR. CHIPS"

Described as the most moving school story ever written, "Goodbye Mr. Chips", based on the successful novel by James Hilton, and with Robert Donat in the starring role, opens next at the Belle after three weeks at the Uptown Theatre, Toronto.

The new picture, filmed in England by M-G-M, comes on top of such earlier British-made successes as Donat's "The Citadel", hailed by critics as the best picture of last year, and "A Yank at Oxford," in which Robert Taylor scored one of his outstanding hits. "Goodbye Mr. Chips", was produced by Victor Saville, who also produced "The Citadel" and was directed by Sam Wood, director of "Lord Jeff" "Navy Blue and Gold" and "A Day at the Races" among other hits.

Together with Donat, the new picture features Greer Garson, lovely English stage star, who makes her first appearance in a motion picture as Donat's wife in "Goodbye Mr. Chips" and is hailed as the most sensational screen "Find" since the discovery of Hedy Lamarr. Also in a prominent role is little Terry Kilburn, who came to the fore as a child star for his work in "Lord Jeff" and "A Christmas Carol." A cast of prominent English players fill the supporting roles together with some 2,000 English boys who play themselves in the varied school sequences of the production.

"Goodbye, Mr. Chips" tells of an ordinary man going about his work day after day, year after year, thoroughly and conscientiously. A moving tale of the joys and the sorrows met by every man or woman, whatever their rank in life, this memorable record of the personal experiences of Mr. Chipping, or "Chips" as he comes to be known, friend of generation after generation of young Englishmen, proves that the spirit of England can again be faithfully translated to the screen.

To to the central figure of this moving story Robert Donat is said to bring all his brilliance as an actor and, as the lovable schoolmaster, to give a performance which by its sincerity and strength of character surpasses even his portrayal of the doctor in "The Citadel."

Donat regards "Mr. Chips" as the most difficult assignment of his career, for he had to play the varying ages of a man, first slightly younger than himself, then slightly older, becoming gradually a hero in his own small world, and finally recognized by successful men as the true builder of their careers and character.

Donat believes in studying the character he is playing rather than the actual words he has to say. Consequently, quick changes did not catch him napping and he was ready at all times to be "Mr. Chips" at any age.

"Aging sixty years over lunch was a bit trying at first but I finally became used to it", he declared. "And I also became used to putting back the clock. However, it was a unique experience to start the day at the studio at the age of eighty and finish as a young man, all in the space of a few short hours."

"The Seal Skinners" a clever comicolor cartoon and the popular Belle world news events will be presented on the same program. At the week-end matinee a thrilling chapter of "The Lone Ranger" will be exhibited.

Smart Show

Ann Sothern and Robert Young are featured in the smart romantic Western comedy, "Maisie" now being presented at the Belle with Virginia Bruce and Walter Pidgeon in "Stronger Than Desire."

A new special edition of the March of Time presenting its most timely, sensational story "England ....Peace or War."

AT THE McCARTHY

"TOO MANY WIVES"

A high-speed romantic comedy, keyed to modern tempo and crammed with hilarious situations presenting flame-haired Anne Shirley in her first grown-up role is the one of two feature presentations now playing at the McCarthy Theatre under the title banner of "Too Many Wives."

Designed chiefly for laughing, the story deals with a hectic "love-at-first-sight" affair between Miss Shirley and an ingenious young man who creates jobs for himself where none grew before. One of these jobs, however, involves a mythical spouse, from which angle the picture takes its name and the complications develop rapidly.

Anne Shirley, usually cast in roles of the precocious school-girl type, breaks away from pigtail parts to portray a wealthy society girl who is bored with her stodgy social admirer and who eagerly accepts the attentions of an interesting newcomer.

A favorite with millions of screen fans for the appealing juvenile roles she played in such pictures as "M'Liss", "Chatterbox" "Anne of Green Gables", "Stella Dallas", "Girls School" and "Sorority House", Miss Shirley promises to win additional laurels for her "grown-up" characterizations in this new film. The part gives her opportunities she has never had in pictures and her performance has turned out to be excellent.

The production also offers a new candidate for leading-man honors in John Morley, from the stage stock company field who plays his first film leading role. Handsome and endowed with a winning screen personality, Morley is hailed as one of the most outstanding young finds of the year.

Featured with the two principals is Gene Lockhart, (former member of the Belleville Kilties Band) as Miss Shirley's wealthy father. Other leading players in this laugh-loaded romance are Dudley Clements, Barbara Pepper and Frank Melton. The second half of the programme presents Belleville's favorite western star George O'Brien in musical and romantic western adventure production "The Renegade Ranger" one of the finest pictures that this Belleville favorite has ever made. Lovely Rita Hayworth, recently featured with Jean Arthur and Cary Grant in "Only Angels Have Wings", Tim Holt, remembered for his gallant role in "Law West of Tombstone" and George O'Brien's old time sidekick, Ray Whitley, who in addition to his action part, renders some swell old western ballads that does your heart good to hear. A clever all technicolor Walt Disney "Mickey Mouse" cartoon entitled "The Whalers" completes this program now playing at the McCarthy Theatre.

HITLER IS LIKELY

Berlin, Aug. 25—(AP)—Rejection of President Roosevelt's peace plea to Fuehrer Hitler was forecast by competent sources today as Nazis gave Poland, Great Britain and France another "day of grace" in which to capitulate to German demands.

Mr. Roosevelt's message suggesting that Poland and Germany settle their differences either through direct negotiations, by arbitration or by conciliation was studied by the Fuehrer in the chancellery this morning.

The first answer is expected to be made public tonight, probably through the foreign office mouthpiece, the Deutsche Diplomatische-Politische Korrespondenz.

Excellent sources said the reply would be negative in tone with the implication that President Roosevelt had sent his plea "to the wrong address."

"It should have gone," these sources said, "to England."

Molotoff Takes Hand

Meanwhile the Russian Commissar for Foreign Affairs, Vyacheslaff Molotoff ,through his Ambassador in Poland, has started a movement for a possible 11th hour "peaceful" settlement of Europe's war threat, a source in the confidence of Field Marshal Hermann Goering said.

The combined pressure of Russia and Germany is confidently believed here to be sufficient to convince the Poles of the hopelessenss of their position and to force them to capitulate.

It is for this reason, this source said, that Fueher Hitler did not give the word last night that everybody had expected, to start his offensive upon Poland.

How near the Fuehrer was to action last night was illustrated by one significant detail in the Reich propaganda set-up.

The broadcasts of the various German stations throughout the late evening and early morning hours were reported to be identical by various persons who tuned in on different stations.

Stations All Hooked

Normally all stations have different programs except when there is a nationwide hookup for a special occasion such as a Hitler speech. They also are hooked together when important news anncuncements are expected momentarily.

On the nights of Wednesday to Thursday, for instance, they were all set to broadcast the news of the conclusion of the Russian-German pact in Moscow. Last night, however ,they waited in vain for the expected signal that the act of "liberating" Danzig and the Germans in the former German sections of Poland was on.

To veteran observers, this was but another illustration of Hitler's tactics to try to make the other fellow's nerves snap. Hitler has shown again and again that at critical moments, when everybody else thinks action is inevitable, he has the steady nerve to wait.

Apparently he was trying also to gain time for further broadening his basis of friendship.

Join Japan And Russia

Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop, according to well-informed sources, is determined to bring Soviet Russia and Japan together, in order thereby still further to embarrass Great Britain.

Over in Turkey, Ambassador Franz von Papen, adept at shuffling the political cards, was reported busy trying to convince the Turks that they made a mistake in tying up with Great Britain and that they had better swap horses.

The two-fold argument that Germany and Turkey have been such staunch friends that they fought the Great War together, and that Russia—Turkey's ally—is now virtually an ally of Germany also, was reported being pressed by Von Papen with all the eloquence of which this versatile diplomat is capable.

Rumania Neutral

The German press also made much of the Rumanian notification to Poland that it would remain neutral. It was taken here as a sign that various powers were getting off the British and climbing onto the German-Russian bandwagon.

The press further kept telling the German public that action on Danzig and Poland might well come at any time.

Hitler, Von Ribbentrop, Goering and other close advisers of the Fuehrer were together for hours last night in a long "peace or war" conference on Poland.

"Only an unconditional and immediate recognition of the legal demands of the axis powers can block the road to a dramatic conflict," said the Dienst Aus Deutschland, commentary with close foreign office connections.

"The moment for a clear and complete solution has come," observed Dienst Aus Deutschland. "The decision regarding the method of solution can become effective any hour."

German demands, in addition to return Danzig, were said to include return of territory lost to Poland in Great War settlements.

Excuse to March

Appointment of the Nazi district leader, Albert Forster, as Chief of State in Danzig and the German allegations that a division of Polish troops was arrayed before the Free State in preparation for a sudden attack gave Hitler an excuse to march, observers said, should he desire to act upon it.

Forster's appointment, said the Dienst Aus Deutschland, "changes, practically speaking, all special arrangements which resulted from the Versailles stipulations and free Danzig" from all relationship to Poland.

"In the German view there exists no doubt that this new legal situation is only a stage of transition from which the sovereign Danzig could undertake the fulfillment of her demands for return to the Reich," it continued.

Can Take Two Steps

Forster, in the view of men with good government connections, can now take two steps: Declare Danzig a part of Germany, and then call on Hitler for help and protection against the Polish army standing at its borders.

In other words, Forster would play the role which Arthur Seysz-Inquart had when Austria was joined to Germany—calling for German help.

The German army could enter Danzig and Polish territory—as it did Austria—in the role of policeman to "establish law and order" upon appeal from within the Free City."

Roosevelt's Appeal

Washington, Aug. 25—(AP)—President Roosevelt pinned his hopes for European peace today on a direct appeal to Fuehrer Hitler and the President of Poland to settle the Danzig question without bloodshed.

Following a close study of the foreign crisis after his return to Washington, Mr. Roosevelt sent messages to the two men last night asking for a truce and suggesting three methods for ending the Nazi-Polish controvery:

1. Direct negotiation.
2. Impartial arbitration in which they can both have confidence.
3. The procedure of conciliation, "selecting as conciliator or moderator a national of one of the traditionally neutral states of Europe, or a national of one of the American republics, which are all of them free from any connection with participation in European political affairs."

Cross Bridge in Due Time

Stephen Early, one of the President's secretaries, said neither Mr. Roosevelt nor any official of his government would offer himself as the conciliator. As to whether the President would accept if he were asked, he said that bridge would be crossed when it was reached.

The President's appeal to Hitler, coming only a few hours after his telegram to King Victor Emmanuel of Italy seeking his good offices, was his fourth such message to Der Fuehrer in less than a year. The first two were sent at the time of the "Munich crisis" last September and the third was in April.

One Note Not Answered

Mr. Roosevelt reminded Hitler that he had not received a reply to his last appeal, and added:

"But because of my confident belief that the cause of world peace—which is the cause of humanity itself—rises above all other considerations, I am again addressing myself to you with the hope that the war which impends and the consequent disaster to all peoples everywhere may yet be averted."

That the President nevertheless did not have in mind a conference which would be dominated by Germany, was indicated by this paragraph in the messages to the Nazi leader and President Ignace Moscicki of Poland:

"Both Poland and Germany being sovereign governments, it is understood, of course, that upon resort to any one of the alternatives I suggest, each nation will agree to accord complete respect to the independence and territorial integrity of the other."

Catastrophe Near

Mr. Roosevelt asked that both nations agree "to refrain from any positive act of hostility for a reasonable and stipulated period." Catastrophe, he said, was verv near at hand.

The message to Hitler was longer and more bluntly worded than the telegram to President Moscicki. The former ended with these sentences:

"I appeal to you in the name of the people of the United States, and I believe in the name of peace loving men and women everywhere, to agree to the solution of the controversies existing between your government and that of Poland through the adoption of one of the alternative methods I have proposed."

Mr. Roosevelt said that the United States was prepared to contribute its share "to the solution of the problems which are endangering world peace in the form set forth in my message of April 14."

(The President's April message suggested non-aggression pacts for the nations of Europe, to be followed by conferences to promote commerce and disarmament.)

Britain Doubts Report

London, Aug. 25—(AP)— Berlin reports that Russia had approached Poland seeking a peaceful crisis ment of the German-Polish crisis were received by British official circles today with reserve and apparent mistrust.

A government spokesman said the foreign office had heard numerous rumors of some sort of German-Russian collaboration on the Polish question, but that none had so far been confirmed.

POLAND'S RIGHTS

No Statement to Make

Foreign office officials have no statement in connection with the reports that such a note, almost of an ultimate character, had been sent to Danzig.

Authoritative sources confirmed the receipt of President Roosevelt's peace appeal by President Ignace Moscicki, but there was no immediate reaction from any competent source.

The Mayor of Warsaw called for volunteers to begin immediate work on construction of bombproof shelters and trenches. Every volunteer was told to bring his own pick or shovel.

Warsaw city authorities also announced that beginning today complete prohibition would be enforced in the city. Liquor stores, saloons, cafes and restaurants may not sell any alcoholic drinks except beer with a light percentage of alcohol.

City authorities in Poznan, the biggest city in western Poland, last night ordered all city lights cut off. The city will remain dark every night until further notice.

cells this morning. Apparently he sawed through the bars of his cell on the second floor of the jail, almost in the heart of Barrie, and got out of the cell block by dropping 30 feet from a window to the jail yard.

He scaled a 20-foot wall to get out of the yard. Police said they believed an accomplice outside had aided in the break.

Davies was arrested shortly after the Royal Bank branch at Bala was held up by two armed men Aug. 2 and $1,970 stolen. Louis Wall, 32, of Toronto also is held at the Simcoe County jail on an armed robbery charge in connection with the holdup. Wall was held in a separate cell and made no attempt to escape.

The men were lodged first in the Muskoka District jail at Bracebridge, where they were to have appeared this afternoon for hearing on the charges. They were moved here because the other jail was overcrowded and it was believed the Simcoe County jail afforded better protection against escape.

Remanded Three Times

Other precautions had been taken to prevent an escape. Wall and Davies had been remanded three times in brief appearances in the jailers' office because police did not want to take any chances on removing them from the jail to the courthouse.

Police investigation has continued since the daring daylight holdup on the possibility a third man was involved. Police did not say whether they thought the man they believed to have helped Davies break jail was the third man they were seeking for the holdup.

BRITISH CABINET CALLED TO MEET TONIGHT

Hitler May Address Reichstag Session Before Day's End

Germany Cut Off from the Outside World for a Period of Seven Hours—Troops Are Ready

FUEHRER IS SILENT

All Germans in Great Britain Advised to Leave Country at Once — Press Continues Attack on Poland

By LOUIS LOCHNER
Associated Press Staff Writer

Associated Press Staff Writer

Berlin, Aug. 26—(AP)—One of the best informants of the Associated Press insisted this afternoon that a compromise in the German-Polish crisis is under way, and declared with optimism:—

"The danger of a world war is definitely averted!"

The informant stuck to his viewpoint, even when he was shown latest developments, including Germany's prohibition on private aviation, the stoppage of boat service to Danzig, the cancellation of a large number of trains, and the designation of Upper Silesia as an "area of military operations."

All these measures, he explained, had been decided upon earlier and were now being executed, as it always takes time for an order from the top to come through to those who must give it effect.

The turning-pint, the informant contended, came at 2 o'clock this morning. At that time, he said, an order to begin operations along the Polish border and at Danzig at 4.30 a.m. was rescinded.

Says Big Decisions Being Made

High army quarters, the informant said, strongly advised Adolf Hitler to show the same willingness to negotiate that Polish President Ignace Moscicki had shown in his reply to President Roosevelt.

The result, he said, was British Ambassador Sir Nevile Henderson's mission to London today.

Paris and Rome also were advised of Hitler's latest offer, the informant said.

This assertion was borne out by information divulged by a government spokesman this morning, to the effect that "the really big decisions" are being arrived at in Berlin, Rome, Paris and London.

Berlin, Aug. 26—(AP)—Reports Adolf Hitler would address the German nation through a hastily assembled Reichstag session before the day's end ran through Berlin today, but without official confirmation.

Meanwhile the Fuehrer's 11th hour crisis message, flown to London by British Ambassador Sir Nevile Henderson, was being pondered by the British government.

Official quarters said they knew nothing of an intended Reichstag session "at this hour". The Reichstag secretariat, too, said no preparations were being made for a meeting.

Report Spreads

Nevertheless the report spread. First evidence of it came about 11 a.m. when the Associated Press offices were telephoned by various friends of the editors, telling them they had heard the calling of the Reichstag would be announced forthwith on the radio.

Before entering government offices in the Wilhelmstrasse at noon, The Associated Press correspondent asked at random some of the hundreds of people standing in the burning sun across the street from the Reichs Chancellery why they were there.

"Haven't you heard?" these people asked, "the Reichstag is to be called together."

Shortly after noon it was announced the speech which Colonel General Water von Brauchitsch, Army Chief of Staff was to make to all the armed forces of the nation had been cancelled.

BRITISH POUND SWINGS WIDELY

London, Aug. 26.—(AP) — Freed from support by the equalization fund, the Pound sterling fluctuated widely today.

The Pound opened at $4.41 in terms of the United States dollar compared with last night's $4.42. The rate then zig-zagged between $4.36 and $4.46 to close at $4.40.

The price of gold was adjusted in accordance with the new rate, hitting the record high price of 155 shillings (about 534.10 at $4.40 to the pounds for an ounce, an increase of four shillings six pence about 99 cents) over yesterday's quotation.

ROOSEVELT SENDS SECOND APPEAL TO ADOLF HITLER

Wants Peaceful Settlement of Differences Between Germany and Poland

POLAND AGREES

Washington, Aug. 26.—(AP) — Fuehrer Hitler received from President Roosevelt today a second appeal that Germany seek a peaceful settlement of her differences with Poland.

Mr. Roosevelt addressed his message to the German leader last night, shortly after President Moscicki of Poland, had accepted a proposal advanced by Mr. Roosevelt 24 hours earlier that the two nations talk things over before resorting to war.

After reciting to Hitler the text of Moscicki's acceptance, Mr. Roosevelt said:—

"All the world prays that Germany, too, will accept."

In his Thursday night messages, addressed to Hitler and Moscicki, Mr. Roosevelt had suggested three methods of averting war: direct negotiation, impartial arbitration or conciliation. President Moscicki expressed approval of either negotiation or conciliation.

GERMAN SHIP HELD AT QUEBEC

Necessary for Captain to Post $12,000 Before Freighter is Released

Quebec, Aug. 26—(CP)—The German freighter Koenigsberg, her dash for the fatherland halted by a warrant charging non-delivery of goods for Montreal, was tied up in Quebec harbor today pending the posting of a $12,000 bond.

The 7,000-ton vessel was boarded by Royal Canadian Mounted Police opposite this port last night as she steamed for home from Sorel in response to a Berlin order, issued yesterday as war fears mounted in Europe, that all German vessels return to home ports.

The warrant, directed against the ship but served upon Captain Wilhelm Siegert, charged the vessel with failing to deliver a cargo of zinc oxide consigned to Montreal for the Pigment and Chemical Company et al. Police said the captain and crew were at liberty to come ashore but no one was permitted to board the vessel, guarded throughout the night at shed 18 by R.C.M.P. officers.

Posting of the $12,000 bond — which officials said probably would be put up today—will permit resumption of the voyage, started late yesterday when the Koenigsberg suddenly cut her moorings in Sorel harbor and headed downstream for the Atlantic Ocean.

Vessels Race for Home Ports, Atlantic Service is Disrupted

New York, Aug. 26—(AP)—Steamship service in the North Atlantic today was in its most disrupted state since the Great War.

Most commercial vessels flying the Nazi Swastika were racing to Germany under orders from Berlin. Polish ships were warned by their government to stand by in neutral ports. Italian liners hugged home harbors.

For the second time within a week, war-risk insurance rates were increased on cargoes destined for Italy and Germany and merchandise shipped in vessels of those countries.

The minimum rate for cargoes destined for axis-power ports and carried in axis-controlled ships was hiked to $10 per $100 valuation, compared with a $5 rate set Thursday.

A rush by many Canadians and United States citizens abroad to get home overtaxed the capacity of available ships.

The German liner Hansa was reported in the English Channel, steaming towards home after turning back on a scheduled trip to New York. The Europa was in mid-ocean bound for Germany.

Despite the general order for German ships to stay in harbors or return home, Berlin steamship officials said the liner Bremen, now in mid-ocean, would proceed to New York and dock there Monday as scheduled.

Italy cancelled sailings of all its ships scheduled to leave for America last night.

Many British vessels, including the Queen of Bermuda, New York-to-Bermuda liner, were ordered to England. The Cunard White Star Lines' Queen Mary, speed champion of the Atlantic lanes, was more than two days out of New York, bound for England.

PEACE - LOVING PEOPLE SEEKING HAVEN OF REFUGE

Visitors in Europe Begin General Exodus to Their Own Homes

HIGHWAYS CLOGGED

Belief is Widespread That War May Come This Weekend

By EDWIN JOHNSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 26—(CP Cable)—Amid the ominous rumble of mechanized military convoys and the tramp of marching troops thousands of peace-loving people urgently sought havens of refuge today from the threatened perils of war.

Throughout the length and breadth of Europe scenes reminiscent of those fateful days preceding the outbreak of war in 1914 are being re-enacted. Men, women and children who only a few days ago were enjoying life at continental resorts, suddenly have been sent scurrying homeward by land, sea and air.

Returning from a motor trip through the European capitals I was caught in the surge of a human wave heading for the shores of England.

WARRIORS' DAY AT EXHIBITION

50,000 Attend C. N. E. When Lord Maugham Declares Fair Open

Toronto, Aug. 26—(CP)— Old soldiers marched again in the Canadian National Exhibition Warriors' Day parade today—only a few hours after the world's largest annual exposition sounded its first chord on notes binding war fears with jubilant cheers that "Ex" time had returned.

Thousands of Great War veterans and their families flocked to the Exhibition Grounds from Toronto and district—it is their day and they were admitted free.

Lord Maugham, High Chancellor of Great Britain, declared the fair open officially yesterday, when an estimated 50,000 attended. In a speech broken often by the force of his emotion, he spoke of the "confidence and courage" of the British people in facing the dangers of impending war.

The Lord Chancellor was expected to arrive in Quebec early today, sailing later for England after curtailing his Canadian visit in view of the international situation.

Later yesterday Lord Maugham visited the international typewriting marathon with Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, former Canadian Trade Commissioner to England. He shook hands with all Canadian entrants, wishing them luck. The Canadian team regained the lead from their United States rivals towards the end of yesterday's rounds.

In another part of the fair grounds Toronto horticulturists took first place in judging of the Ontario Vegetable Growers' Association exhibits. Brantford, London, Kingston and Peterborough were runners-up.

Canadian Gov't Ready For Any Emergency That Arises in Europe

Ottawa, Aug. 26—(CP)—An air of watchful waiting gripped the capital today. It was apparent the government stood prepared for whatever emergency that may arise from the crisis in Europe.

Adequate steps have been taken to safeguard national security from enemies both without and within and the entire complicated machinery was understood to be ready to be put in motion.

Volunteers from the non-permanent militia have been called by Defence Minister Mackenzie to bolster the small permanent force in such duties as manning coastal defences and guarding vulnerable points.

Telephone calls from non-permanent militiamen offering to enlist right away have come in a deluge since the Defence Minister made the announcement last night. There is no compulsion to members of non-permanent units to assume the emergency duty, the Minister said.

Leaves All Stopped

Mr. Mackenzie also announced that leaves had been stopped in view of the uncertainty of the next few days and members of the defence forces on leave hurried back from holiday pursuits to rejoin their units.

The air force is ready to take to the sky and head for war stations already secretly assigned to them. The Minister said seven units were ready to fly at a moment's notice and another could be organized from existing aircraft and personnel at short notice.

FRANCE, ENGLAND IN SINGLE BLOC SAYS DALADIER

Premier of France Maintains Contact With Britain in Crisis

MAGGIAR RETURNS

By HENRY CASSIDY
Associated Press Staff Writer

Paris, Aug. 26—(AP)— The French government today mobilized three additional military groups

This call to the colors made France's mobilization in the face of the European crisis almost complete.

2,200,000 Under Arms

The National Defence Ministry announced that "officers and troops holding mobilization orders bearing the numbers one, five and six are called to the colors and must conform to the instructions of their mobilization cards."

France's armed forces are now estimated to total 2,200,000 although no official figures were issued.

Premier Daladier, who signed the new mobilization order, conferred with British Ambassador Sir Eric Phipps and French diplomats on the possibility of peace arising from Adolf Hitler's reported 11th hour offer of negotiations.

Hitler Plan Called Clever

Persons close to Daladier said Hitler's plan was "extremely clever" making its difficult "not to envisage negotiations."

French spokesmen insisted this country would not back down on its determination to support Poland in case of German attack and to reject any "domination by force."

The general impression was that the plan carried to London by Sir Nevile Henderson, British Ambassador in Berlin, contained Hitler's "minimum demands" and France was calling up more troops to strengthen her stand in case she enters negotiations.

CANADIANS JAM CANADA HOUSE

Scheduled Sailings Cancelled as Fifth Day of Crisis Passes

London, Aug. 26—(CP Cable) — Hundreds of Canadians jammed Canada House and British Columbia House long after closing hours last night seeking help to get home as the fifth day of the current international crisis passed.

As one shipping line after another cancelled scheduled sailings without explanation, harried clerks dealt with thousands of enquiries.

Disappointed Canadians, who learned there was no more room on direct steamships for several days, gathered at the doors of the shipping offices and discussed the best thing to do. Company officials refused to accept deposits and demanded the full fare at the time of reservation.

And while Canadians and Americans yearned for the security of North America, Britons arrived in planes at Croydon Airdrome in such swarms that sometimes customs officials were overwhelmed. The normal daily arrival there is only 400.

Canadians and Americans who secured steamship bookings paid cabin class prices for cots in steamship aisles.

MAN COLLECTING PEBBLES MISTAKEN FOR A SABOTEUR

Stranger Seen Near Trent Canal With Black Box Arouses Resident's Suspicions

POLICE NOTIFIED

Mysterious actions of a stranger who is said to have been carrying a small black box near the Trent Canal last night provided residents of the district with vision of possible sabotage.

A young lady who noticed the stranger wandering about the canal bank, walked toward him in an effort to discover the meaning of his actions. According to her story, the stranger climbed a fence and hid behind a bush when he saw her approach.

Provincial police here were notified and Constable Everett Smith left for Trenton and with Chief-of-Police Bain investigated the story. The car had been removed before their arrival but fortunately a spectator had taken the licence number.

Later the car was discovered parked near the Hotel Gilbert.

Interviewing the owner, police discovered him to be a high official of a can manufacturing company. He told the officers that his hobby was the collecting of odd-shaped and colored stones. He was searching for such articles near the canal bank when the young lady noticed him. He denied, however, running towards his car and hiding behind bushes.

Police were satisfied with the explanation, they said today.

R.C.A.F. Stations In Canada Guarded

Ottawa, Aug. 26.—(CP)—Royal Canadian Air force stations throughout Canada are being guarded and visitors are prohibited except when they have special permission from the officers commanding, it was learned today.

At the Ottawa Air station the names and addresses of all visitors are taken at the gate and they are not allowed to proceed until authority is received from the orderly room.

Winnipeg and Regina Win Grid Contests

Winnipeg, Aug. 26 (CP)—Winnipeg and Regina drew first blood in the initial duels that launched the 24-game schedule of the Interprovincial Rugby Football Union. They bowled over the two Alberta entries under the floodlights before capacity throngs in Calgary and Edmonton last night.

Winnipeg Blue Bombers, western champions for the last two years, treated 3,000 Calgary fans to a brilliant passing attack as they defeated Bronks 12-1 with Andy Beiber, who learned the game on Winnipeg corner lots, and Wayne Sheley, nifty passer, scoring touchdowns. Captain Greg Kabat converted both touches.

Regina's rough riding horde jolted the hopes of Edmonton Eskimos 12-0 before 4000 fans.

GLEAM OF HOPE

Montreal, Aug. 26 (CP) — Lord Maughan, Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, said in an interview here today while en route to Quebec on a boat-train that news from Europe left "a gleam of hope" that was might be averted.

Italian Press Keeps Hopes of Italians Buoyed Up for Peaceful Solution

Rome, Aug. 26—(AP)—An authoritative source said Premier Mussolini had met with members of the Italian high command at his office in the Palazzo Venezia this morning "to discuss military preparation of the nation."

Foreign observers thought it possible the meeting meant general mobilization was under consideration. Two days before calling up of the last two classes of reservists there was a similar meeting.

A double exchange of telephonic communications between Mussolini and Adolf Hitler took place.

Two Messages From Hitler

The German Ambassador, Georg von Mackensen, delivered the first message, which he had received from Hitler by telephone, at 3 p.m. yesterday. Foreign Minister Galeazzo Ciano of Italy accompanied him to Mussolini's office in the Palazzo Venezia.

INDIAN SOUGHT FOR QUESTIONING IN DEATH OF 3

35-Year-Old Wife of Nelson Sammy and Her Parents Shot to Death

Carlyle Lake, Sask., Aug. 26 (CP) —Police today sought a young Indian of the Carlyle Reserve, twelve miles from here, for questioning in connection with the deaths of three persons. Carlyle Lake is about 120 miles southeast of Regina.

The man sought is Nelson Sammy. Police said his 35-year-old wife and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sewack, were shot to death on the Reserve Friday night.

A second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Shewack carried word of the tragedy to J. R. Morrison, Indian agent. The body of Mrs. Sammy was found at the home of Joe McCarthy, another Indian, where she had been shot before the eyes of her two children and the McCarthy couple with whom she had been eating supper.

Mr. Morrison found the bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Shewack in front of their home. Morrison called Dr. Charles Stapleford, coroner of Carlyle, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who immediately launched the hunt for Sammy, believed somewhere on the Reserve with a loaded rifle.

According to reports from the Reserve, Mr. and Mrs. Shewack were the first victims of the shooting. Mr.s Sammy, cousin of McCarthy, was then slain.

Her children were found at the home of Emile Kakeway by Mr. Morison, who obtained stories of their mother's shooting from them.

Premier King Asks Mussolini, Hitler And Polish President to Avoid War

Ottawa, Aug. 26—(CP)—A message has been sent by Prime Minister Mackenzie King to Mussolini, Hitler and the President of Poland urging them to use their power and authority to avoid war. The message was sent through the consuls of Italy, Germany and Poland in Canada.

Text of Notes Sent

Following are texts of messages sent by Prime Minister Mackenzie King today to Chancellor Hitler of Germany, President Moscicki of Poland and Premier Mussolini of Italy:

To Hitler and Moscicki:

"The people of Canada are of one mind in believing that there is no international problem which cannot be settled by conference and negotiation. They equally believe force is not a substitute for reason, and that the appeal to force as a means of adjusting international differences defeats rather than furthers the ends of justice. They are prepared to join what authority and power they may possess to that of the other nations of the British Commonwealth in seeking a just and equitable settlement of the great problems with which nations are faced.

"On behalf of the Canadian people, but equally in the interests of humanity itself, I join with those of other countries and powers who have appealed to you, in the firm hope that your great power and authority will be used to prevent impending catastrophe by having recourse to every possible peaceful means to effect a solution of the momentous issues of this period of transition and change in world affairs."

To Mussolini:

"At this critical moment in the history of the world I wish, on behalf of the people of Canada, to join in the appeals which have been made to you to use your great power and influence to ensure a peaceful settlement of the issues that threaten the peace of mankind.

"The people of Canada are firmly convinced that it should be possible, by conference and negotiation, to find a just settlement of all existing problems without resort to force. They are prepared to join with the peoples of other countries in doing all in their power to achieve this end."

Fuehrer's Message To British Gov't Reaches London

Ambassador Sir Nevile Henderson Confers With Premier Chamberlain and Lord Halifax — Message is Believed to Contain German Government's Minimum Terms in Danzig and Polish Crisis — British Attitude is That Any Terms Must be Acceptable to Poland

Peace Must be Long Term Peace Says London Newspaper — Britain 'Digs in' Against Every 'Eventuality' — Navy is at Strategic Stations in North Sea — Germans Advised to Leave Britain — Nation Loses No Time in Bringing Up Defences to Ultimate Strength

London, Aug. 26 (CP)—After a three-hour conference with the British Ambassador to Germany who flew to London from a meeting with Adolf Hitler, Prime Minister Chamberlain summoned an emergency cabinet meeting for this evening.

Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax, who had been present at the meeting between Mr. Chamberlain and the British envoy, Sir Nevile Henderson, went across the street to consult Charles Corbin, the French Ambassador at the Foreign Office.

Mr. Chamberlain, Sir Nevile and Lord Halifax held their conference over the luncheon table at 10 Downing Street.

SPECULATION ON NEGOTIATIONS

Soon after the announcement of the cabinet meeting, the Polish Ambassador, Count Edward Raczynsky, called at the Foreign Office.

These moves, coupled with reliable diplomatic reports on the nature of Sir Nevile's conversations with Hitler yesterday, led to wide speculation on the prospect of some form of negatiotion.

By J. F. SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Aug. 26 (CP Cable)—Carying Adolf Hitler's peace terms in a small brown dispatch case, Sir Nevile Henderson, British Ambassador to Germany, dashed up the steps leading to the Foreign Office today soon after landing at Croyon Airport.

The Ambassador immediately conferred with Prime Minister Chamberlain and Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax. Later he was to see the King at Buckingham Palace.

At the same time Vincent Massey, Canadian High Commissioner, and representatives of the other Dominions were called into conference with Sir Thomas Inskip at the Dominions Office. It is believed the message brought from Berlin by Sir Nevile Henderson was explained. The meeting lasted an hour.

The Ambassador came to London by air after seeing Hitler yesterday. Official circles declined to answer questions dealing with what Hitler communicated to the British envoy, but it was emphasized the crux of any peace plan was its acceptibility to the Poles. Britain and France, it was emphasized, are not prepared to put pressure on Warsaw to accept terms which would destroy Polish independence.

Although Hitler and Premier Mussolini were in communication this morning, Whitehall sources said there had been no contact between London and Rome.

Cabinet ministers were keeping within call in the event the Prime Minister summons a meeting to discuss Hitler's terms.

Sir Nevile Henderson intends to fly back to Berlin later today with an answer for the Fuehrer, but the time of his departure was indefinite.

BRITAIN 'DIGS IN'

Meanwhile, the country "dug in" against "eventualities". Downtown buildings were fortified with sandbags. Windows were screened with opaque cloth and paper to put London into position for a complete "blackout" to hide from hostile airplanes.

Traffic lights were masked. The street lighting system was ready to be switched off at an instant's notice. Schools were reopened in evacuation areas for a test of evacuation plans. At military centres, there was a continuous going and coming of troops. Anti-aircraft guns were wheeled into position. Balloon barrages were manned fully.

"This year the beach has had its most successful season, giving residents of all sections of the city an opportunity to bathe and sun themselves under ideal conditions," it was stated by Reg. Moncrieff, founder of the project. An estimated average of one hundred swimmers a day is registered at the beach this summer.

MISTAKE IN AD OF OTTAWA DAIRY

In the Ottawa Dairy advertisement appearing in last night's issue it was incorrectly stated to "obtain your brick of Melorol at your nearest Ottawa Dairy dealer." The advertisement should have read "Obtain your brick or melorol at your nearest Ottawa dealer."

FOREIGN POPULATION SMALL IN THE CITY

Belleville foreign population is admittedly very small, with the percentage greater than three or four per cent., it is estimated by city hall officials. "We just don't know what the exact figures are, but this city is fortunate in that respect," stated city assessor and city hall manager, Harold D. Bateman. "Beleville has long been known for its fairly static population of old descended stock."

Thinks New S.A. Chief Ideal Choice

Personally acquainted with Commissioner George L. Carpenter of Toronto, who has been appointed head and Commander of the Salvation Army of the World Corps, Major Alderman of the local Salvation Army Corps today spoke of the new Army Commander as a "sincere saint." He is one man who has become an ideal choice of the general committee, and one, whom I know, is endowed with all the spiritual and physical gifts to carry out this great position most successfully," added Major Alderman.

Personal contact with the new Commander many times during the course of official work of the Army has given Major Alderman a closer insight into the nature of the former Commissioner than has been granted many other workers of the Army.

"I found him one of the most sincere men. He is peculiarly and particularly gifted, and one of his most remarkable points is the spirit of humility. He has wished himself a certain transparency that his work with others may be made the more easier. I am sure that the choice of the new Commander is applauded most heartily by every worker of the Army."

O. B. C. ATTRACTS STUDENTS FROM DISTANT PLACES

New Students Enrolling Daily — Coming from British Columbia, New Brunswick, Quebec — Bermuda Government Cash Scholarship Sends Student to O.B.C.—Recent Visits from Former Students, Now Successful Business Men — Superior Training Appreciated

Notification has been received from a large number of young people who will enter Ontario Business College in the next few weeks. Some are coming from New Brunswick, Quebec and British Columbia (both English and French).

Among those who started courses at O. B. C. this month were three teachers, one of whom is a university graduate with six years of high school teaching experience. Another who enrolled recently is a young man from Bermuda who won a cash scholarship, granted by the Government of Bermuda, to enable him to take courses at Ontario Business College.

Thoroughness of the O.B.C. courses and the wonderful success of O.B.C. graduates are the reasons why the finest types of students are drawn here from all over Canada (and from other countries) year after year.

Mr. Kenneth Cochrane of Amherst, N. S., Member of Parliament and President of the Cochrane Shipbuilding Co., wrote that his course at Ontario Business College was the best investment he ever made.

One day this week three gentlemen called who attended O.B.C. 20, 35 and 50 years ago. One of them is now a clergyman and pastor of a church in Danbury, Conn., U.S.A. The others are successful business men. They all stated that the O.B.C. training had been of great value to them.

There will always be openings for well qualified office workers. Here at O.B.C. is your opportunity to fit yourself quickly for a good business position. If you are ambitious to advance in the business world, you will not delay, but start at once.

Irresponsible Radio News Broadcasts Condemned By Mayor

Says Public Upset by Scare Programs and Suggests Government Supervision

Government action to put a stop to scare radio broadcasts on the current European war situation was advocated by Mayor Jamieson Bone, who expressed the belief that countless persons, more particularly women at home, listening to the radio were thrown into a highly nervous state by some of the irresponsible statements of the news announcers. Much of the news released from some of the stations, news of an highly imaginative character, has been unfounded on fact, it was pointed out by the Mayor.

"I know of several instances where these broadcasts have resulted in virtual hysteria on the part of elderly people. Many of them wholly believe in the radio guff that has been handed out, and they have been in a perpetual scare since the situation was first reported," stated Mr. Bone.

Mayor Bone declared that in time of emergency like the present, radio broadcasting of foreign news should be carefully controlled so that only dependable information would be given out.

"I do not advocate the suppression of any news; that is farthest from my thoughts. I believe the people are rightly entitled to the reception of the despatches from the various European centres, but I do not approve of the hourly 'scare programs' that are being given out.

"The radio stations, like newspapers should not release news merely on rumor. Newspapers, as I understand it, wait until facts are pretty well confirmed before they print anything. Then when they are presented they are handled and presented by an editor, who is, or should be conversant with the facts.

"I would suggest that the news given out by any radio station be subjected to the same careful editing that, I am sure, all the news printed in the daily papers is given, and would even advocate government control of this matter if no other resort is to be had," stated Mayor Bone.

HITLER

Earlier reports in foreign office circles said Sir Nevile Henderson was taking to London a "plan for a constructive solution" of the crisis.

Coming Back to Berlin.

These sources said Sir Nevile was expected back in Berlin before the day is over. He left here by special airplane at 8:20 a.m. today (3:20 a.m. EDT) and arrived in London shortly after 12:15 p.m. (7:15 a.m. EDT).

High officials in the propaganda ministry would neither affirm nor deny the report of a peace plan, but it became apparent elewhere that Sir Nevile was conveying some sort of proposals from the Fuehrer to Mr. Chamberlain.

Silence from Hitler, however, kept Europe guessing what action he intended in the Polish dispute and how he would react to President Roosevelt's second peace appeal.

It was not even known whether the President's appeal, which probably came after the Fuehrer retired, had been delivered to him.

Cut Off Seven Hours.

Following a night of apprehension, during which Germany was cut off from the outside world seven hours, there still was no indication whether Hitler planned another of his lightning week-end actions to liquidate the Danzig and Polish corridor questions.

German troops stood ready along the eastern frontier.

Without giving a reason, Germany shut off all telephone, telegraph and cable communication to points outside the country from 6:30 p.m. until almost 2 a.m. (1:30 p.m. EDT to 9 p.m. EDT yesterday), leading to fears of impending military action. Suddenly, and still without explanation, connections were restored.

There was no indication that Nazi leaders had been in touch with countries abroad—other than her axis partner Italy—after Hitler received the British, French, Japanese and Italian ambassadors late yesterday afternoon, or that any important turn in developments had occurred.

Ships To Return To Port.

The German government last night halted all commercial airplane flights abroad. It ordered all German ships at sea to return to port and those at anchor to remain in their harbors.

It also cancelled the long planned celebration of the 25th anniversary of the German Great War victory over the Russians at Tannenberg in East Prussia. The reason given was the "tense situation".

In London the German embassy discosed all Germans living in Great Britain had been advised to leave the country at once.

The Nazi press continued its extensive accounts of "Polish anti-aircraft guns, of German refugees being slain, beaten or otherwise mistreated."

During the night, German troops in the Gleiwitz area advanced to eastern border positions while staff officers took over one entire floor of a Gleiwitz Hotel as a headquarters.

Soldiers mined the main road between Gleiwitz and Beuthen, a border town. Barricades were ready to be thrown across other highways.

HOURS PASS

Hours laden with possibilities of greatest import to humanity are passing. "Zero hour" has been predicted, there has been talk of an extra "day of grace" and so on, but nothing really vital of what is going on among the Great Powers is known at large. Chancellor Hitler's talks with the ambassadors of Britain, France, Italy and Japan were followed by Sir Nevile Henderson's trip by plane to London last night to report to the British Prime Minister. Up to late last night no one outside of the leaders and representatives involved knew what the exact import is.

But preparation goes on apace with intense activity in every sphere of defence. Ten or twelve millions of men are believed under arms for the Armageddon which everyone hopes will be averted. But many nations are armed to the teeth. Never were there such days in history. And the nations still are nominally at peace though the preparations have been as if a war had been going on for months without casualties. This is the strange anomaly.

BRITISH LABOR TELLS GERMANS THE TRUTH

Democracies find themselves united, and each of the democratic states is a unit. British Labor last night showed its faith in the cause of Britain, France and Poland in a message sent "to the German People," which sums up the entire situation.

"War is very near. You must clearly understand that if war comes Britain and France both stand firmly by their pledges to Poland.

"Your government does not tell you the truth. British labor, which is the friend of the German people, will tell you the truth.

"There need be no war. Provided that the threat of force is renounced, there can be just and peaceful settlement of all international disputes."

The brotherhood of labor which should know no bounds would be split by war, for a very reason that the German people do not know the truth, just as the message put it.

It is to be hoped that the message reaches the German people for it is one of the clearest statements of the situation and reveals the truth of the entire situation."There need be no war. Provided that the threat of force is renounced, there can be just and peaceful settlement of all international disputes."

How differently this sounds from the speech delivered some months ago by the German Chancellor when he told of German envoys going to a conference armed and with the backing of German military might. Just that principle has provoked the present situation—this stressing of force. Force cannot solve the situation, but force may have to be used in defence if the Germans attempt by force to settle issues, for the Polish border is in reality the border of any country which might find itself facing an aggressor nation.

CONFERENCE ON AGE OF THE EARTH

A seven-day conference to determine the age of the earth is announced by L'Osservatore Romano, the Vatican organ, to take place in December. The invitation just sent out by the Pontifical Academy of Sciences, in Pius XII's name, like the composition of the academy, includes many famous non-Catholics. The British representatives invited are:

Sir James Jeans, author of "The Mysterous Universe," president of the British Association, 1934; Professor Harold Jeffreys of St. John's, Cambridge, author of "The Earth, Its Origin, History and Physical Constitution," and an authority on earthquakes, and Professor F. A. Peneth of Durham University, who, from a study of meteorites, has set the age of the earth at about 3,000,000,000 years.

The conference, which will last seven days, will be the first of its kind ever held at the Vatican. Meetings will be private in the Vatican Gardens, and it is expected that a report will be published later. The agenda covers the entire range of modern scientific theories of the age of the earth.

The Pontifical Academy of Sciences has about seventy members, including Catholics and non-Catholics, Sir Charles Sherrington, past president of the Royal Society, and Professor Edmund Taylor Whittaker af Edinburgh University are the British members.

"I understand that this will be the first of such conferences convened by the Pontifical Academy," Professor Whittaker said. "The academy was reconstituted about three years ago by Pope Pius XI. This appears to be the first move under the new order."

ON BEING A POET

After you clasp a thousand books
  Held forth like overflowing hands,
And dote to weariness on looks
  Of people, heavens, leaves and lands
And learn that you are starven still,
  You will surprise the Soul you sought
Nestling beneath the heart's warm sill,
  Folded amongst the sheaves of thought.
Then you shall hear, cupped from the world
  To catch a hidden, holy voice
The gossip glowingly unfurled
  For acolytes of inner choice,
About the spendthrift gold of day,
  The intimacies of dirt and root,
How winds and rivers run astray,
  Why gaudy hues clothe flower and fruit.
And bursting to be breathed to men,
  These matters, whispered in the hush
Will storm the slight point of your pen
  Rending you, nearly, in the rush.
But when the torrent would subside,
  One snag will churn, small as a bird,
And life hang dangling in the tide
  Until your wit dislodge a word.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY SEEMS TO BE ON THE INCREASE, according to some observers in close touch with law enforcement agencies. Hence it is refreshing to learn that there is at least one place where this is not the case, where something is being done about it, something which seems worth while. The town of Napanee is the scene of an interesting experiment with boys who might be inclined to go wrong and are given something else to think about by no less a person that the Chief of Police of that town. Whether the same methods will work successfully in larger centres remains to be seen but Chief Constable Watts, of Napanee, came in for warm praise at a recent meeting of the Ontario Police Association in Ottawa, Chief Watts has formed the boys of Napanee into a sort of auxiliary force to the regular police force to preserve law and order, instills into them the fact that the cops are their best friends and that it pays to go straight. One of the features of the plan is a camp sponsored by the local Rotary Club, and hiking parties. The secret of success of the Napanee Boys Police Club seems to be in keeping the boys occupied. When they are not engaged in play they are given certain police duties to perform. Wearing police badges they keep an eye on the town's traffic and report infractions of the traffic bylaws. At school they take over police duties of any kind that will keep the school community running smoothly. They are made to feel that they have a part to play in promoting the safety of the town. Looks like Chief Watts has something there.

A Class In Ornithology

No sir, things ain't what they seem. Or, at any rate, what they're called, in the animal kingdom. The nomenclature of birds and beasts is so confused that residents of different regions of Canada and the United States use the same names for entirely unlike creatures.

Who's to blame for this chaotic condition in naming the creatures of the earth and sky? The pioneers, worthy in so many respects, appear to be the culprits. In settling this continent they encountered many new birds and animals, and carelessly gave 'em the names of other creatures they'd known at home.

Here are some of the paradoxes in bird names, pointed out by Rudyard Boulton, curator of birds at the Field Museum, Chicago: The bird commonly called a robin isn't a robin. It's a thrush. A real robin is a small English bird, one-third the size of the so-called robin which hops around in your backyard, and only related although superficially alike in having a well-known red tummy.

The real partridge is European and has been introduced in some places over here. It's often called the "hunky" from its proper name, the Hungarian partridge. The bob-white is called partridge in the South, and the ruffled grouse is sometimes called partridge here in Canada. In the Middle West of the U.S.A. the bob-white is called quail, which is a confusion because the true quail is a European bird that migrates to Africa.

Just to make things a little more complicated, the ruffled grouse is sometimes called pheasant in the Eastern States—a term that is properly applied to the long-tailed "ringneck" introduced from Asia. What people call a warbler doesn't belong to the true warbler family at all. The true warblers are Old World birds. North America has only one native species of warbler, but it's called a blue-gray gnat catcher instead of a warbler.

Our so-called oriole is really a blackbird, unrelated to the true orioles which are an Old World family unrepresented in the Western Hemisphere. Likewise our meadowlark actually is a blackbird. However, North America's only true lark, is for a change, called prairie horned ark—somebody slipped and failed to give it a wrong name.

Even that common little street gamin, the English sparrow, is not a sparrow by any means—it's a species of weaver bird, an immigrant first brought from Europe in 1850. Down in Florida lives a turtle which is misnamed gopher, says Karl P. Schmidt, curator of amphibians and reptiles. There also is a gopher (the little mammal called a gopher in Western Canada) and in the South they regard it as a salamander. They've a true salamander and they call that a "Congo eel."

Colin C. Sanborn, curator of mammals at the Field Museum, contributes the note that what is called a prairie dog out West is really a ground squirrel, and in Illinois a ground squirrel is called a gopher, but out West again is a real gopher that they call a gopher, and a ground squirrel that they call a ground squirrel. What one calls a ground-hog is no relative of the pig, but is also a ground squirrel or woodchuck.

And then there's the classic misnomer pointed out to every school-child—the buffalo which is not a buffalo but a bison, very distinctive from the true buffaloes of Africa and Asia. The class in ornithology and zoology now rises.—R. M. Harrison in Windsor Star.

MARRIED PHILOSOPHY

That the years do not leave us and find us the same was evidenced on the 25th anniversary of our jump off the bank of bachelordom into the sea of matrimony, when in taking a perspective of the happenings at home and abroad since then we find that only 10 of the 50 business men who were carrying on in the Bruce capital a quarter of a century ago are still functioning in the county town, or just the number required to save Sodom and Gormorrah in the days when good men were at a premium, or just before Lot's wife looked back and turned into a pillar of salt, which is different from the lady drivers of today who look back and turn into a post.—Walkerton Herald-Times.

Deceivers are the most dangerous members of society. They trifle with the best affections of our nature, and violate the most sacred obligations.—Crabbe.

God writes the gospel not in the Bible alone, but on trees, and flowers, and clouds, and stars—Luther.

Napanee's Noted Police Club

At a recent meeting of the Ontario Police Associatoin in Ottawa, Chief Constable Adam Watts, of Napanee, came in for warm praise for the successful efforts he has made to reduce juvenile delinquency in that town to almost the vanishing point. In the nine years that Chief Watts has held office there have been only four juvenile court cases in Napanee, a town of 3,500 people.

This remarkable record was not made by ruthless police methods. To the contrary, it was the result of kindly, helpful interest. Shortly after he went to Napanee the Chief formed a Police Club for the purpose of providing underprivileged boys with those things needed to develop wholesome characters in sturdy bodies. The membership is about 85, the ages of the members ranging from six to fourteen, and there is a waiting list almost as long as the membership list.

The club has been successful because it has greatly brightened the days of boys who would otherwise have led drab lives because of depressing home conditions resulting from insufficient incomes. They are taken camping and hiking. At present Chief Watts has 27 of the boys in a 10-day camp sponsored by the Rotary Club. Here the young campers, who have no other opportunity of escaping summer idleness, swim, fish, hike and play ball, in short, do those things which appeal to healthy, active lads. Here they also learn the lesson that Chief Watts instils into all his boys namely, that "the cops are their best friends and that it pays to go straight."

Boys who lead clean, if lively lives, who are not unduly mischievous, who do not find particular delight in tormenting their elders will find that the police only move against boys when they have repeatedly broken the law, and then only to impress upon their minds that the course they are following is likely to get them into serious trouble. Even after boys run foul of the law, police are always ready to lend a helpful hand if they give any evidence of true repentance. The young and, in fact, all citizens should realize that the police are the enemies only of those who are the enemies of society, and are the protectors of all those who are endeavoring to go straight.

The secret of the success of the Napanee Police Club seems to be in keeping the boys occupied. When they are not engaged in play, they are given certain police duties to perform. Wearing police badges, they keep an eye on the town's traffic and report infractions of the traffic by-llaws.— St. Thomas Times-Journal.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

By James W. Barton, M.D.

When the Heart Beat Slows Down During Sleep, Goitre is not Likely Present

Now that so many readers know that one of the outstanding symptoms of goitre is rapid beating of the heart, there is an increasing number who have stopped worrying about heart disease but are wondering if they have an early goitre.

As a matter of fact, no one should wonder or worry about heart disease or goitre as both conditions can be readily detected by the family physician. The use of the electrocardiograph when heart disease is suspected, and of the metabolism (rate at which body processes work) test for suspected goitre, help the physician when he finds it necessary to get more complete information about the case.

This symptom of rapid beating of the heart is often the first clue the physician obtains in goitre, and yet now that this symptom is so well known, it might cause many individuals to worry unnecessarily. They count their pulse frequently during the day and perhaps the first thing in the morning and the last thing at night. The heart rate seems to be "always" fast.

Some reassuring information comes to us from Drs. G. E. Beilby and J. C. McClintock, Albany, in the New York State Journal of Medicine.

"One of the most helpful findings in learning whether or not goitre is present is tacchycardia (rapid heart beat). In doubtful cases, the pulse rate should be studied while the patient is in bed and resting over a period of several days. A persistently high pulse (one that is high during sleep) is very likely to show that goitre is present, while a heart rate that drops to normal after a few hours of rest in bed, and goes up rapidly after slight exertion, usually means that goitre is not present."

There are, of course, other signs and symptoms present in goitre—nervousness, trembling, indigestion, sleeplessness. However, this knowledge that absolute rest for hours (or days sometimes) will not slow down if goitre is not present should be worth much to all those who are in doubt about the cause of a rapid heart beat.

CHARLIE'S FLOWER

Jacobites may not altogether approve of the action of the party of London scientists who are attempting to discover the exact nature of the mysterious blue flower which has been growing in profusion on the remote Hebridean Island of Eriskay ever since Bonnie Prince Charlie landed there in 1745.

There are two traditional tales to account for the flower's presence. One says that it was sown personally by Prince Charlie to celebrate his arrival on Scottish soil. The other has it that the seeds from which the plant has sprung came ashore on pieces of driftwood from the French ship Doutelle and took root without assistance.

Whatever the source of origin, "Charlie's Flower" as it is known locally, is definitely a "foreigner" to Hebridean soil and has so far resolutely refused to root elsewhere in spite of careful transplanting. In fact, so attached is it to the Prince's landing-spot on Eriskay that ill-luck is traditionally believed to attend anyone who is foolish enough to remove a portion. —Manchester Guardian.

SINGER RETURNS

Winchelsea, a small town in Victoria's western district, is the home of Miss Marjorie Lawrence, who has won international recognition in soprano roles in grand opera.

When she returned after 11 years, 100 horsemen escorted her to the home of surviving relatives through cheering lanes of townspeople. She sang for them in the little wooden picture theatre. They thrilled with her in Brunnhilde's aria from the closing scene of the "Twilight of the Gods" and wept with her in "My Ain Folk."

On the following day she took her old place in the choir of the local church, sang some solos and after some sentimental pilgrimages, left to begin an Australian tour.—Australian Press Union.

THE IVORY CRAFTSMEN

Tucked away behind the Juma Masjid, the great mosque in Delhi City, there flourish the ivory carvers for whose work Delhi is famous. The visitor will find displayed pieces of ivory carving many of which have taken 10 to 15 years to complete. They range in price from a few rupees to as much as Rs. 10,000 for trinket boxes and stands on which the story of the Ramayana or the life of Krishna are illustrated. Recently, a suite of furniture, carved from ivory, has been completed after 25 years' hard labor. It is priced Rs. three lakhs (£22,500).

The art of ivory carving is a jealously-guarded secret, known only to a few families and handed down from father to son. In one workshop the same families have worked for the same family of owners since the business was started about 1630. The working day is restricted to four hours, as the intense concentration and the extreme care required impose a great strain both on the nervous system and on the eyesight of the workers. The tools used are simple and are usually manufactured by the workmen themselves.—India Press Union.

'BACKS TO WALL'

The famous "Backs to the Wall" army order of Earl Haig is to be in the British Museum where it rightfully belong. It was in the possession of the late Sir Philip Sassoon, who was General Haig's secretary during the Great War. Sir Philip secured the original order as a souvenir. When he died recently, he directed that the order be given to the British Museum.

The order, which was issued on April 11, 1918, ranks with the most historic of British military documents. It reads:

"Every position must be held to the last man. There must be no retirement. With our backs to the wall, and believing in the justice of our cause, each one of us must fight to the end. The safety of our homes and the freedom of mankind depend alike upon the onduct of each one of us at this critical moment."

Many a man in Windsor will recall that order vividly.—W. L. Clark in Windsor Star.

SAME OLD GAME

The trouble with this game is that it is too old and too obvious. Herr Hitler displays a striking lack of imagination and originality in repeating, move for move, almost day for day, the drama he played out last year. If he thinks he can score again by the same tactics, he shows a strange insensitiveness to the changed mood of the audience.

The significance of the return of Lord Halifax to his fishing, of the recess of the British Parliament, of the calmness of the French, is that Britain and France are not going to let themselves be stampeded a second time. Hitler is increasing the pressure, drumming up the crisis, but so far he is not tracking the nerves of his adversaries.

Having found the courage to contemplate Westminster in ruins and Notre Dame demolished, the British and the French seem to be ready to test out Hitler's real intentions and await his answer to the question whether Danzig is worth a war.—New YoYrk Times.

War Scare News Received With Calmness by Public

Repetition of Crisis News by Radio Helps to Dull Excitement

MANY RUMOURS

Outwardly calm, apparently resigned to the inevitable if it occurs, and with fears lately dulled by daily repitition of alarms, Belleville and district residents went about their daily tasks today with little visible sign of excitement over conditions in Eastern Europe.

The present crisis, though admittedly graver than that of last September has been received generally with greater calmness by the majority of residents who have come to accept the fast moving events in Germany, Italy and Poland as just further moves in a political war of conquest in long drawn out battles of nerve.

"If war comes, then we will just have to accept it, but war at this time seems very far away," it was admitted by some who scanned bulletin boards of the Daily Ontario Intelligencer, or hunched over radios until midnight in homes.

"You get a little tired hearing the same thing day after day; it will be a sort of relief when things do come to a head," stated others.

Along the main streets of the city radios tuned into certain stations have kept the majority informed of the latest moves abroad. From the time of store opening until closing time little knots of men and women hover while radio announcers blare forth in clipped accents news releases from abroad. The fact that many of the announcements contain little of the true picture of international events and at times are based wholly on unconfirmed reports and rumours has led to many garbled accounts being received and relayed through the city. Yesterday, according to one radio announcer Poland had fallen before the weight of German arms. Telephones to the editorial room of the Daily Ontario Intelligencer during the greater part of the day buzzed and rang with questions from the eager curious. "Is it true that Poland has been taken, and that some Polish residents have been killed?" was the inevitable question.

"We have received no account of hostilities," was the general answer given by the editorial room.

No Activity in Military Quarters

There has been no unusual activity in other quarters; militia circles of the city indicate no flurry of excitement. Except for the fact two local youths yesterday applied for admission to any war time unit which might be mobilized in Belleville, there has been little taik of returned men or others volunteering their services for any call abroad, it was stated by one Argyll Infantry official this morning. As yet no call has been reported received by any of the reservists of the city to present themselves at any specified location in the Dominion.

"We haven't heard a word from Ottawa," it was stated by one of their number.

Officers of the Impeial Army who might be on leave in Canada, however, are being recalled by the British War Ministry. Yesterday Lt. Col. H. W. C. Stethem of the Royal Signals, son of Lt. Col. H. Stethem of Kingston who has been home on leave from England for four weeks received a cable from the War Ministry instructing him to rejoin his unit at once. Lt. Stethem will sail today for England on the Duchess of Athol.

"Apparently the general public is not expecting any immediate outbreak of war," it was reported by one grocery supply firm of the city this morning. There has been no indication of residents stocking up on needed articles of food and purchases in this line are about normal, it was said. This condition is believed general throughout the Province, according to the firm.

Firmly confident that prices for grain will rise with the announcement of war, many farmers of the district are reportedly holding what stocks they can for speculative purposes. t is believeld that in the event of hostilities, prices for this commodity will be "pegged" in the Old Country but what price will be set is a matter of speculation.

TOWN MANAGER

Haileybury has appointed a town manager. If a business concern announced the appointment of a manager, it would be to replace a man who had held this position, but the Haileybury appointment is important because it is a new departure in municipal administration in municipal administration in Northern Ontario. City managership control is quite common in the United States, but few Canadian towns or cities have adopted the plan.—Timmins Press.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Five Came Back"

What is hailed as one of the most unusual stories ever told on the screen and a motion picture that is already spoken of as one of the year's 10 best, is "Five Came Back" which will be presented next at the McCarthy Theatre. Featuring an all star cast including Chester Morris, Lucille Ball, Wendy Barrie, John Carradine, C. Aubrey Smith, Allen Jenkins, Joseph Calleia, Patric Knowles and Elizabeth Risdon the absorbing plot deals with the different experiences amongst a group of aeroplane passengers forced down in the Brazilian jungle during a tropical storm, and fighting a desperate race against time and death as they try to repair the plane and fly out again.

Two romances and a vivid tale of heroism and sacrifice are woven together to make this one of the most memorable films of recent years and it is said that the climax scenes are the greatest ever to be presented on the screen. The first football story of the new season is presented as a companion feature attraction with "Five Came Back" in which a hand-picked cast of players make the story of "Swing That Cheer" alive with excitement, romance and gay comedy-drama. The picture is a real modern story of college life and the players including Tom Brown, Robert Wilcox, comedian of the screen and radio Andy Devine, Constance Moore and Ernest Truex, are as fine an assemblage of the typical type of youthful personalities that ever came out on a college campus grounds either for football-action or love-making in the moonlight, that you will ever find. An all star comedy entitled "Marriage-Go-Round" will also be presented next at the McCarthy Theatre with the above feature "Five Came Back" and "Swing That Cheer."

"Too Many Wives"
"The Renegade Ranger"

Anne Shirley, John Morley and Gene Lockhart in a sweet sixteen laugh loaded romance entitled "Too Many Wives" in addition to George O'Brien, Rita Hayworth, Tim Holt and Ray Whitley in an adventure story of the Texas rangers entitled "The Renegade Ranger" truly two swell feature hits are now playing at the McCarthy Theatre. last times.

AT THE BELLE

"Goodbye, Mr. Chips"

"Goodbye, Mr. Chips", long awaited picturization of James Hilton's best-selling novel, glorifying the school teachers of the world, is the attraction now at the Belle Theatre after three weeks at the Uptown Theatre, Toronto. Based on one of the most widely read novels of modern times, the picture, filmed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in England, brings to the screen in the title role Robert Donat, who scored one of the outstanding hits of years in "The Citadel" and Greer Garson, beautiful new British actress, recently signed by the studio. Sam Wood, who filmed "Navy Blue and Gold" and "Lord Jeff", directed.

The story shows, through the eyes of a schoolmaster, the pageant of adolescence in a great school. Mr. Chipping, affectionately known as "Chips" becomes a teacher at an English public school as a young man and remains there the rest of his life. He meets and marries a beautiful girl whose death casts an aura of great kindness toward his fellowmen about him. He becomes a tradition. Great men's destinies are shaped by him. Donat plays various ages from the twenties to past eighty in the dramatic story.

Football and cricket in noted English schools provide action. The rescue of the heroine on Tyrolese mountain top, a great ball in Vienna and a sensational air raid during the World War are among the dramatic highlights. A complete replica of an English school, one of the largest sets ever constructed outside of America, was built at the Denham studios for the production.

Two thousand English schoolboys appear in the picture, headed by Terry Kilburn, boy discovery of "Lord Jeff" and "A Christmas Carol". Victor Saville, famous British director-producer, was at the production helm.

"Seal Skinners", a highly entertaining comicolor cartoon and the popular Belle Newsreel will be exhibited on the same program.

PEACE - LOVING

Main highways in France were clogged with motor traffic mainly heading toward channel ports. Many cars going in the opposite direction bore German and Italian licence plates. Their drivers were obviously just as anxious to get under the protection of their own flags. Several waved a friendly greeting as they whizzed past.

At Calais hotels were packed to the roof. No accommodation could be obtained at any price. Similar reports came from other leading channel ports.

At dawn yesterday cars began to queue up at the dockside awaiting the arrival of channel steamships. Special boats were commissioned but several hundred vehicles were still awaiting clearance when the boat carrying us nosed out into the channel.

Carry Packs on Back

A motley throng crowded the decks. Many were still in hiking attire carrying packs on their backs. Dust-begrimed clothing told the story of long weary journeys. It was more like a refugee trek than anything but smiles bespoke the unanimous feeling of joy and relief of the passengers in being aboard a British boat with "Blighty" just below the horizon.

There was an understandable justification for this release of feelings amid sober anxiety. For all had become steeped in extreme pessimism and the belief was widespread that war may come this week-end.

Fuehrer Hitler's ears must have been ringing steadily, judging by the bitter things said about him aboard ship.

"If he wants war why let him have it. We've done everything possible to keep peace but this can't go on forever," a returning business man declared. That fairly well summed up the majority attitude.

No More Meddling

The government official I interviewed in Berlin said: "We have had just about enough meddling on the part of Britain. It is time she kept her nose out of Germany's affairs and tried to look after her own. However, if Britain wants a showdown of arms we are quite ready to give it to her."

A 23-year-old German youth, when asked why Hitler wasn't willing to submit Germany's so-called grievances to settlement by conciliation replied:

"We don't inquire into such matters. We believe that whatever our Fuehrer does is right and for the welfare of our fatherlands if he commands us to fight we will do so."

Surprised at War

That is the spirit abroad among the younger generation. As we passed through Germany the hostility toward Britain became increasingly manifest particularly among officials.

But few appeared aware of the imminent danger of war. They have been told by their controlled press that the Fuehrer will regain Danzig and the Polish Corridor without bloodshed and they believe it without the shadow of a doubt.

If war engulfs them the Germans will be the most urprised people in the world.

CANADIAN GOV'T

Regarding a report that seven Atlas biplanes were en route from Trenton, Ont., to Portsmouth, N.S., the Minister said: "This is a purely routine flight of a type that has been made on several occasions."

Brief Meeting Called.

Cabinet ministers hold themselves close to their offices in case the cabinet should be called into another extraordinary session. A brief meteing was called yesterday by Prime Minister Mackenzie King. No announcement was made at its conclusion. The prime minister returned to his summer home at nearby Kingsmere in the Gatineau Hills of Quebec, but remained in constant communication with his secretaries and External Affairs Department aides here.

Continued persence here of George McIvor, chairman of the Wheat Board, and Dr. T. W. Grindley, the board secretary, who arived from their offices in Winnipeg in the middle of the week, led to the belief the government might contemplate some move to control fluctuations in the wheat market should war break out.

Price Heave Erratically.

Wheat prices heaved erratically yesterday with each new bulletin from Europe, raising the question here as to whether the government might not take over the market as was done in the last war. A government monopoly of the market would have a stabilizing effect, wheat was slow to react in the Great War, but in 1917 the government set up a board of grain supervisors to take possession of wheat, fix prices, and resell the grain to millers and to overseas buyers representing the allied governments.

The government has already announced that adequate provision for emergency has been made but details of such plans have not been revealed. It was understood machinery for mobilization of the militia of some 50,000 men is in readiness to swell the ranks of the permanent force.

In addition, the Canadian Legion has offered services of 60,000 war veterans for guard duty to prevent sabotage of vital industry and transportation and communication facilities.

Statement Issued

The complete statement on the militia follows:

"1. Pursuant to a decision made at meeting of the cabinet, certain portions of the Canadian militia are being called out for duty on a voluntary basis.

"2. Immediately after the cabinet meeting instructions were issued that officers comanding the militia units affected should be notified through the several military district headquarters.

"3. It is considered that, in the light of the present situation there are certain military duties for which the strength of the permanent force of Canada is insufficient and hence, it has been decided to place portions of the non-permanent active militia on service. The duties to be carried out include the manning of coastal defences and the guarding of certain vulnerable points.

"4. The present action is being taken under the authority of section 63 of the Militia Act which permits the Governor-in-Council to authorize the Minister of National Defence to place the militia or portions of it on service for any military duty other than drill or training.

Differs From Section 64

"5. The procedure under section 63 differs from that under the well known section 64 which deals with calling out the militia for active service. Under section 64 the call is compulsory on all members of the militia units named in the Order-in-Council invoking the Act. Further, if section 64 is invoked it is mandatory upon the government to summon parliament immediately, but this is not the case when section 63 is invoked.

"6. It is considered that the voluntary response to the call now being made on the militia will be adequate for the immediate purpose and the Minister's instructions are definite that the response shall be entirely voluntary and that no officer or man shall be under compulsory to report.

"7. Those who go on service in response to this call, will receive the pay and allowances of their rank.

New Type of Gun.

Toronto, Aug. 26 (CP)—The Ontario government will order 'some 200 of the latest type of police service shotguns" for guards who will be placed around provincial public utility plants in the case of war, the Globe and Mail says today.

"The government is taking the present situation very seriously and is ready, it is reported, to double its safeguards—both in guards and policy—if reports now being prepared by police investigator's warrant such action," the paper says.

"Premier Hepburn yeterday conferred at Queen's Park with Cecil L. Snyder, K.C., Chief Counsel for the Province, and Inspector E. D. L. Hammond of the Criminal Investigation Branch of the Provincial Police. These officials will have much to do with any sabotage situation that might develop in Ontario.

"Inspector Hammond has had charge of the recruiting or enlistment of ex-service men in this particular connection. Mr. Snyder will likely be elevated to the post of Deputy Attorney-General in September and in that capacity would, of necessity, be closely associated with possible prosecutions arising out of police activities."

"THERE'S NO SECRET ABOUT WHY IT'S BETTER!"
says Mr. Picobac

● "They tell me that Canadian Burley is getting better every year", said Les, adjusting the chair.

"There's no secret about that", declared Mr. Picobac. "It is better. And there's no secret about why it's better. They're producing finer Burley leaf and the pick of this tobacco, matured in the wood to mellow perfection, goes into Picobac. Improved seed . . . improved cultivation . . . improved handling—progress all along the line. There's no secret about it. Picobac's the pick of Canada's Burley crop—that's all. The first pipeful tells the story. You wouldn't want better proof. It was always a mild . . . cool . . . sweet smoke and it's getting more so all the time."

"It DOES taste good in a pipe!"

Last of 'Big River' Packets

The Golden Eagle is the last Mississippi packet with the patina of the old steamboats on her. She looks like the steamboats in the old prints. Originally the William Garig of New Orleans, she was built in 1904 for the cotton trade of the Lower Mississippi at the famous Howard Shipyards and Dock Company at Jeffersonville, Ind., builders of the celebrated luxury packet J. M. White. She is 175 feet long, 35 feet beam, and draws from 4½ to 5 feet of water. She can accommodate some ninety cabin passengers.

She is built on the old lines. She is flat-bottomed, sits lightly on the water, and at a landing her high stacks loom up like church spires. A stern-wheeler, she has no paddle-boxes decorated with brightly painted scenes of the Mississippi Valley. But she is twin-stacked, bull-railed, and her pilot-house dome is scroll-saw-embellished and crowned with a miniature minaret. Strung between her stacks she proudly flaunts a shining bit of river heraldry, the gilded ball which has for decades been the emblem of the Eagle Packet Company. Her engines are older than her hull and cargo. Certainly they have driven one, if not more than one, packet before her. For packets may go and packets may come, but their engines go on for ever.

She is the last packet on the inland waters to carry the old double stages, or gangplanks, of the cotton boats. In the magnificent new concrete locks of the Upper Mississippi, public works which in the open country have a shining wonder-of-the-world-like look, these stages are something of a nuisance. Before the Golden Eagle enters each lock, they must be swung up and in, and swung down and out, after the boat has locked through. Fifty times on the St. Louis-to-St. Paul-and-return trip the rumbling capstan raised and tossed and lowered these boat antennae. But the Leyhes, Captain Buck and Henry, who own and operate the Golden Eagle are the third generation of Mississippi rivermen. And, in the language of the west, they favor these double stages, and no one but the deckhands is sorry that they do. Other relics of the days of wooden ships and iron men are the live oak bitts deeply cut with the rope burns of decades of mooring. And aft, on the starboard side, there survives one Osage orange cavel.

Those who ride these boats get very attached to them. In the valleys in which they whistle and land and send their breast waves to the shore, they become an institution. Donald T. Wright, editor of the Waterways Journal, the trade paper of the river, told me he wept when the Kate Adams, the last of the great side-wheelers of the Mississippi, burned in 1927. "And I don't care who knows it," added Captain Wright.

Our progress up the river was a triumph. At every bridge, lock, and town from St. Louis to St. Paul crowds gathered to see the last packet on the Mississippi, and the passengers eating on the boiler deck. The crews of passing tows lined their starboard rails to watch us go by. The engine crews of trains waved their arms and blew their whistles. Where the road paralleled the river, automobiles followed us in streams. Motorboats put out from town yacht clubs to meet and escort us past their waterfronts. At every landing reporters and photographers climbed aboard to interview and to photograph officers and passengers. The upper valley was mighty glad to see us. Before the advent of telegraph and train the towns of the upper valley offered a season's free wharfage to the first boat which bored through the ice to bring them supplies, papers, and mail. Something of that old spring excitement and warmth gleamed in the eyes which welcomed the Golden Eagle.

West of the Alleghenies every native American of the older stocks loves a steamboat. Instinctively he runs to see one, as he runs to watch a passing band or circus. It is a large part of his imaginative heritage. It bore his ancestors and their possessions to the lands they now occupy. It carried and pushed the lumber which built the house in which he was born. It, and the way of life it created, are part of his folk-ways.

As I watched small boys drink in the sight of the Golden Eagle at lock and landing (how they wished they were on her!) I realized that she was doing much more than making a trip, purveying pleasure to her passengers, rediscovering the grandeur of the Upper Mississippi. Her trip was making memories for thousands of youngsters. Half a century hence they would remember and tell other eager kids how, in 1939, they once actually saw the Golden Eagle locking through Fountain City or landing at Davenport.—Horace Reynolds in Christian Science Monitor.

Tomotoes Scarce

Most of the canning factories are operating with tomatoes but so far there has not been enough tomatoes to enable them to operate steadily. There is a demand for tomatoes and it is stated that many who had not contracted for their crops are in a better position than those who did as they are being offered 40 cents a bushel, where those who contracted receive only 30 cents a bushel. The crop is not as good this year and there is a great deal less acreage this year. This came as a result of the poor market last season which made canners believe that there would not be a demand for canned products this year but this has proved otherwise and some factories are pressed to fill their orders.

Keep Dining Room Contented

By ALICE LYNN BARRY

CULINARY AIDS help keep the kitchen happy and the dining room contented. First news is of waffles, with the reminder that waffles should not occur at breakfast only. Cheese 'em, make them lighter than a milkwood fluff with the right kind of leavener, then serve them as the tasty base for things like creamed fish or vegetables.

Cheese waffles are made with two cups flour ,two teaspoons calcium phosphate baking powder, one-half teaspoon salt, one cup grated mild cheese, two eggs, one and one-quarter cups milk and four tablespoons melted butter. Sift flour; measure; sift again with baking powder and salt. Add cheese and mix thoroughly. Beat egg yolks slightly, add to milk and dump into flour mixture .Stir well until free from lumps. Add butter. Beat egg whites until stiff but not dry; fold into batter. Bake three to four minutes on hot waffle iron, and serve hot topped with creamed fish or creamed vegetabels. Makes six waffles.

This Custard Not Insipid

There are custards and custards. some of them dull, insipid and tasteless. But none of these dreadful qualities can possibly be attributed to a custard made with grapefruit. For this custard use two and one-half cups grapefruit sections; four tablespoons flour, one and one-half cups sugar, one-quarter teaspoon salt, one and one-half cups milk, two eggs and one-quarter teaspoon vanilla. Drain grapefruit sections; break into small pieces. Mix together flour, one cup sugar and salt in top of double boiler. Add four tablespoons milk; add egg yolks, and beat well. Add remaining milk. Cook in double boiler about twenty minutes, stirring occasionally. Remove from fire; beat until smooth. Add grapefruit sections and pour into custard cups. Beat egg whites; beat in remaining one-quarter cup sugar; add vanilla. Cover tops of custards with this meringue. Bake in moderate over at 325 degrees F. about twenty minutes or until delicately browned. Cool. Serves six.

Autumn Harmony

By ALICE ALDEN

It's not too early to look at Tweeds, despite the August dogdays. When that first fall crispness thins the air, tweeds will turn you out at your very best, in town or in the country.

You'll be delighted to find much co-operation among top flight designers of hats, bags, shoes and gloves, as to color this tweed season. No more trudging to match accessories they have all been dyed to match before they arrive in the shops. The fall suit ensemble in this photograph includes a manhatter felt with leather band, washable doeskin gloves, calfskin shoes and handbag — all exact matches, perfect harmony for the suit. Color affiliations are time-saving connections to have.

New Silhouette

By ALICE ALDEN

GETTING bustle conscious? Daytime dresses, mostly black, are outbustling their designer's fondest hopes, right now. This two-piece black faille bustle dress is a typical success. The bustle touch is merely a flat, soft bowknot at the centre back waistline—there's a glimpse of it to be seen in the mirror behind the model. That hat worn with this frock whips up a good silhouette, for it is a forward-pushed postilion model, with a silk fringe valance covering the back hair. The shoes are swell-bright red kidskin with brave brass eyelets for the high-riding oxford lacings. The bag is red, too, and the very chic white doeskin gloves are washable.

How to Win Back Her Husband's Love?

Daer Miss Fairfax

I am married to a man who is ten years older than I am, and I'm 25 now. We've been married five years, during which time my husband had been very kind to me. However in the last year or so he has become indifferent, and seems to be drifting farther away every day. What would you advise me to do?

When I ask him to take me to a dance, or a party at some friends' home, or when I ask him to go out at all, he'll just say —"You go if you want to, I prefer to stay at home". Do you think it would be all right for me to go places with friends who are also friends of my husband, or should I continue to stay around home as I have been?

What can I do to bring back that love which my husband first had for me? He doesn't go out with others—of that I'm sure. Would you advise me to go out and try to enjoy myself alone?

Bess,

Do you know of anything that change in your husband's feelings could have brought about this toward you? Perhaps he's jealous of someone and only pretends indifference. Are you extravagant, or does he imagine you are. What about children If you haven't any, is it that he's disappointed because he hasn't any? Your letter does not tell me enough.

As you love your husband and desire to win him over, I should not go out with the friends you speak of until you've had a clear understanding with him about doing so. Why not ask him what's the matter? Sometimes this clears up a great deal of unhappiness. You have my deepest sympathy.

Two Young Men Attentive

Dear Miss Fairfax

I'm a girl of 18 years, and have quite a problem. There are two young men who call on me, but it seems as if they both come at the same time. One is 23, and I'm really fond of him. The other is 21 and while I like him also, the 23-year old is my favorite.

I don't want to hurt the second young man's feelings, so I'm asking if you can please give me some advice as to how I should go about letting No 2 know that I would like to be alone with No. 1 occasionally.

M.

The only suggestion I can make is that you write a note to No. 2 telling him that you will be busy the next Sunday and cannot see him. Or you might agre to see him one Sunday, and then you will have No. 2 the Sunday after. However, you've got to take the risk of his discovering that you are receiving the other young man.

Broke Engagement, Now Wants a Reunion

Dear Miss Fairfax

I'm 24 years old and for almost a year was engaged to a lovely girl of 20. I used to think we were very much in love, but family arguments and other things got on my nerves so much that before I realized it, one day, I demanded the return of my engagement ring, saying that I was through. Of course, I regretted my action and wanted to make up the same day, but the entire family and the girl turned against me.

That happened five months ago, and when she sees me, she ignores me and won't even speak. How can a girl so completely forget a man to whom she has been engaged for nearly a year? What would be your answer to this problem?

Al

Of course, you realize that you return of the ring—that's usually left acted badly when you demanded the to the lady. But as it seems to have been the result of bad temper rather than anything worse, why don't you write her and say so, instead of dodging around and trying to make her speak to you on the street.

It looks to me, though, as if this girl is through with you, so if I were in your place I'd look around for another girl. That's the only remedy for forgetfulness.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

The Question on How to Address In-Laws

A bride addresses all of her husband's aunts and uncles and cousins, usually his grandparents too, just as he addresses them, and he does the same when he addresses hers.

But the question of the name by which a bride addresses her parents-in-law is not so simple. The use of Mr .and Mrs. is too formal. Very often this question is solved by the use of the pleasant, old-fashioned "Mother Clark" and "Father Clark". If the bride's parents are not living (or even sometimes if they are), she often calls the groom's parents "Mother" and "Father".

Sometimes a man who calls his father "Father', calls his father-in-law "Dad". And very often the nicknames that some child in the family has for "Grandmother" and "Grandfather"—usually an appealing childish effort to pronounce these not-too-easy-words —is affectionately adopted.

Ushering at a Wedding

Dear Mrs. Beeckman

I am confused about what really is the correct thing for the ushers to do after the recessional, and I don't know how to instruct them as to my wedding. I have been to weddings where the ushers brought the mothers and sisters and other members of the immediate families down the aisle to the vestible of the church; to other weddings where the ushers just let one pew of guests leave at a time, and to other weddings where the ushers didn't escort any guests from their seats. Will you please give me definite information as to what is correct?

Gloria

As soon as the recessional is over, all the guests in the church should take their seats and wait . . . patiently! . . . . until the ushers have escorted to the door of the church all the ladies who are in the first pews. The "escorting" should be done with dignity and formality, and there is a definite order of precedence: the bride's mother first; then the grooms' mother; then the other ladies who have been seated in the first pews on either side of the aisle; then those in the second and third pews, until all members of the immediate families have been escorted down the aisle by the ushers.

And, until all members of the immediate families have left the church, it is a breach of etiquette for other guests to leave their seats.

Informal Second Wedding

Dear Mrs. Beeckman

My mother is going to be married for the second time this Fall. She plans to be married informally, in the evening, in church, and with just a few friends present. Afterward there will be a reception for about a hundred guests.

1—She would like to know what she and he husband-to-be should wear.

2—I am twenty-one years of age. Would it be all right for me to be one of the witnesses?

3—What should I wear?

B.

1—Appropriate for your mother to wear to her wedding and to the reception afteward would be an ensemble, long dress and short jacket or bolero (if a bolero is becoming to her type of figure). This ensemble might be of lace of a shade becoming to her, or of chiffon, lightweight crepe, or a combination of lace and chiffon. With this she could wear a small "dinner hat" of the same shade as the dress or a harmonizing shade. And this type of hat comes in so many effective designs these days that she won't have any trouble ,I'm sure, finding a lovely and becoming one.

ojpjbrwy AtefA.tAr;A s'jrAQ r,

With your mother wearing this type of costume, not formal, her bridegroom would wear his dinner jacket.

2—I am sure that you could be a witness, but perhaps you'd best consult with the minister who is to perform the ceremony.

3—You too might appropriately wear a dinner dress ensemble of your favorite shade.

Courtesy Tip

When a man is walking with two women, he should not walk between them. He should walk on the side of the pavement nearest the curb.

The Stars Say

For Sunday, August 27

SUNDAY'S horoscope holds auguries of a rather routine state of affairs, with little of major importance unless it be a contact with a superior or person of rank and station who may prove to be a helpful influence in a needful moment. Work, study and sabbath contemplations are favored.

Those whose birthday it is are due to figure in a year of routine events, with industry, serious application and probably fortitude in untoward circumstances called for. However, one in position and prestige may be a generous and understanding friend in a trying moment.

A child born on this day may be deep, studious, industrious and faithful, as well as benevolent, idealistic and aspirational. These traits should attract friendship in high places.

For Monday, August 28

MONDAY'S astrological forecast is a rather disheartening one, although there will be much activity. There may be a sudden and trying upheaval, in which conflicting circumstances call for discretion and wise decisions. The menace, however, is passing and in the end the denouement is a happy one.

Those whose birthday it is may be confronted by an unexpected or disintegrating set of circumstances, depressing at first but holding benefits dependent on wise decisions and clever grasp of the devastating visitation. Be alert to duplicity and cautious with tongue and pen.

A child born on this day may be alert, energetic and have original ideas, but may be restless, erratic and difficult to understand. It may have a serious and shy but gracious phase of character.

Exercises for Short Girls

By HELEN FOLLETT

WAILS COME now and then from pint-size girls who would be taller. Let them console themselves by thinking of Helen Hayes, who belongs with the shorties. Also, they can wear cute clothes, while the tall ones have to mind their dress manners, cultivate a certain dignity.

Bones Not Changeable

Nothing can be done to change the bony framework of the body, as even the dumbest girl must know. Youngsters of fifteen who fear that they will be only tabloids can assist growth by drinking milk, which contains calcium increasing the meat rations. Vigorous exercise out of doors is helpful, if health is normal. Whatever provides nourishment and stimulates the blood stream builds bone and muscles.

BONITA GRANVILLE . . . . . by normal diet and directed exercise maintains glowing health and a model figure

Now that children have medical examinations twice a year, growth and weight are watched and recorded. If development is not normal the physician may suspect the presence of some glandular disturbance. Treatment is given for these troubles; the patient has to have more sleep and sunshine. Child labor is responsible for stunted bodies among the poorer classes. Lack of fresh air and proper food are other causes.

Must Watch the Diet

The grown woman who is short of stature has special need of watching her diet so she will not gain flesh. If she stays slender she can wear youthful clothes until she reaches the grandmother period, even later than that. She has no reason to complain.

We all know women of middle age who "let themselves go". Might just as well find a little ladder and get up on the shelf. When a woman doesn't care how she looks, she doesn't care much about anything. Pride should inspire a woman to keep her figure trim if that isn't possible, to find a foundation garment that improves the silhouette. She should keep up with the trends in coiffures, not be content to tag along five years late.

Her complexion changes with the years, so she must change powder and rouge. Let her not forget that when she stops activities she begins to rust and mildew. Many a woman is miserable, makes herself a pest in the family circle, because she does not keep in step with the changing world.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Children Subject to Lice Because They're Not Snobs

And now we come to the subject of lice, which perhaps is ignored by a great many, but to parents of children it is often a source of worry because children, rich or poor are more apt to get these little parasites than adults.

The reason is that children are generally free from snobbery. In other words, a small child will readily associate with people he would not approve if he were older. The result is that children contract diseases which make their parents gasp with horror or hide their heads in shame.

One of the commonest such maladies of this sort is lice. And lice are divided into two classifications—those that inhabit the head, and those which devote their attention to the body of the vicim.

Head lice are very common in children, and these little animals are extremely ugly when you examine them through a magnifying glass. They have two large jaws and a sucking organ. The females, which seem to be more common than the males, lay their eggs in a sticky envelope which they attach to the base of a hair.

Head lice give the victim a very unpleasant bite, and I have seen children who scratched so vigorously that they tore their scalps and had heads full of pus because the scratch marks got infected. In fact I have often been puzzled, when called to see a very young child, as to whether it was eczema or not that was causing the trouble, for the scratching and tearing of the fingernails had pretty well hidden the fact that lice were the cause of it all.

In fact after a few experiences with lice in my early days of practice, I got into the habit of carrying a large magnifying glass with me in my satchel. It came in particularly handy when I was visiting schools, as I did frequently by reason of the fact that I was health officer.

There are many treatments for head lice. The best known of them is probably paraffin, applied to the head once a day and then combed out with a fine comb. However I think a more effective method is a larkspur solution which is rubbed into the scalp after the daily bath.

To make sure that this lotion has spread well through the hair, comb it with a fine comb after each application. This also serves to remove the dead lice. A few treatments with this lotion and no more head lice will be found. But there are still the eggs in the hair, which must be destroyed or they will hatch and reinfect the head.

As I have mentioned, these eggs are attached to the base of the hairs by sticky envelopes. A simple application of vinegar will destroy these envelopes, the acid in the vinegar dissolving the sticky cover. When this envelope has been disposed of, the eggs readily come out of the hair when it is combed.

Head lice are becoming a thing of the past. At least I should say they aren't nearly as common as they used to be. Years ago, every pupil in small rural schools would be infected some time or another. I think shorter haircuts and much great cleanliness is the cause of this improvement.

"The GLASS SLIPPER"

by MIGNON G. EBERHART

Anne Shirley, John Morley and Barbara Pepper in a scene from the comedy hit "Too Many Wives," companion feature to "The Renegade Ranger,"now at the McCarthy Theatre.

"Because you've given me orders for years?. Because you—"

"Never mind why. But understand that I mean it...... Yes, Gross?"

The butler opened the door wider and entered:

"Lunch is served, madam."

It was, as somehow circumstances so often managed to be, to Brule's advantage to be interrupted just at tht point. There was nothing she could say or do; she was obliged to bottle up her fury, to control it and the things she wnted to say, to acknowledge the butler's words, to go to the dining room, to face Alicia with rage and something very like hatred in her heart. Rue, who had never hated anybody before and didn't know the sears and scars that hatred can leave. For an instant flight appealed to her; she could go upstairs, plead—oh, plead anything—refuse to sit at the table along with the others—with an unbidden ghastly presence hovering there, too, and that was murder.

Brule, watching her, said with infuriating amiability: "Ready, my dear? If you don't feel like having lunch Alicia can take your place."

"Thank you, I feel perfectly well" she said icily and preceded Brule along the hall. She was unfolding her napkin when it occurred to her, that Brule had bested her again; that there had been a knowledgeable gleam in his eyes that foretold Rue's instant decision.

The first meal was none too pleasant; Alicia and Brule talked, for Steven was silent, eating absently as if unconscious of what he did, and Madge was sullen, staring at Rue only to lower her thick eye-lashes instantly if Rue returned her look. But Brule talked without hesitancy of the police inquiry, of the inquest next day, and of what line Guy would probably advise them to take. Alicia addressed her remarks altogether to Brule, Madge and Steven, pointedly and markedly ignoring Rue with the cool precision of one who has learned how to snub along with other more felicitous accomplishments.

There was never with Alicia any sense of guest and hostess relation; Rue was always quite subtly but definitely placed in the position of interloper, or intruder. So far, that is, as Alicia was able, with only Madge's sympathy and backing, to indicate such a position.

Pride is a hard taskmaster. But it was pride alone that kept Rue, more poised and certain of herself outwardly than she knew, in her rightful place that day at the table. Signalling to Gross and the waitress, giving low orders, replying now and then to Brule. Replies which Alicia apparently never heard. It was a relief when Guy came in, looking as always shiny and scrubbed and pink.

They went into the library for coffee. It was from the first word curiously like a council of state, except that it was so brief. For it lasted only half an hour or so, and the burden of Guy's warnings was simply silence.

Brule said, "You were going to talk about alibis, Guy. You said if we all had alibis it would simplify things."

"Well, naturally," said Guy cheerily. "And I think you have. According to your statements at any rate, it seemed to me as I listened last night that you would not be hard put to find alibis. Let me see." He looked at them consideringly. Steven was the nearest, standing at arm's length from Guy before the hearth, drinking his coffee meditatively, and he began with Steven.

"You, now," he said, "were in your studio all day, weren't you,"

Steven swallowed and said, "Yes. Working."

"At the piano, I suppose?"

"Yes. Mostly. I transcribed some notes early in the morning."

"But in the afternoon you were constantly at the piano?"

"I think so. Yes."

"I heard him," said Rue abruptly. "He was playing when Julie came and when Gross brought the tea tray and when—when Alicia came into the room just after Julie—died. It was the same piece. I know it well."

"Exactly," said Guy in a congratulatory way. "There you are. A perfect alibi. How about you, Alicia?"

"You know mine," said Alicia smoothly. "I've already told you. I was at the Sidney'; I came directly here from there. Any of them — Mrs. Sidney or the maid who let me out the door—will back up my statement."

"You came directly here? That is, you didn't stop to shop or do any errands?"

Alicia's slender eyebrows went up in two black arches .

"Perhaps. I walked from Banks Street. I remember looking in a florist's window; oh yes, and I stopped at a little place near Shubert Street and ordered some handkerchiefs—rather, intended to order them, but the girl I always order from was out, so I didn't. I believe I stopped for a moment in a bookstore."

Guy was looking worried.

"Anybody see you who knew you?"

"Why, I—don't know. Does it matter?"

"Well, my dear Alicia, it's not an alibi, so far."

"I don't suppose it is. But after all, I'm not accused of murdering the girl."

"No one is accused yet," said Guy "Madge? Oh, you were in school."

Rue made a motion to speak and Guy saw and said quickly: "What is it, Rue?"

"There's some question of how Alicia managed to enter the house" said Rue, holding her fingers tight together on her lap. "Gross says he didn't know Alicia was in the house either."

Alicia's eyes were lambent. "Rue seems to have been consulting with the servants," she said. "However, if anyone wants to know how I got into the house—"

"I'm afraid we do want to know just that," said Guy.. "Or rather the police will ask it."

"Well, then," said Alicia, moving her small head contemptuously, "I simply walked in. I've had a key for a long time; Crystal gave it to me. I came into the house and realized Madge wasn't home yet and—waited. But it was only a moment or two before I heard Rue scream. I saw no one while I waited. I think the police will understand my—being as I've been for so long free to come and go in this house; I don't suppose they will take me to be an intruder." She looked at Brule, who said nothing.

Guy cleared his throat and said: "Oh dear me, no, Alicia. Certainly not. Now then, Brule, what's your alibi?"

Brule did not reply at once, but seemed intent on the ashes of his cigarette. Finally he said: "I don't have one, Guy. I was in my car at the time the murder seems to have occurred—driving to the hospital as a matter of fact, but I had stopped along the way to have a drink. I don't know exactly what the place was called but imagine I can find it—if necessary," he added with his eyes on Guy.

Guy wriggled very slightly.

"I'm afraid it will be necessary, Brule," he said. "You know how the police are when they get the bit in their teeth."

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

At two o'clock exactly police arrived again and began another round of questioning. They were still there at nine that night when Rue had that unexpected interview with Alicia.

Each witness, that day, had been questioned separately and at length Rue spent two long hours in the dining room, where a constant bombardment of questions was hurled at her. She was trembling when they let her go at last, unutterably tired, her very knees unsteady, her head and eyes aching. But they had not arrested her. They had only shown her the teacup with her own fingerprints on it; had only demanded over and over again what she knew of poisons, what Julie had known of Crystal's death, why Julie had come to see her. How long she had known Brule, and why they had married so soon after Crystal's death. What had Julie told her: had Julie told her anything they hadn't known about Crystal's death?

She didn't tell what Julie had said: didn't say to them: She told me there was something I knew of Crystal's death—but I don't know: Julie was wrong.

If only she knew what Julie had meant and could tell them!

The little man called Funk, who had first come to question her, was present too. He apparently was obsessed with only one thing and that was the green on what he called the "deceased" hands. He kept inquiring. Had the deceased worn gloves? No? Well, had there been any kind of stain—not necessarily green but any color on the hands of the deceased? No? Well, did Mrs. Hatterick know what caused the green on the deceased hands? No, Mrs. Hatterick didn't.

The thought of it was as always a little bizarre, a little frightening.

They had questioned no one else so long and so persistently. Yet in all that questioning they made only one or two perfunctory inquiries about the powder in the glass: Brule had told them, as he said he was going to do. Could they consider it a ruse to suggest her own innocence?

She encountered Alicia at the door of the small guest room, beside Brule's study.

Alicia was at the door of that study, her lovely hand on the doorknob as if she were just leaving it. She paused and looked at Rue.

Alicia's bright grey eyes flickered once down the length of the narrow hall and toward the empty stairway and back to Rue.

"Wait, Rue," she said. "Have they arrested you?"

"No," said Rue and opened the door to the guest room.

"Look here," said Alicia suddenly. "Why don't you confess and have done with it?"

I can't talk to her, thought Rue and entered her room. Alicia's white hand shot out, amazingly strong and wiry, and gripped her wrist.

"So you won't reply," she said. "Very well. But understand this. I'm staying here, you know. It's my right to stay here, it's my right," said Alicia slowly. "Because Brule really wanted me to marry him. He asked me to marry him. He only married you because he knew Crystal had been murdered. He knew that sooner or later the truth would come out. He thought if he married you it would divert any possible suspicion from me. Now" —she relinquished Rue's wrist and stood looking at her with bright, watchful triumph in her eyes—"so now do you understand just what your place is here? Just how much you can expect in the way of protection from Brule?"

The really dreadful thing about it was that Rue knew Alicia's statement to have elements of truth.

It coincided in the most perfect way with what she knew and with what Andy had told her. It dovetailed completely with her own understanding with Brule with the whole circumstance of their marriage. It fitted perfectly, even Brule's own admission about Crystal's death.

After a moment she said deliberately:

"Why would you have been suspected—if you had been Brule's wife when Crystal's murder was discovered?"

Alicia blinked, opened her mouth, closed it, opened it again and said:

"I don't—Because there would be talk—"

"Do you mean that you knew when she died that it was murder? How did you know?"

Alicia had recovered: her eyes had a hard bright glaze.

"How could we fail to suspect it? You see now," repeated Alicia with cool brutality, "that you can't count on Brule's protection."

Rue said slowly: "Nevertheless I am Brule's wife." She closed the door.

It gave her the last word, and there was a small element of satisfaction in that.

Andy hadn't been right in his surmise that a quarrel with Alicia, regretted too late, had accounted for Brule's marriage to Rue. But in all probability that had been the answer Alicia or Brule himself had given Andy; if it had been a question of Crystal's murder, and Alicia and Brule both hoping to keep it a secret, taking so drastic a step to protect Alicia in case the truth came out, then they would have told Andy (if they had to tell him anything) some such story.

But why was it necessary to protect Alicia?

And why had they been so certain Crystal was murdered?

That night she locked the door.

Morning came slowly. Morning and the inquest.

It was, however, extraordinarily brief. Mainly it was a resume of the circumstances surrounding Julie's death. The most important witness seemed to be Lieutenant Angel, for at the end of his testimony he read a letter.

"Miss Garder's death immediately followed the opening of police inquiry into the death of another person about a year ago," he said.

"Whose death?" said the coroner, knowing full well.

"That of Mrs. Crystal Hatterick. The first wife of Doctor Hatterick, who is present."

"What brought about this inquiry?"

"A series of typewritten letters addressed to the police and to the district attorney."

"Do you have those letter?"

"Yes."

"Will you read one and show it to the jury?"

He unfolded a sheet of paper.

"This one," he said, "was addressed to the chief of police. It reads as follows: 'This is to call your attention to the death a year ago of Mrs. Brule Hatterick; the writer suggests police inquiry into the circumstances of her death.'"

He folded up the paper, handed it to a clerk who gave it to the jury.

Angel looked down his nose. "There were a number of other letters", he added thoughtfully. "Some openly stating that the woman was murdered. We have them all. The one I have read is typical."

"How many were there altogether?"

"About eleven or twelve altogether."

"Do you know who wrote the letters?"

"So far we have been unable to discover the writer."

"And you have undertaken police inquiry into the death of Mrs. Crystal Hatterick?"

"Yes."

"And the results were what?"

"After securing an order for exhumation an autopsy was performed which revealed the presence of a poisonous drug in lethal quantity."

"Your conclusion is that it was a violent death?"

"Yes. Certainly."

"You performed an autopsy also upon the body of Juliet Garder?"

"Yes."

"And the results in that case were what?"

"The presence of a poisonous drug in lethal quantity was also discovered."

"Has the laboratory completed its findings."

"Not yet; tests to determine the exact analysis of the specimens are in progress."

"But you have definitely determined that there was poison found in both bodies?"

"Yes."

"That is all."

The conclusion was foregone. There were a few questions designed to show that suicide was not a likely theory; this was readily accomplished by the coroner's emphasizing of the fact that Julie's death had almost immediately followed the opening of police inquiry into Crystal's death.

Rue was brought briefly to the stand in this connection.

"Mrs. Hatterick — before your marriage to Doctor Brule Hatterick you were a nurse?"

"Yes."

"You were one of the nurses who took care of the first Mrs. Hatterick during her illness?"

"Yes."

"Was there anything unusual about her death?"

"No. That is, it was unexpected."

"How was it unexpected?"

Rue, feeling Guy's blue, humid gaze, said it was because they had thought she was better.

"But there were no symptoms of anything but a natural death," she said firmly.

"I see. Is there any possibility, Mrs. Hatterick, that your close friend Juliet Garder, who also nursed Mrs. Crystal Hatterick, had any knowledge of her death that suggested it murder?"

Rue hesitated. "Will you repeat that, please?"

The coroner gave Guy a baleful glance and said:

"I'll put it another way. Did you talk to Miss Garder at any time about Mrs. Crystal Hatterick's death?"

"I—I suppose we did in a general way." ......

"Do you remember what you said?" ....

"Not the exact words; I'm sure we must have talked of it."

"Mrs. Hatterick, did you ever say it was murder?"

"No."

"Did you ever tell Miss Garder you thought it was murder?"

"No."

"Why did she come to see you the day she died?"

"I don't know."

"You didn't expect her?"

"No."

LEAVE CANCELLED FOR ALL FORCES

Order Applies Approximately to 9,000 Men in Canadian Forces

Ottawa, Aug. 25 (CP)—Leaves to all members of the Canadian permanent forces have been cancelled, Defence Minister Mackenzie announced today. Before this action was taken however, many officers and men who were on leave had returned of their own accord and others intending to go on leave had cancelled such arrangements.

The order cancelling leave applies to approximately 4,000 men of the permanent militia, 3,000 in the regular Air Force and 2,000 in the naval services.

Meantime the headquarters staff in Ottawa is working at high pressure to be in readiness should Canada be involved in war. Meetings and conferences were held throughout last night. The Minister was closetted with his senior officers during the entire forenoon.

Blonde Mae Murray, actress, is shown as she gave her deposition in her suit against Prince David Mdivani, in which she is asking for $12,000 per year for the support of herself and her 12-year-old son. Miss Murray claims that Prince David has one million dollars and has contributed nothing to the support of their son, Koran David, and has failed to set up a $3,000 trust fund as ordered by the court at the time of their divorce six years ago.

Adolf Hitler congratulates his foreign minister Joachim von Ribbentrop, at Berchtesgaden, following the latter's dramatic flight to Moscow and return, where he concluded the startling Russian-German non-aggression pact. Herman Goering, minister of aviation, is in the foreground.

"BABE" SIEBERT DROWNS DURING SWIM IN LAKE

Chasing Inner Tube Children Were Playing With When He Sank Near Shore

FINE DEFENCEMAN

Named on Canadian Press Poll Three Years in Succession

Zurich, Ont., 26 (CP)—Death came to Albert (Babe) Siebert at the start of a new cycle in the life of one of hockey's greatest and most unpredictable players.

The barging Babe, who made himself over from forward to defenceman and from bad-man to team leader, drowned last night in Lake Huron chasing one of his children's playthings. His age was 34.

Siebert was to have put in his first full season as coach of Montreal Canadiens in the National League next winter. He was looking forward to a job that meant continued security for an ailing wife and two daughters and a chance to carry to the bench the hockey knowledge that made him a magnificent ice general.

The Babe came to Zurich, where he grew up, to join a family reunion marking his father's birthday tomorrow. At St. Joseph, four miles west of here, he went swimming in Lake Huron with his daughters, Judy, 11, and Joan, 10.

Sank Near Shore

An inflated inner tube with which one of the children had been playing drifted away and Siebert went after it. As he headed for it, he called for help and sank 50 yards from shore. Clayton Hoffman, a former Galt baseball and hockey star, made an unsuccessful attempt, fully clothed, to get to Siebert's side.

Men paid tribute to the square-shouldered, hard hitting, stick-swinging, demanding opponent who usually came out best in a tussle along the boards. But they remembered him too as the inspirational leader of one of the game's miracle teams, the Canadiens of 1936-37, and as a devoted husband and father.

"He was not only a fine man from the point of view of hockey but he was a model father and a fine husband to his sick wife," said Frank Calder, President of the National League. "He was a model of self-sacrifice. He was not the kind of player who made money in the winter and spent it in the summer."

A Fine Husband

The same brusing Siebert, who relestlessly dealt out one of hockey's hardest bodychecks, carried his ailing wife each hockey night into the Forum at Montreal to a rink-side seat. After the game he carried her tenderly out to his car. Mrs. Siebert suffered paralysis several years ago.

He came from the amateur ranks of western Ontario, by way of Zurich, Exeter, Seaforth, Kitchener and Niagara Falls, to the old, gold-plated Montreal Maroons of 1925.

There, among a setting of stars Siebert quickly became a star forward. The late Eddie Gerard placed him on a forward line with Nels Stewart and Hooley Smith and the "Big S" line became one of the National League's highest-scoring units.

In 1926 the Maroons won hockey's first prize, the Stanley Cup. The only other time Siebert was with a world championship club was in 1933, when he played with New York Rangers in one of the off-seasons that came before the peak of his career.

Sold to Boston

He was with the Rangers a season and a half before Manager Lester Patrick tired of the high-spirited and off-penalized Babe and sold him to Art Ross at Boston. The far-seeing Ross converted him into a defenceman.

On the back line Siebert gained equilibrium he hit out at oncoming forwards with fury but he kept in check more often his temper. With Eddie Shore, his mate on the defence, he was chosen to The Canadian Press all-star N.H.L. team of 1935-36.

In the summer of 1936 Cecil Hart was restored to the management of the Canadiens. He got two players he wanted. Siebert and Howie Morenz—the dynamic centre, who had been tearing his heart out for two seasons after leaving the Canadiens.

Canadiens Transformed

Together Siebert and Morenz transformed the Habitants from a last-place club to the Flying Frenchmen of old. They stepped to the top of their division and even when Morenz suffered a broken leg they stuck there, fired by Siebert and carried along by the momentum Morenz had given them.

Morenz died in hospital late in the season of a heart attack. Heart-broken, the Canadiens carried on. No team ever was so bruised and battered as the Habitants when they reached the playoff, still in first place.

Detroit beat them in the first round of playoffs, but needed the limit of five games and 51 minutes of overtime in the last one to do it. Siebert, bandaged almost from head to foot, was the hero of the series. He was named most valuable player in the league.

The following year he suffered a back injury but still was good enough to gain a place on The Canadian Press all-star team for the third straight time.

Infielder Jimmy Brown of the St. Louis Cardinals is carried off the diamond at Ebbet's Field, Brooklyn, N.Y., after he collided with teammate Johnny Mize while reaching for a throw-in in the seventh inning of the game with the Brooklyn Dodgers. Brown, struck in the temple by Mize's shoulder, fell unconscious. It was a tragic sight for Mrs. Dare Robertson Brown, Jim's mother, who came from Jamesville, N.C., to see her first big league game. Brown was taken to Caledonia hospital for examination, as was Mize. Brown may be out for the rest of the season.

Yanks Defeat Browns Twice To Increase Lead in American League to Over Ten Games

Steve Sundra Hurls Eighth Victory Without a Defeat

GOMEZ WINS

Left-Handed Ace of the Yankees Allowed but Three Singles

By JUDSON BAILEY

All signs in the American Baseball League point to an early fall—for the so-called rivals of New York Yankees.

The method with which the world champions squelched the St. Louis Browns in a doubleheader, 11-0 and 8-2, yesterday must have convinced all doubters the McCarthymen would stage their same merciless finish in the American League again this season.

For a long time, Boston Red Sox have been conceded the only team in the league with a chance of displacing the Yankees, but Boston last its second straight to Chicago White Sox yesterday, 9-2, and as a result dropped to 10½ games behind the pace.

Steve Sundra, who four years ago was tossed into the trade which sent Monte Pearson to New York from Cleveland for Johnny Allen, pitched four-hit ball in gaining his eighth victory without defeat. He was backed by a 17-hit attack which included two home runs by Joe Gordon.

Lefty Gomez hurled a three-hitter in the nightcap and lost a shutout in the ninth inning by walking two men ahead of Hal Spindel's pinch double.

Home runs by Joe Vosmik and Jimmie Foxx kept the Red Sox in their game at Chicago until the eighth inning, when the White Sox suddenly staged a seven-run riot against three pitchers. John Knott and Clint Brown contrived to check Boston on five hits.

Good pitching marked the day's other games, too. Big Buck Newsom checked Washington Senators in four hits as Detroit pounded out a 5-2 triumph—the fifteenth of the season for Newsom.

Hary Eisenstat, control specialist of Cleveland Indians, shut out the Athletics, 6-0, with six hits.

YESTERDAY'S STARS

Steve Sundra, Joe Gordon and Lefty Gomez, Yankees—Sundra's 4-hit pitching and Gordon's feat of driving in five runs with two homers and a single beat Browns 11-0 in the first game, while Gomez scattered three safeties in winning nightcap.

Buck Newsom, Tigers—Held Senators to four hits in Tigers' 5-2 victory.

Harry Eisenstat, Indians — Shut out Athletics with careful six-hit pitching, giving no walks.

Eric McNair, White Sox—Had perfect day at bat with five singles to lead 15-hit assault on Red Sox.

FIGHTS LAST NIGHT

Hollywood, Calif. — Gunnar Barlund, 199, Finland, outpointed Junior Munsell, 182, Oklahoma City (10).

Reno, Nev.—Small Montana, 110, Mexico, knocked out Al Robinson, 109, Mexico (10).

Halifax, N.S.—Irish Mickey Makar, 146, Bayonne, N.J., stopped Mickey M'Mullen, 146, Glace Bay, N.S. (5).

Says Joe M'Carthy, "I'm so relaxed I don't give a hoot whether the Reds or Cardinals win the National League pennant. . . . Cincinnati or St. Louis, it's all the same to me." . . . The Reds kept five persons working all night for two nights returning more than $30,000 in world's series reservations.

CITY SOFTBALL TITLE TO OILERS

Johnnie Bawden Limits Point Anne to Four Hits and Team Wins 7-2

Paced by the four-hit pitching of Johnny Bawden, ace hurler of their squad, Shell "Oilers" won the city softball championship last night as they defeated Point Anne 7-2 to win their second straight consecutive victory and annex the Canadian Bank of Commerce trophy emblematic of the big town mushball title.

Bawden perhaps was never in better form. The hard-hitting flinger of the much fancied "Oilers" restricted the "cement men" sluggers to four hits, two of them coming in the second inning when Green and Loft connected for safeties, and one run scoring.

Hutchings' hit in the fourth paved the way for the Point's last tally.

The blustery bludgeons of Sero, Whalen and Moon lashed their team to victory with a brace of hits each. They were silent due to the fine flinging of Stan Luffman until the fifth, sixth and seventh when they pasted the pill for a total of nine hits.

Shell runners crossed the plate three times in the sixth, repeated in the seventh and put the game on ice in the eighth with another.

Sero, Whalen and Moon cuffed the ball for hits in the pinches while the homesters' hits were limited.

'AIRMEN' FORCE FOURTH GAME BY TYING LOCALS

Flyers Scored Two in Eighth to Knot Count at Four Tallies Each

GAME IS CALLED

Teams Will Play Fourth Game in Series This Afternoon

Darkness forced the Bay of Quinte final play-off between the Air Force and Belleville into a fourth game as the "Orfuns" and the "Flyers" battled to a 4-4 draw at the Exhibition Park last night in an eight-inning game that saw the airmen come from behind and knot the count under the cover of darkness before the pastime was terminated. The draw forced the two clubs into an extra play-off game that will be played in Belleville this afternoon.

The Flyers took an early game lead by virtue of an erorr and hit in the first frame with L'Heureaux cracking home the counter and they added a second run in the third on Leach's hit. Belleville ganged the apple for four hits and two runs in the fourth with Churchill getting a timely double. Little, Empson and Weeks rifled out hits to give Belleville the lead with two more runs in the fifth.

Kelleher coasted along until the eighth when he got into trouble following an error and Crawford's hit, Coach Bud Wilkins took over the pitching duties at this point and although touched for a double came back to strike out Leach and force a pop out for a final out as the game was terminated on account of darkness.

McQuaid, Weeks, Little and Churchill banged the ball for two hits each, while L'Heureaux was the only Flyer to garner more than a single base hit as he cuffed a double and single for the Flyers.

THREE STRAIGHT FOR NAPANEE NINE

Gibbards Win Bay of Quinte "A" Title With 5 to 4 Decision Over Picton

Walt Gerow's good Napanee nine won the Bay of Quinte League championship by virtue of a 5-4 victory over Picton in the Prince Edward County seat yesterday, taking the league honors in three straight games. Picton, however, have protested the legibility of player Walter Gerow Jr.

The protesting club contends that Gerow Jr., star shortstop of the Napanee team, is not eligible to play in this league under the residence rule. It is stated Gerow received a transfer to Northern Ontario last fall to play O.H.A. hockey and did not return to Napanee until after the O.B.A. residence date had closed. The executive will meet this week-end to decide the protest, which was lodged after the first game.

Picton defeated Napanee six straight in league games, but lost the three playoff games. Belleville and Trenton Air Force played in the league, but were reduced to intermediate "B", leaving Picton and Napanee alone in the "A" group.

Gerow's triple, following two errors and a walk, which filled the bases, gave Napanee three runs, and Gerow scored on a wild pitch to make it 4-0 in the first. They added one in the fifth when Jocko doubled to score McCutcheon. Picton scored four in the fourth on three singles and two errors. In the seventh, the locals had the bases loaded with none out, but failed to score.

Dainard for Picton, struck out four and Spratt six. Dainard issued the only walk. Both teams pulled double plays in the sixth.

Picton outhit Napanee 11 to 8, McQuaid getting three singles, Bur-Shannon and Abbott two each, Wright and Leavens one each, for Picton. For Napanee, Curry and McCutcheon had two singles, Gerow a triple, Spratt, Card and Jocko singles.

WINGS MOVE UP

Elwin Roe Sent Down from Cardinals a Great Help to Rochester

By The Canadian Press

With the International Baseball League race in the final stages, and Rochester hot on the heels of the pace-setting Jersey City Giants, the Red Wings have discovered starting pitcher who promises to be a big help in the stretch drive.

He is Elwin Roe, tall lean southpaw, who was sent down to Rochester at the start of the season by St. Louis Cardinals. Roe got his first starting assignment July 26. He showed enough stuff to warrant another chance, and came back four days later to blank Jersey City 1-0. Since then, "Preacher" has taken his regular turn on the mound, winning four times while losing once.

Last night, Roe chalked up his fifth triumph by hurling the Wings to an 8-1 victory over Montreal Royals. Elwin allowed only four well scattered blows until the ninth when the Royals bunched two hits to push across their only tally. They landed on Kemp Wicker, Montreal starter, for four successive hits and three runs before a man was retired, and garnered three more off Reg Grabowski, in the third.

The victory lifted Rochester to within two games of Jersey Giants, who were rained out.

In the only other International game last night, Toronto Maple Leafs nosed out Buffalo, 6-5. The win put Toronto in seventh place, three percentage points ahead of Montreal.

Whenever the Belleville Fair looms on the horizon, mark it on the books that the provincial baseball and softball playdowns are right at their height in and around Belleville. Oy Young's good junior softball nine hurdled over Oshawa and are now awaiting Toronto in the O.A.S.A., while Monday sees the opening of the first round intermediate "A" playdowns between Kingston and the Shell "Oilers" here and Thursday Point Anne steps into the second round of the O.A.S.A. playdowns in the "C" series versus Gananoque district. The Ontario Baseball Association announced their draws this week with Belleville Air Force journeying to North Hastings to meet the winner of the Coe Hill-Bancroft series, now in progress. This series opens in the north on Wednesday with the return game scheduled at this end on Friday next. Secretary Bill Snyder of the O.B.A. phoned us yesterday to state that the Napanee-Picton winner would meet the Lake Shore champions commencing next week, so it seems we have plenty of play-offs to attract our attention this week.

For the first time in three years the possession of the Canadian Bank of Commerce trophy was earned on the diamond for an acceptable change last evening when the Shell "Oilers" made it two straight in the City Softball loop finals by trouncing Point Anne 7-2. Frank Sedore's "Oilers" are now champions of all they survey having won the district O.A.S.A. honors by vanquishing Corby's A. C. and now annexed the City League title at the expense of Point Anne. As has been the case in previous measures, Johnnie Bawden's good right arm proved the major factor in the winning of the Bank of Commerce cup as he limited the "cementmen" to four stingy singles, as his team mates garnered 11 safeties off Ding Luffman. Bawden whiffed ten and with the exception of the second inning when Point Anne garnered two of their four hits, was never in serious trouble. The "Oilers" now launch into the O. A.S.A. play-offs commencing on Monday in Belleville with Kingston as their opponents.

Belleville and the Air Force are no better off today than they were prior to the opening of the Quinte League play-offs. After each had won a game the two squads battled to a 4-4 draw that was terminated by darkness last evening and now the boys have to tee off again this afternoon at the Fair Grounds and really battle it out to declare a winner to enter the O.B.A. playdowns. Belleville enjoyed a nice two run advantage until the eighth, when an error started the ball rolling and saw pitcher Joe Kelleher relieved after the Flyers had three aboard. Coach Bud Wilkins injected himself into the pastime to relieve Kelleher in the eighth, and promptly retired the side, but not before the tying run had been scored off Legris' timely hit. Actually the eighth inning never should have been started, but the umpires allowed the frame to open and were practically forced into finishing the piece well under the cover of darkness. Harry Dole, who had two previous decisions over the locals, was shelled from the box in the sixth.

It was with a marked note of regret that the death of Charles (Babe) Siebert was learned yesterday when he became a victim of the waters of Lake Huron and was drowned while attempting to recover an inner tube for his children while the family were enjoying a picnic. Only recently Siebert, a veteran of the National Hockey League, was appointed coach of the Montreal Maroons and his untimely death was felt most keenly through the entire realm of hockey. Vern De Geer, sports editor of the Toronto Globe and Mail, had the following to say regarding Siebert:

"Babe Siebert was one of the most unusual of our modern moneyed puckchasers — a raw-boned athlete of the old school of ice battlers, who asked no quarter and gave none—yet an athlete who was as quiet and unassuming away from the hockey battlefields as any National Leaguer in the last two decades. Few newspapermen, teammates and opponents knew that for years he shouldered the great mental anguish over the illness of his wife. Only a handful of intimates knew of the worries that he nursed beneath a rough competitive exterior. His devotion to his family was a source of inspiration to his closest friends and object of unconcealed admiration."

Walt Gerow's Napanee Gibbards were crowned 1939 champions of the Bay of Quinte League yesterday after taking Picton into camp 5-4. It marked the third consecutive time the Gibbards beat Picton without a loss in the league finals. The odd part of the whole picture is the fact that Picton had won six straight over the Gerowites during the regular playing season, but when the pay-off came even the united efforts of Roly Rorke and Ron Church master-minding on the sidelines failed to halt the progress of the new champions. Napanee grabbed four runs in the initial frame, but Picton came back to knot the count in the fourth and make matters rather interesting for a capacity crowd. A couple of hard-hit bingles in the fifth gave Napanee the edge. Stan Spratt hurled fine ball and deserved his honors.

Sport Clippings — Apparently the Cincinnati Reds carry around four leaf clovers, because every time they drop a National League game, the St. Louis Cardinals willingly oblige by duplicating the feat and thereby accommodating the Reds by remaining five games in the lurch of the Redwings.. While the Red Sox were losing yesterday, the Yankees won two and are now ten games out in front of the American loop, which would seem just about enough margin to win at this stage of the picture....There is talk of a baseball alliance between Connie Mack's Philadelphia Athletics and the Toronto Maple Leafs for next year. After all it's about time the Queen City ball club had some kind of a working agreement with a major league club....Wilmer Hillock's good pacer, Lastic Gratton, won the 2.12 pace at Ottawa yesterday and we hope to see this crack horse pace at the Belleville Fair...... With Ralph McCabe, former Belleville boy, in the hero role as relief hurler, Copper Cliff beat Coniston in the Gold Belt finals yesterday. McCabe blanked the Coniston squad for the last five frames.

Johnny Vander Meer has gone to Chattanooga to consult a specialist about his flipper. . . . Coast operatives report the Jim Londos act drew only $57 at Dendondo Beach, Calif., the other night—a new low. . . . Scouts say they saw plenty of potential big league talent in the American Legion tournament recently at Gastonia, N.C. . . . Tom Packs, the wrestling promoter, is trying to put St. Louis back on the big time fight circuit.

Washington leads the American Baseball League in one respect, anyway—the Griffith Stadium fences carry the most commercial ads in either major league. . . . Frankie Frisch will help broadcast the world series.

AXIS CHIEFTAINS

Mussolini replied immediately and his answer was delivered to Hitler at 6 p.m. by Bernardo Attolico, Italian Ambassador in Berlin.

Finally, at 9 p.m. a second telephonic communication from Hitler was delivered to Mussolini by Von Mackensen.

Rumor of Confidence

Nothing was divulged as to what words were exchanged between the two partners in the Rome-Berlin military alliance. In former crisis the Fuehrer advised Mussolini of his latest intentions and Italy's Duce replied with his decision.

(Havas news agency quoted informed circles in Rome as expressing belief that Premier Mussolini had succeeded in obtaining Hitler's consent to a four-power conference on Danzig. The four powers involved were not named.)

Italian Press Hopeful

The Italian press continued to keep Italian hopes for peace alive, although the nation had almost 2,000,000 men called to arms. Articles in Rome's two morning newspapers placed responsibility for the crisis on Great Britain and France.

Close upon the calling of close to 500,000 additional men to the colors, the government levied a new tax on gasoline which virtually eliminated private motoring so the country's limited supply of motor fuel could be preserved for military use.

The tax resulted in an increase in the price of gasoline to the equivalent of 95 cents a gallon. A new tax also was imposed on coffee.

Diplomats' Speculation

Some diplomats speculated, entirely without confirmation, that the proposal which Hitler was reported to have sent to Great Britain provided:-

1. Return of Danzig to Germany.
2. A motor highway across Pomerze (the Polish corridor) from Germany to East Prussia.
3. Creation of a free port at Danzig for Polish traffic.
4. German guarantee of Poland's frontiers, with a 10-year non-aggression pact.
5. Negotiations with Britain for return of Germany's pre-war colonies, with a 25-year non-aggression pact between Britain and Germany.

ROOSEVELT

Fifth Peace Message

Last night's appeal was the fifth peace message President Roosevelt had addressed to Hitler in less than a year. In Berlin, a government spokesman said it was probable last night's communication had arrived after the Fuehrer had retired and that he would not see it until this morning.

"Because the Fuehrer needs his rest these days" the spokesman said "he certainly would not be called from his sleep to be notified of President Roosevelt's telegram."

"Your Excellency," President Roosevelt telegraphed Hitler, "has repeatedly and publicly stated that the ends and objectives sought by the German Reich were just and reasonable. In his reply to my message the President of Poland has made it plain, that the Polish Government is willing, upon the basis set forth in my messages, to agree to solve the controversy which has arisen between the Republic of Poland and the German Reich by direct negotiation or through the process of conciliation.

Asked to Accept Plan

"Countless human lives can yet be saved and hope may still be restored that the nations of the modern world may even now construct a foundation for a peaceful and a happier relationship if you and the government of the German Reich will agree to the pacific means of settlement accepted by the government of Poland."

Before cabling Hitler, Mr. Roosevelt telegraphed King Leopold of Belgium that the United States shared wholeheartedly in the peace hopes expressed by Leopold in his Aug. 23 message to the seven small powers of the so-called Oslo group.

President Noscicki indirectly suggested President Roosevelt himself as a conciliator between Germany and Poland. He said:

"We consider likewise the method of conciliation through a third party as disinterested and impartial as your Excellency to be a just and equitable method in the solution of controversies arising between nations."

Mr. Roosevelt had suggested the conciliator be chosen from one of the traditionally neutral nations of Europe or from an American Republic.

Willing For Truce

President Noscicki also accepted President Roosevelt's suggestion that a truce be declared pending negotiations or conciliation, saying: "While naturally wishing to avoid even the semblance of availing myself of this occasion to raise the points at issue I nevertheless consider it my duty to point out that in this crisis it is not Poland who is proffering any claims or demanding concessions from any other nation.

"It is therefore only natural that Poland agrees to refrain from any positive act of hostility provided the other party also agrees to refrain from any such act direct or indirect."

FRANCE, ENGLAND

Only men numbered seven and eight remained to be called.

Paris, Aug. 26—(AP)— Premier Edouard Daladier conferred at the War Ministry today with Sir Eric Phipps, British Ambassador to France, maintaining close British-French contact in the face of the European crisis.

The Premier received Sir Eric a few minutes after arriving at his office, where he had broadcast last night an appeal for France to be ready for "every sacrifice" in case of war over Germany's claims on Poland.

"For the defence of liberty," Daladier said, "France and England form a single block."

The Premier and the Ambassador were understood to have talked over whatever possibilities of peace Sir Nevile Henderson, British Ambassador to Germany, took to London after his talk yesterday with Adolf Hitler.

'Long Leave' For Moscow

The French Ambassador in Moscow, Paul Emile Naggiar, was called back to Paris today "for a long leave." That meant France was not satisfied with Foreign Commissar Vyacheslaff Molotoff's explanation of the Soviet's pact with Germany.

Says Bomber Failed to Heed Warnings

(A Havas news agency despatch from Warsaw said that Polish anti-aircraft batteries at Gdynia shot down a German bomber last night. The Nazi warplane, the despatch said, failed to heed repeated warnings to stop flying over a forbidden zone.)

French soldiers cut pontoon bridges across the Rhine between France and Germany north of Basle, Switzerland. The pontoons on the German side of all eight bridges from Basle north to Strassbourg were reported to have been pulled out by French military engineers.

The permanent railroad bridges which are the only other means of communication across the Rhine, have been mined and are ready to be blown up at a moment's notice.

French troops and tanks, meanwhile, moved east toward the German frontier. Civilians seeking refuge in the country also streamed out of Paris. Baggage was piled high atop motor cars jammed with women and children.

No Submission to Violence

In his address, Daladier said France had supported peace appeals of Pope Pius, President Roosevelt and King Leopold of Belgium. However, he declared the country could not accept "submission to violance" and firmly ruled out the possibility of a capitulation such as that which gave Czecho-Slovakia to Germany.

He said Russia had "reversed" her policy by signing a non-aggression treaty with Germany which "increases the chances of aggression against friends of France and against France herself."

He added: "To the liberty and life of Poland, that is to say, the liberty and life of 33,000,000 of human beings, is staked the destiny of the other peoples of Europe. It is our destiny as Frenchmen."

SPECKLED TROUT SEASON ENDED

The season for speckled trout has been extended until Sept. 15th of the current year Game Warden Herb McCabe announced today. It was also stated that the open season for partridge in all counties in Ontario, except Essex and Kent, had also been advanced. It will be permissible to shoot partridge from October 9th to 14th and from November 6th to 11th, all dates inclusive. The bag limit of partridge was set at five birds per day, with a season limit of 15 birds, the Department of Game and Fisheries ruled.

Lord Maugham, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, is pictured in the act of pushing the button to officially open the Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto. This year marks the 61st consecutive year for the C.N.E., and for the first time in its history the exhibition has the patronage of the King and Queen.

His official title is inspector-general of the Polish army, but Marshal Edward Smigly-Rydz actually ranks next to the president of the republic and is credited with formulating the bulk of Poland's foreign policies. The marshal is shown here with Mme. Smigly-Rydz in the beautiful garden of their home near Warsaw. To German fulminations against Poland as the current crisis came to the boil, the marshal replied calmly that "peace is not a matter of all giving by one nation and all taking by another." Today the marshal, with a United Poland behind him, is prepared to resist to the last ditch any threat to Poland's independence and territorial integrity.

'Toot-Toot, Tootles!'

By CHET GRANT

The hour was close to midnight when Georgia Blake turned the corner of the steret where Mabel Porter lived. It was a night of softly moving zephyrs filled with mysterious scents.

Georgie walked as one in a trance, his ukulele tucked securely under his arm. Mabel's house was in darkness. Her bedroom window faced the street and was close to the fireplace chimney. It was Georgie's plan to stand in the shadow of this chimney and pour forth his heart. He knelt outside the hedge that bordered the lawn and was startled to see a figure looming in his chosen spot. Suddenly the still night air was broken by the melodious tones of an alto saxophone.

"Tootles Walsh!" Georgie growled. "Why—"

Tootles could play a saxophone and he did a commendable piece of work on the Blue Danube. Mabel's golden head appeared at the window sill and her arm gleamed momentarily in the moonlight. A flower dropped into Tootles' anxious hand.

Mabel and Tootles began to whisper. Georgie, in his eagerness to hear them, crept further along behind the hedge. His hand touched something that began to squash, an unidentified garden product lost from a grocer's wagon many days previous. Tootles moved carelessly into the moonlight, his face uplifted to catch Mabel's slightest word. A dark object sped swiftly across the face of the moon and descended with uncanny accuracy upon his head. Tootles' yelp of surprise and fright could be heard up and down the street.

At this precise moment the awful figure of Mabel's father charged around the corner of the house. Tootles letting out another yelp, scuttled around the opposite corner and could be heard clanking over the back fence. While Georgie, no less startled and upset by Mr. Porter's stark avenging figure, leaped out to the middle of the street and raced away.

Georgie expected that he had heard the last of the troubador incident, but he soon learned otherwise. He found it was difficult to make a date with Mabel. Tootles Walsh was the lucky boy. No, Mabel didn't know when she could give Georgie a date. In fact, she was rather choice of her company. People who threw over-ripe tomatoes at unsuspecting persons were not her kind, thank you.

"You're welcome," Georgie rejoined shortly. "What is your kind?" he demanded.

"The intelligentsia," Mabel answered haughtily.

"That must be Tooties and his bunch," Georgie snapped. "I suppose they're smarter than garage mechanics!"

"Well, they don't throw vegetables at people!"

"So what are you doin' with them for then?" Georgie cried, garbling his grammar.

"I never in my life—" Mabel began.

One Sunday morning the pastor announced that on the coming Wednesday evening at eight o'clock sharp the Ladies' Aid would hold its annual ice cream social. Music would be furnished by Mr. Frederick Walsh, accompanied at the piano by Miss Mabel Porter. Georgie saw here and there the nodding heads and the knowing glances. Tootles and Mabel. They were a dear pair. Georgie felt ill.

"...The Blue Danube," the pastor said, finishing his anouncement. A hush settled over the audience. Tootles stepped to the front of the platform. He nodded confidently to Mabel and set his lips to the saxophone. He blew.

"Moo-oo!" blurted the instrument nasally. Tootles looked surprised. He snapped the stops and nodded again. "Moo-hoo!" It sounded so funny people had to laugh. Georgie hugged himself when somebody yelled, "Give that calf more rope!" Tootles turned a brick red. He seemed to wilt under the merciless storm of laughter. Then he peered into the bell of the saxophone. He thrust in his hand and pulled out a long chain of frankfuters. He grinned sheepishly and mumbled something about the horn of plenty.

The audience thought it was an act and after Mabel and Tootles finished their repertoire it crowded about the platform to congratulate them. Georgie was not there. Somehow luck was not with him in regard to Tootles Walsh. He hurried out to the church lawn and went directly to a spot in the hedge where he had hidden his ukulele. Tucking it under his arm he started up the lonely street.

The click-clikety-click of high heels on the cement walk behind him made Georgie turn. It was Mabel. She was coming to accuse him no doubt of putting those frankfurters in Tootles' horn. He started to hurry, but she caught up with him.

"Georgie."

"Uh-huh?"

"You mad with me, Georgie?"

"N-oo."

"I'm sorry that snoo Tootles played so well tonight." She tried to see his face.

"What!" Georgie stopped abruptly.

"I stuffed his old horn full of frankfuters." Mabel confessed. "He's stupid," she added furiously. "Intelligentsia! Fiddlesticks!"

"Amen," Georgie said solemnly. He began to pick dreamily on the ukulele strings. Mabel hummed the tune, a simple lilting tune that seemed to blend perfectly with the young summer's night that surrounded them.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking to himself and I said, Hay pop, what's a rime for duty?

Why, let me think, what good is a rime for duty to anybody? pop said, and I said, Well I found a copy book with only 3 pages written on, and I tore those 3 out so that makes it empty, so I decided to start my diary in it, only nothing that happened sounded exciting to enough to write down, so I decided to write it all in rimes and that would make it seem intristing ever if it wasn't.

By gollies that's the theory a lot of poets spend their their lives trying to prove, pop said, and I said, So I started with this morning, I'll read it to you so far.

Wich I started to, being, I got up this morning at half pasted 8, being early for the summer but in school time it would of been late. I ate Fluffed Oatses as usual, O are they as good as they seem, or is 9 tents of the swell effect due to the sugar and cream? I heard the fellows whisseling, could it be for me? I went out whether it was or not, for the city streets are free. We played and yelled and argued in a frendly noisy buntch, then suddenly the street was bare, for we'd all gone in to luntch. I ate scramble eggs and bacon, it tasted fine as silk, there was only enough for one helping, so I filled the space with milk. Ma sent me on a errand, and I went from a sense of duty. That's all the further I've got. pop, so what's a rime for duty? I said.

Bewtdy, pop said.

Giving me a idea how to finish it, wich I did, being, Ma sent me on a errand, and I went from a sense of duty, because there's no fun in a errand, and very little bewty.

Seeming like enough for one day.

Nazi Passenger Liners Ploughing Sea Lanes as Usual Despite Crisis

New York, Aug. 25—(AP)—As war fears mounted in Europe, marine men were cheered today by noting that not a single one of the larger Nazi passenger liners was in a German home port—but ploughing the sea lanes as usual.

It was recalled that during the Munich crisis last September, when war appeared imminent, Nazi ships in mid-sea were ordered to cancel schedules and return home.

A survey of ships owned by the Hamburg American-North German Lloyd Line showed the Europa in mid-ocean, en route to Germany; the Bremen, two days out of Cherbourg for New York; Hamburg, two days out of New York for Germany; Hansa, left Hamburg yesterday for New York; Deutschland, arrived at Southampton yesterday; New York and St. Louis, both due here today; and Columbus, cruising in West Indies.

DEAF MUTE UNABLE TO FIND WORK AFTER LONG TRIP

Windsor, Ont., Aug. 25 (CP)—William Scott pointed his bicycle toward his Collingwood, Ont., home today as he neared completion of a trip that proved futile in so far as his efforts to find work go. Scott, a 23-year-old deaf mute, doesn't feel the journey was wasted because he likes travel for its own sake. He reached Windsor from Collingwood, via Owen Sound, Toronto, Hamilton and Dunnville, making the last jump of 218 miles in two days.

Produce Market Prices Firm

Toronto, Aug. 26. — Eggs and butter closed the week on a firm footing yesterday on the Toronto open produce market. Cheese prices continued to advance fractionally in fairly active trading, according to the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Local dealers reported an improved demand for eggs, attributing it in part to the large number of Exhibition visitors now staying in the city. Trading was slightly more active and prices stayed firm. Receipts appeared adequate for the demand.

The egg market moved upward during the week. Large shipments of inspected lots from Western Ontario, usually found on the Toronto market, dwindled noticeably, due to the Montreal market's strength. Shippers were able to get a better price for their eggs at Montreal, and many large producers sent their stock there instead of Toronto. This caused an upward revision of prices on the local market amounting to about 3 cents dozen on top grades in all sections of trading.

Butter receipts were very light and trading was quiet. Although offerings of first-grade stock were cleaned up easily, undergrades were difficult to move. Prices of Ontario butter were steady. Western butter sold at 22 1-4c.

Montreal Cheese Firm

Montreal, Aug. 26. — Ontario white and colored cheese strengthened slightly on produce markets here yesterday, while Quebec pasteurized butter eased 1-8 cent, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported. Eggs, potatoes and Quebec white and colored cheese all remained unchanged.

Job price of first-grade creamery prints was 22 1-2 to 23 cents a pound, and of first grade solids 22 to 22 1-2. Western butter delivered in Montreal was unquoted. Price to creamery of Quebec No. 1 pasteurized butter delivered in Montreal for current make was 21 1-2, and the price of Quebec No. 2 pasteurized butter was 20 1-2. Receipts, 554 boxes.

Price to factory of Ontario white cheese delivered in Montreal for current make was 10 13-16 to 11 3-16 and colored 10 13-16 to 11 3-16. Quebec white was quoted at 10 3-8 and colored at 10 1-2. Receipts 4,052 boxes.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases, inspected, sold at 30 cents a dozen for A-large, 28 for A-medium, 22 to 22 1-2 for A pullets, 21 for B-large, 15 for C. Uninspected lots sold at 1-2 cent less. Shipments of lower grades only were offered at 18 to 19 for grade B and 14 for grade C. Receipts 832 cases including 550 export.

Fast Hog 24 Hours Before Killing

One of the rules in the butchering of hogs has come down through the years is that a hog should be fasted twenty-four hours before killing.

This gives the butcher every opportunity to do this work well and carcasses well butchered are naturally more valuable than those showing poor workmanship.

Every phase of the marketing of bacon is highly competitive. When our bacon is discounted for poor workmanship it means lower prices for Canadian bacon and lower prices for Canadian hogs.

Some good lots of hogs marketed during the week of August 25, 1939, are as follows:

TORONTO STOCKS CLOSE

Toronto, Aug. 26—(CP)— While Europe negotiated for a peace settlement without war, the stock market maintained a cool and calm outlook in the final session of the week, moving forward moderately in quiet trading. An opening spurt carried prices up for point gains. Base metal shares showed the best gains for the day. Western oils posted moderate gains.

Gains up to 1 to 1 3-4 points were boarded by the big base metal issues at the opening and final prices showed Nickel and Smelters steel clinging to the bulk of their gains while Noranda and Hudson Bay shaded their advances to fractions. Minor net gains were held by Pend Oreille and Falconbridge. The Eldorado market was slightly stronger.

Buffalo-Ankerite firmed about 50 cents and gains of 5 cents or more were showing at the close for Little Long Lac, Lamaque, Pickle Crow, Coniaurum, Kerr Addison and Macassa. Teck Hughes, Perron, MacLeod Cockshutt and Central Patricia lost some ground.

Foods, utilities and liquors were up narrowly and the steels posted more minor losses than gains. The Walker issues, Distillers-Seagrams, Brazilian, Shawinigan, British American Oil, Petroleum Pete and the Loblaw stocks were pivotal issues posting better prices.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Aug. 26—(AP)— Wall Street generally guessed "no war" today and an early buying rush in the stock market pushed leaders up 1 to more than 3 points.

While the overseas picture seemed a trifle brighter, traders inclined to cash profits on the upswing in view of the fact a weekend is intervening during which the long-dreaded explosion could occur. Transfers were around 500,000 shares.

Prominent stocks on the forward tilt were U.S. Steel, Bethlehem, Chrysler, General Motors, Westinghouse, Union Carbide, American Water Works, General Electric, Loft Great Northern, Union Pacific, Anaconda; American Telephone; U. S. Rubber; Montgomery Ward; J. I. Case; International Harvester; Standard Oil of N.J. and Texas Corp.

HEAVY OFFERING AGAIN FEATURES THE CITY MARKET

Fresh Fruits Headline Variable Display With Peaches Predominating

EGGS UP

Egg prices shot up another cent to 28c the dozen for "A" selects on the city market today where another heavy week-end offering of farm and garden produce was on display. Medium eggs were quoted at 25c and 26c the dozen with all stocks moving fairly well during the later hours.

Other prices maintained a firm tone with little or no change being noted over last week's quotations. Offerings were heavy with new vegetables and fresh fruits heading the display.

Sweet corn, the first of the late crop, was plentiful today with choice ears sellign at 15c the dozen. Quality of the new corn is said to be exceptionally good with ears being of much larger size than was the first produce of the season.

Home-grown tomatoes moved very briskly today with bushel-lots offered at 60c and 70c each according to quality. Basket lots were offered at 15c and 20c each.

Potato quotations remained unchanged with bushels offered at $1 each and pecks at 25c and 30c each. Late crops will be generally fair, one vendor stated this morning, expressing the opinion that the heavy rains of last week had good effect on Autumn crops.

New beets, onions, carrots and radishes moved well in 5c bunch lots. Celery was offered at three bunches for 10c with a few vegetable marrows offered at 10c and 15c each. New cabbage and cauliflower, the latter of fine quality, moved briskly at from 5c per head upwards.

Fruit Plentiful

Imported peaches were plentiful with several vendors offering stocks that sold at from 25c to 35c per 6-quart basket. Plums of different varieties sold at 40c and 50 cents the basket with huckleberries demanding 60c for 11-quart containers.

Yellow Harvester Apples sold at 20c the basket with Duchess and other cooking varieties moving well at a few cents more. Raspberries were conspicuous by their absence, with a few isolated boxes selling at 15c each.

Watermelons and canteloupe proved popular with the buying public with a heavy stock selling well at lower-than-usual prices. The former was priced at from 10c each with canteloupe offered at 5c up.

Chicken offerings were not as heavy as usual, with some choice April birds being offered at from 60c the pair in some quarters.

Whitefish and trout sold at 17c and 20c the pound respectively.

HOG QUOTATIONS

Toronto, Aug. 26—(CP)— The drop in the pound sterling yesterday has caused hog prices to slump on reporting markets. Stratford, down 50 cents today for dressedweights, at $9.75 showed the biggest decline. Hull price was down 35 cents and Hamilton and London 25, liveweights at Hull also dropped 25 cents.

Dressedweights: Hamilton $10.-25; Hull $9.65, Stratford $9.75 plus transportation; London $9.-75, plus transportation.

Liveweights: Hull $7.25.

EDWARD DAVIES RETAKEN AT BALA

Bala, Ont., Aug. 26—(CP)— Edward Davies, 39, of Montreal, who broke out of Barrie jail yesterday, was captured near here today. He had been held at the county jail at Barrie on a charge of robbing the Bala Branch of the Royal Bank of Canada.

Davies sawed through his bar cells on the second floor of the jail and escaped. He dropped 30 feet to the ground and scaled a 20-foot wall.

He was arrested on the armed robbery charge soon after two bandits held up the bank here and stole $1,970. Loius Wall, 32, of Toronto, arrested on a similar charge, was in a separate cell in the Barrie jail and did not attempt escape.

Warden Thompson to Officiate At Belleville Fair Opening

'Exhibits More Numerous Than Ever,' Says Secretary R. H. Ketcheson

ALL IN READINESS

Belleville Fair arrangements are now past the last minute arrangements and everything is in readiness for the arrival of the exhibits and other features of the annual exhibition which will open on Tuesday afternoon and continue on Wednesday and Thursday. Warden Geo. F. Thompson of Hastings County will officially declare the fair open.

Exhibits, officials stated, will go far to make this the best fair in history. From the countryside and from local business shops they will be placed in position at the opening of the week so that three days of combined pleasure and education may be the result.

The grounds are in fine shape, the recent rains having been most timely to give the sod its greenest touch.

Improvement in some of the buildings and sheds have been made which are appreciated by exhibitors.

"The exhibits are more numerous than ever", commented Secretary R. H. Ketcheson today. There is every reason for enthusiasm by the people of Belleville and the district with the zeal of the exhibitors who promise close competition all along the line.

HIGH PRICE OF CHEESE RECALLED

During the Great War the highest price paid for cheese on district boards hovered near the 30 cent mark, it was recalled by one of the district's cheesemakers this morning.

Whether this price will again be reached was doubtful, it was stated by the maker, who declared that in the event of another war in which Britain would be involved, the price of cheese would likely be 'pegged.' But at what price this would be fixed, if the government took control, no one knows, it was stated. This single factor has resulted largely in the present slow sale of cheese, it was stated.

MOTORIST ENCOUNTERS LARGE DEER ON ROAD

Journeyng from Coe Hill yesterday afternoon, immediately south of the village, William Reiseman, local commercial agent, encountered a large red deer on the highway. The animal when first sighted stood in the centre of the road some distance ahead, and reportedly moved to allow the car to pass only when the machine had approached within less than one hundred feet. It then moved slowly into a nearby thicket.

NO ACTIVITY SEEN MILITIA UNITS HERE

While detailed plans for mobilization in Canada in event of war have been prepared by the Department of National Defence, there is no evidence of anxiety or unusual activity in local military circles. This week the majority of officers and men of the local Argyll Light Infantry (Tank) Battalion have been receiving thorough open field training at Camp Borden through the use of real tanks, and a certain quietness has prevailed lately within the city.

At district headquarters, Kingston, however, all leave for the permanent force units has been cancelled as the result of the present European tension. Summer camp training for the permanent forces in that district will be completed by the first of next week and it was stated that so far no orders have been given to cut short the normal training schedule.

Police Blotter

Charged with the wilful setting of her premises on fire, Mrs. Julia M. Vilneff, Kaladar, was lodged in the Napanee jail on a charge of arson yesterday. The conflagration to Mrs. Vilneff's store and post office at Kaladar took place on Aug. 19th, police alleged. Mrs. Vilneff was arrested by Sergeant Harry Thompson of the Provincial Police and her case was remanded until the 31st of the month.

Thomas Hutchinson Jr., Boswell Street, reported the theft of his bicycle from off Campbell Street yesterday afternoon. Through the co-operation of a local lad named Davidson, city police later recovered the stolen bike in Bloomfield. Police charges are pending.

With no arrests in Belleville yesterday the cell block was occupied by two lone transients, who slumbered unmolested there last night.

GROUP OF R.C.A.F. TRUCKS PASS THRU CITY ON MANOEUVRES

The city took on the grim appearance of armed Europe this morning when a contingent of heavy trucks fully laden with equipment of various type and complete with squads of uniformed men and non-commissioned officers of the Royal Canadian Air Force base at Trenton, halted on lower Front Street. One of the trucks contained a fully equipped radio receiving and transmitting unit. Those in charge were singularly reluctant to converse regarding the destination of the equipment, but it is understood that special manoeuvres are being held by the R.C.A.F. in the district.

WELLAND CANAL TO BE GUARDED BY LINCOLN REGT.

Regiment Called Out on Volunteer Basis to Protect Waterway

A VITAL LINK

Toronto, Aug. 26—(CP)—Officials at Military District No. 2 headquarters here announced today members of the Lincoln and Welland Regiment have been called out on a volunteer basis to guard the Welland Ship Canal.

Normal strength of the regiment is 250 men and headquarters is at Niagara Falls.

Brigadier R. O. Alexander, Officer Commanding this military district, said there is no general mobilization of militia in the district.

Vital Part of Waterway

The Welland Ship Canal is a vital part of Canada's inland waterway linking Eastern and Western Canada. The present canal was opened in August, 1932. The 27-mile canal links Port Colborne on Lake Erie and Port Weller, Lake Ontario, overcoming the 327-foot difference between the levels of the two lakes.

Guarding these National projects is a Federal responsibility, unlike the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. Inspector E. D. L. Hammond said the Ontario Anti-Sabotage guards would not participate in guarding the canal system.

The present canal, the fourth, cost about $131,000,000. Vessels with a draught of 25 feet can use the canal and make the St. Lawrence passage as far as Prescott.

The canal is important particularly at this time of the year when the great rush of grain from the head of the lakes to the seaboard is on.

Obituary

WILLIAM M. HAMILTON

Winnipeg

William Miles Hamilton, a former resident of Belleville, died suddenly in Winnipeg this Saturday morning. Announcement of his death was received here by his brother, Mr. Robert S. Hamilton, Charles Street.

The late Mr. Hamilton was born in Belleville 56 years ago, his parents being the late Mr. and Mrs. William Hamilton; his father was manager of the former Merchants Bank here for many years. He received his education in the Belleville schools and later entered the banking profession. At the time of his death he was manager of the Dominion Bank branch at the corner of Portage Avenue and Sherbrooke Street, Winnipeg. For eighteen years he had made his home in Western Canada, prior to which time he served with the bank in the Province of Ontario. To many old friends in Belleville the announcement of his death will bring sincere feelings of regret. During his residence here he was a member of St. Thomas' Church.

Surviving him are his wife, who prior to her marriage was Miss Louise Sills, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Sills, Belleville; three daughters, Mrs. R. Hendershott, Toronto; Mrs. Gordon Wren, Winnipeg, and Miss Neville Hamilton at home; one son, Mr. John Hamilton, Winnipeg; two brothers, Mr. Harry H. Hamilton, Montreal, and Mr. Robert S. Hamilton, Belleville; three sisters, Mrs. William Thomson, Belleville, Mrs. R. E. Orr, Stratford, and Mrs. Kenneth Taylor, Montreal.

The funeral will take place here on Monday afternoon. The announcement is made elsewhere in this paper.

Ambulance Driving Appeals To Girls According to Canvass

If war breaks out and Canadian volunteers are asked by the Mother Country, local girls who may wish to go overseas will express a preference for ambulance or lorry driving instead of the proverbial nursing or Red Cross services, it was indicated by an unofficial canvass of many office workers of the city this week.

Surprisingly, the greater majority of single girls questioned regarding their preference expressed a decided opinion that more glamour and excitement could be had in the units of the army rather than in the nursing service at base hospitals. A few indicated their desire to serve in the air force, but admitted that service "might not be as nice as it sounds" if heavy bombing is to be carried out.

Few girls of the present age are unable to drive automobiles, and this has apparently swayed their decision to join the mechanized service.

NORTH HASTINGS OATS SHOW TALL GROWTH

Oats have been a fine crop through North Hastings this season and some heavy stands of the grain have been cut. This week Mr. E. Baumhour of Faraday Township is exhibiting samples from his field which measures an average of 64 inches in height, with the grain well headed.

Fuehrer's Message

The navy was reported at strategic battle stations in the North Sea and the Mediterranean.

Householders besieged provision stores to lay in emergency supplies. Police were recalled from their leaves. Work on air raid shelters was expedited.

Germans were advised by their Embassy to leave Britain, and German newspapermen were withdrawn from London. Canadian and other tourists continued their exodus, jamming transport facilities.

ATTRIBUTE BOMBINGS TO I.R.A.

Meanwhile, already tense nerves were strained by bombings attributed to the Irish Republican Army. A bomb explosion at Coventry killed five and injured fifty others, and a blast at the west coast resort of Blackpool damaged the town hall in the early morning hours.

Special guards were stationed around government buildings in London after reports of an I.R.A. plot to bomb them.

The explosions and precautions recalled that, when parliament was asked to pass an emergency act granting wide powers to deal with I.R.A. plotters, Home Secretary Sir Samuel Hoare said a plot had been uncovered under which the I.R.A., with "foreign" backing, planned widespread sabotage to coincide with the period of crisis.

In an editorial captioned "Efforts For Peace", the Times (Independent) mentioned the peace appeals of President Roosevelt which expressed the opposition of the people of the United States to policies of military conquest and domination.

METHODS OF VIOLENCE BLAMED.

"It isn't so much every specific aim of the German people to which other nations take objection," the Times declared, "but the methods of violence which he (Hitler) threatens now to adopt again."

The newspaper opined the German-Russian non-aggression pact might have given momentum to war but it also produced "counteraction of vigorous pressure in favor of keeping peace."

It asserted, "actual points at issue are not questions either of vital national interest or of national honor unless Germany is determined to seek her own aggrandizement by force and at the expense of another nation. In that case she constitutes herself an enemy of the European commonwealth and it becomes a matter of vital interest to the attacked state to resist her and a matter of honor to its allies to join with all their might in that resistance."

ONE OF TWO COURSES.

The News Chronicle (Liberal) believed Germany in contemplating one of two courses.

"It may be," said the paper, "that Hitler has decided to risk everything and make a move which will plunge Europe into war. Or it may be that at this eleventh hour he is still seeking to demoralize the forces against him by going through the motions which normally precede war.

"If Hitler prefers the path of negotiation to the path of war the way is open."

RAY OF HOPE.

London, Aug. 26 (CP Cable)—A glimmer of hope that eleventh hour peace efforts might succeed was seen by the morning press today as Friday passed without precipitating a conflict.

Editorial writers seized upon the 24-hour "marking time" period as evidence there was still a slim chance of averting war.

The Daily Mail (Independent) said "we must regard every day that passes now in peace as a day of grace given us to perfect our individual plans and to put our houses in order.

"If it is peace, it must be a peace that is acceptable to Poland and it must be a long-term peace."

But it added: "Let us repeat again that no real hopes can be built on any rumors until Hitler makes his final decision."

The Daily Herald (Labor) remarked, "It is still possible that the strength and determination of Great Britain, France and Poland have had their effect and that the moral judgment of the world has shaken the confidence of Herr Hitler in the success of his threatened act of aggression."

The Daily Express (Independent) assessing the effect of Russia's surprise pact with Germany, saw one advantage. "If war comes," it said, "the issue will be clearer. Two democracies will be ranged against the totalitarian states and all the world will know that we are fighting so that freedom and liberty shall not perish in Europe.

"But war is not yet and may not come."

The Daily Telegraph (Conservative) remarked that although Russia has signed a non-aggression pact with Germany it was doubtful whether the Rome-Berlin axis has gained a member. But it was "fairly evident", the paper said that the axis has lost an adherent in Japan.

Thousands Leave For Homelands

By GUY RHOADES
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 26—(CP Cable) — Thousands of Britons came home from the continent today and thousands of Germans left for the Fatherland—all wondering whether the twilight over Europe was the twilight before dawn or nightfall.

Tear-stained German women, bewildered children and grim-faced men waved and shouted "Auf Wiedersehn!" (good bye!) as they jammed their way aboard special boat trains leaving Liverpool Street Station.

Overwhelmed porters trundled hastily packed trunks and bags aboard baggage cars as the owners left English friends in response to orders of their consuls. None shouted "Heil Hitler!" but many were heard to cry "Heil Frieden!" ("Hail Peace!")

As the great migrations proceeded across the narrow waters separating this country from the continent, preparations were continuously rushed here for the war that all hoped, and most prayed, would be averted.

Thousands of children in the evacuation areas of England abandoned summer holidays and streamed back to schools for the first Saturday class day of their lives.

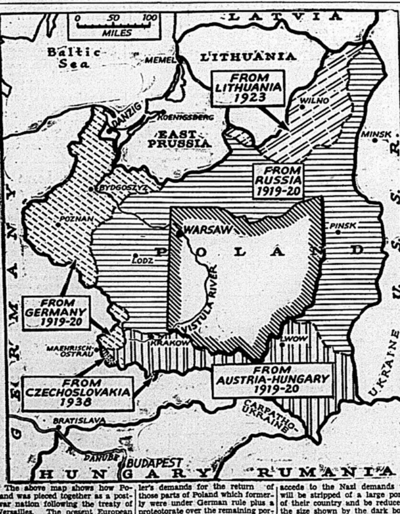
Central Press map of the Battle of Tannenberg

The 25th anniversary of the battle of Tannenberg will be celebrated in East Prussia and throughout Germany this Sunday with the feature event being a world-wide broadcast of a speech by Chancellor Hitler. Tannenberg is historically significant because the German victory there, Aug. 27-29, 1914, destroyed a Russian army under General Samsanov, led to the smashing defeat of another great Russian army under General Rennenkampf at the Masurian Lakes and ended the threat of a Russian invasion of East Prussia. Hero of the battle was General Paul von Hindenburg, ably aided by his chief of staff, General Erich von Ludendorff. The map shows Hindenburg's successful strategy by placing a thin screen of troops before Rennenkampf, thus holding him in check. Hindenburg hurls his main force against Sansanov, destroying him, then wheeling to attack and defeat Rennenkampf. This German victory eliminated German fear of the Russian steam-roller and released thousands of troop for duty on the western front. Now Germany and Russia have signed a non-aggression pact on the eve of the Tannenburg anniversary, which again finds the world in arms, with Nazi Germany threatening Poland.



The above map shows how Poland was pieced together as a post-war nation following the treaty of Versailles. The present European crisis revolves upon Chancellor Hitler's demands for the return of those parts of Poland which formerly were under German rule plus a protectorate over the remaining portion of Poland. Should the Poles accede to the Nazi demands they will be stripped of a large portion of their country and be reduced to the size shown by the dark border in the centre of the map.

An albino leopard frog, the second living one of its kind known in the world, according to Clyde Patch, herpetologist of the Canadian National Museum, was found in White Fish Lake. The first known albino frog was discovered in St. Lawrence County, N.Y., in 1934 and was turned over to the American Museum of Natural History. The frog is about two years old, Mr. Patch believes, and about three inches long. Albinos lack black pigment cells in the skin. The only traces of color in the frog are supplied by the dark eyes and the flesh which reflects through the white skin of the body and lends a pinkish tone.

In the face of rapidly rising imminence of war in Europe, President Roosevelt appealed to King Victor Emmanuel of Italy "to formulate proposals for a specific solution of the present crisis." The president's appeal was delivered to the Italian King by U.S. Ambassador Phillips in person. The appeal was sent to no other country but Italy.

BRITAIN REAFFIRMS PLEDGE TO POLAND IN NOTE

Hitler is Willing To Have Mussolini Mediate Dispute

Fuehrer Rejects Proposal for Direct Negotiations with Poland over Danzig and Corridor — Other Adjustments Demanded

LETTER TO DALADIER

Hitler Tells French Premier "Macedonian Conditions" Prevail on Polish Border Especially in Upper Silesia

By LOUIS LOCHNER
Associated Press Staff Writer

Berlin, Aug. 28—(AP)— Adolf Hitler was represented in well-informed circles today to be willing to have some friend such as Premier Mussolini of Italy mediate in Germany's dispute with Poland.

In rejecting direct negotiations with Warsaw the German Fuehrer disclosed his demands on Poland not only included return of the Free City of Danzig and Pomorze (Polish Corridor) but also vaguely implied he would insist on other "adjustments" at the expense of Poland.

In connection with suggestions that Premier Mussolini would be acceptable as a mediator, reliable sources said Bernardo Attolico, Italian Ambassador to Germany, is in frequent touch with Hitler and Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop.

Hitler did not comment directly on Daladier's suggestion that the French Premier was "ready to make every effort which an upright man can undertake" toward a peaceful solution.

An insight into German aspirations in the east came from a letter sent by the Fuehrer to Premier Daladier of France in reply to Daladier's plea that Germany negotiate her differences with Poland directly.

Hitler's letter was made public at a press conference in the Propaganda Ministry. This action was interpreted here as indicating Hitler was provoked by Daladier, for whom he has expressed personal admiration.

PREMIER DALADIER SENDS NEW LETTER TO ADOLF HITLER

Effort Made to Dissuade Him from Going to War and Open Way for Peace

EXTEND PREPAREDNESS

Decree Issued Apply Censorship to Printed Publications, Photographs

Paris, Aug. 28—(AP)— Premier Edouard Daladier drew up a second letter to Fuehrer Hitler today in an effort to dissuade him from going to war and keep the way open for peaceful negotiations.

The French government simultaneously extended its preparedness for war with publication of a degree applying censorship to news and photographs.

Effective today, the decree said all printed publications, radio broadcasts and newsreels must be submitted to the newly-formed General Information Service for approval.

R.C.A.F. UNITS MOVE TO STATIONS

Squadron from Trenton Airport Moved to Atlantic Coast for Emergencies

Ottawa, Aug. 28—(CP)—The following statement (200)) was issued Saturday by Defence Minister Mackenzie:

Units of the Royal Canadian Air Force required for coast defence purposes are now being moved to the Atlantic coast to take up their assigned emergency stations. Certain units moved today, and others will be proceeding from day to day. In the event of sudden emergency, however, the movement can be greatly accelerated if necessary.

In connection with the authority received Friday to call up certain portions of the non-permanent militia under section 63 of the Militia Act, orders have been issued, that all coast defence troops except infantry are to be called out. These include coast artillery, engineers, signals, ordnance, medicals and army service corps.

Throughout the country generally details of certain other units have been called up for the protection of vulnerable points.

For the protection of the Welland Canal, however, the order applies to the entire Lincoln and Welland regiment.

Certain reservists of the Royal Canadian Naval Service have been notified to stand by for orders to report for duty at any time. No actual call for reservists to report have yet been issued from naval headquarters.

Berliners Buy Everything Dealers Can Give Them, Not On Ration List

By LOUIS LOCHNER
Associated Press Staff Writer

Berlin, Aug. 28—(AP)—Germany's capital saw today the greatest run on its food stores in decades.

Housewives hurried to grocer, butcher, dairyman and other provisioners to get their names down for the new rationing process.

In addition, they bought whatever the dealers would give them of stock not yet on the ration list. These included eggs, potatoes, flour and canned goods of all sorts.

Germans began to eat less of some favorite foods because of the government's new system of rationing—a "pre-war measure of conservation."

While housewives thus were seeking to adapt themselves to the emergency situation, Berlin's men could be seen standing before bill boards, or rather the bill-columns that are characteristic of Germany, reading ardently.

Their attention was drawn especially to a notice stating that after Sept. 1, next Friday, gasoline, too, would be rationed strictly, that is—rationed for those who are still allowed to retain their cars.

Under terms of the gasoline decree, the owner of an automobile must prove he needs his car and negotiate on the amount of gasoline he may purchase daily.

There already had been a ban on the sale of gasoline from 6 p.m. Saturday to 8 o'clock Monday morning to prevent waste of the precious fluid in weekend pleasure drives.

There is plenty of bread, potatoes, vegetables, rye and wheat flour. But there is less meat, sausage, marmalade, coffee, milk and sugar as a result of the plan.

The government-prescribed diet, as published today, limits meat consumption a person for one week to 700 grams, approximately 24.7 ounces.

Consumption of dairy products, oils and fats has been set at 60 grams, about 2.1 ounces, a day for each person.

The sugar rationing is severe. Only 280 grams, about 9.9 ounces, are allowed a person in a week.

NON-PERMANENT MILITIA UNITS TAKE UP POSTS

Anti-Aircraft Battery at Kingston Ordered to Halifax

RESPONSE EXCELLENT

All Canals and Arsenals in Ontario are Heavily Guarded

By the Canadian Press

Members of non-permanent militia units stood guard over every armoury in Ontario today, while others patrolled public utilities plants and channels and key points of the Great Lakes grain trade.

The precautions were in accordance with Defence Minister Mackenzie's order from Ottawa calling up volunteers from the non-permanent ranks. Sources at Ottawa and at district military headquarters throughout the province said the response was excellent.

GENERAL N. ABE ASKED TO FORM JAPAN'S CABINET

Will Replace Cabinet of Baron Huranuma Recently Resigned

WATCH RUSSIA

Tokyo, Aug. 28—(AP)—Emperor Hirohito today summoned General Nobuyuki Abe to the imperial palace where he will be commanded to form a new cabinet replacing that of Baron Kirchiro Hiranuma who resigned as a result of the German-Soviet non-aggression pact.

The summons to General Abe, former Acting War Minister, came shortly after Baron Hiranuma's resignation was submitted while Japan kept her attention on Soviet Russia for any move against Manchoukuo or North China.

Hiranuma told the Japanese press Papan's diplomatic about-face resulting from European events — principally the German-Russian non-aggression pact—necessitated the government's resignation.

Pilot Loses Life, Orillia Club Loses Only Airplane

Orillia, Ont., Aug. 28—(CP)—An airplane crash at Port Carling which brought death to Sid Hill sounded the death knell also of the Orillia Flying Club it was learned here today. The 22-year-old student pilot from Gravenhurst was killed when he crashed in a half-acre field. A companion, Russell Glover, 18, Lambton Mills, suffered facial and body bruises.

The plane was the only one owned by the club, formed only a year ago, and officials said today the group would have to disband. The machine was wrecked and insurance on it was voided by the fact Hill was carrying a passenger contrary to regulations, since he had not sufficient flying time to his credit.

'Poland Will Never Capitulate To Force' Says Gov't Spokesmen

By EDWIN JOHNSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 28—(CP Cable)—Only a genuine, concrete gesture of conciliation by Fuehrer Hitler can liquidate peacefully the German-Polish dispute over Danzig in the opinion of highly placed Polish government spokesmen interviewed during a tour which took this writer to the heart of Europe's present danger zone.

"Poland will never capitulate to force," warned one spokesman.

"Make no mistake about the temper of the Polish people," said an official of the foreign office. "They always are willing to listen to reason and discuss legitimate grievances with their neighbors on terms of equality.

Will Fight Alone

"But if our integrity and the independence of our country is menaced our army is ready to resist to the last drop of blood. If necessary we shall fight alone."

SERVICE STATION WORKER HELDUP AT POINT OF GUN

John Bell of Shell Station Dundas Street, Robbed of Twenty Dollars

GUNMAN ESCAPES

A lone armed robber held up John Bell, Shell service station attendant at the corner of Foster Ave. and East Dundas St. and stole $20.00 from the station cash register. No attempt to force Bell to open the station safe was made and his personal cash was not requested either, but the cool-headed robber forced Bell into the boiler room before he effected his escape along Foster Ave.

Bell told police he was sitting alone in the service station about 10.50 Saturday night, when a large tall man entered the premises with both hands in his coat pockets. "What can I do for you?" Bell asked the man as he glanced over his newspaper.

"Just hand over the money in the cash register," suddenly stated the man and Bell first thought the man was joking. However, when the stranger suddenly jammed, what Bell says, was an automatic pistol, into his ribs, Bell then opened the cash register while the robber snatched all of the cash and then backing Bell into rear boiler room saying "You'd better stay there for a while if you know what's good for you." The robber was seen leaving the service station by neighbors who did not know of the robbery until the arrival of city police, who investigated.

Today Mr. Bell accompanied Plainclothes Constable Fred Isard to Toronto in hopes of picking up a clue that might solve the hold-up.

Claim 700 Drill, Sing Nazi Songs

Toronto, Aug. 28—(CP)— The Daily Star said today about 700 German-speaking people drilled and sang Nazi songs yesterday in a remote valley west of Maple, about 20 miles north of Toronto, where the Waldfest Deutsches Bund camp is situated.

"With almost religious fervor they sang Nazi songs, gave the Nazi salute and dedicated a flag bearing a large black swastika on a white maple leaf with a red background," The Star story said.

"Speaking from a rostrum draped with a huge swastika and a Union Jack, leaders urged the crowd to be true to the fatherland no matter what the cost."

A reporter was able to gain admittance to the drilling and flag ceremony but was requested not to take pictures.

The Star quoted Martin Kaiser of Toronto, described as a "leader" of the Waldfest Deutsches Bund, as saying: "We have to be very careful and very quiet the way people in the city feel now."

GERMAN BALLOONS REPORTED ALOFT OVER BORDER LINE

Frontier Clashes Reported and Polish Cavalryman is Killed

POLAND STANDS FIRM

Warsaw, Aug. 28—(AP)— German observation balloons were reported aloft over the German-Polish border today as Warsaw lived from minute to minute on the thin and fragile line between peace and war.

"The dice have not yet been thrown," said one morning Warsaw newspaper, "but they may have been thrown by the time these words are in print."

Frontier clashes were reported from various districts as nervous strain found expression in gunfire. A Polish cavalryman was killed.

Polish reports said Polish frontier guards and buildings were being almost continuously attacked, not only with rifles but with machine guns and hand grenades.

Service to East Prussia

Most train, airplane and highway communications between Poland and Germany stopped, but, until last night at least, there was train service through the Polish Corridor to East Prussia from Germany.

Poland remained confident the decision of the British government, which Ambassador Sir Nevile Henderson will convey to Adolf Hitler, would not in any way be harmful to Polish interests.

"Britain will not agree to a new Munich," declared a headline in the Express Poranni.

The government Kurjer Czerwony said: "Britain, Poland and France have already won the war of nerves, and they will also win the real war, should Germany commit a mad act and provoke it, but then the terms of peace will be entirely different."

Polish spokesmen emphasized Poland wants a peaceful solution of the controversy, but she will insist on full recognition of her sovereignty.

CANADA PREPARED FOR DEFENCE OF WHOLE DOMINION

Dominion Cabinet May be Called Into Extraordinary Session at Anytime

REPLY FROM IL DUCE

Says he will Leave Untried No Effort to Safeguard Peace

Ottawa, Aug. 28—(CP)—Canada awaits quietly for whatever is to come from the boreboding situation abroad. The government has made all preparations to defend the Dominion from "enemies within and without," and cabinet ministers may be called into another extraordinary meeting at any moment.

Defence Minister Mackenzie has called up 10,000 volunteers from the non-permanent militia, and they are on sentry duty throughout the Dominion at such vulnerable points as airports, armories, canals, wharves, bridges, wireless stations and industrial and power plants. Coastal defences have been manned and Royal Canadian Air Force permanent force squadrons flown to the Atlantic coast to protect the country against a sudden attack from the sea.

DUCE CONTACTS BRITISH GOV'T AND ADOLF HITLER

Virginio Gayda Says Mussolini Has Need of Help of Men of Good Will

POPE RECEIVES ENVOY

Rome, Aug. 28—(AP)—Fascists said today Premier Mussolini was ready to lend his good offices to a settlement of European problems, but indicated Great Britain and France would have to satisfy both Germany and Italy of their good will.

Virginio Gayda, often the unofficial spokesman of the government, said Mussolini alone could not "accomplish the miracle expected of him."

"He has need," Gayda wrote in the Giornale D'Italia, "of responsible men of good will who listen to his words and understand with honesty the spirit in which he speaks them."

Gayda, like other Italian commentators, remained pessimistic as to the outcome of the exchange of notes between London and Berlin. The margin of time in which to avert war, he said, was lessening, adding, "no bright hopes should be drawn" from the current "waiting phase."

Useful Element in Reply

The British government's reply to Adolf Hitler "may bring a useful element to the orientation of international positions if not to the solution of pending questions," Gayda said.

"But it also is certain that if the adversaries do not deliberately want war, they should refrain from mixing with the elementary limits of the problem and its solutions, their own questions of prestige and calculations of unconfessable aspirations."

Mussolini was in contact with both Adolf Hitler and the British government.

It also became known today Pope Pius XII received Francis Osborne, British Envoy to the Holy See, at Castel Gandolfo yesterday.

A vacation source also said a high Papal official met Casimir Papee, Polish Ambassador to the Holy See, yesterday, and that a message was dispatched to Monsignor Filippo Cortesi, Papal Nuncio at Warsaw, instructing him to get in touch with the Polish government at once.

Sir N. Henderson Carrying Message To Fuehrer Hitler

Message is of Such a Nature that Reply is Expected from Hitler and it is Believed Any Action will be Postponed until Tomorrow at Least

CABINET APPROVES

Final Approval Given by Cabinet Shortly Before British Ambassador Left for Heston Airport to Journey to Berlin

London, Aug. 28 (CP)—Great Britain's Ambassador to Germany, Sir Nevile Henderson, flew to Berlin this afternoon with a message to Adolf Hitler which informed quarters said re-affirmed the British intention to support Poland if she is attacked.

Details of the note were not disclosed but it was reported to have said the first requirement for any negotiation of the Polish question was the removal of threats of force.

Sources close to the government indicated the message was of such a nature that a reply was expected from the German Fuehrer. This, it was believed, would forestall any decisive action until tomorrow at least.

Sir Nevile left by plane a few minutes before 5 p.m. (12 noon EDT) and was expected to reach Berlin early in the evening.

SERIES OF EMERGENCY STEPS

Shortly before he left London the government took a series of emergency steps, indicating the possibility of war still was considered "imminent" as Prime Minister Chamberlain said last week.

A special session of parliament was called for tomorrow to hear a statement from Prime Minister Chamberlain on the latest developments and take any action thought necessary.

The Admiralty, which already had taken control of all British shipping, advised merchant vessels to stay out of the Mediterranean and Baltic Seas.

At the same time the government made effective sweeping defence regulations under the new Emergency Powers Act, closing military areas, restricting civil liberties and putting public utilities under new regulations.

GIVEN FINAL APPROVAL

The note, which Sir Nevile was carrying to Berlin, was given final approval by a noon cabinet meeting after it had been under full consideration by the cabinet Saturday night and yesterday afternoon.

When Sir Nevile left Heston Airport photographers wished him "good luck".

He replied that he wanted "all the good luck" he could get.

The time devoted by the cabinet to preparation of the note to Germany indicated to some informed observers that it might lay down the general terms upon which Great Britain would be willing to enter negotiations for a European political and economic settlement.

But it was expected to stress that such general negotiations must be kept apart from the immediate German-Polish dispute which was a matter to be settled directly between those countries on a basis of equality and with threats of force absent.

By J. F. SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Aug. 28 (CP Cable)—Great Britain's answer to Adolf Hitler's peace terms was drafted at a cabinet meeting lasting fifty minutes today while sweeping defence regulations were issued to prepare the country for war.

Informed sources indicated Britain would tell Germany the Anglo-French pledge to Poland would not be lifted and that the first requirement for any negotiations over Danzig and the Polish Corridor must be the removal of threats of force.

Parliament will be assembled tomorrow when Prime Minister Chamberlain will report to the nation not only on peace proposals but on war preparations.

Sir Nevile Henderson, British Ambassador to Germany, will fly back to Berlin today with the message of the British Government. In some quarters Hitler was expected to send another communication to London before taking his decision of peace or war.

MEDITERRANEAN SEA CLOSED

The Admiralty closed the Mediterranean to British shipping and ordered all British ships in Baltic ports to leave as soon as possible.

Voluminous defence regulations were published. They ranged from the control of carrier pigeons to the operation of lighthouses.

Sources close to the government declared a military alliance with Turkey, Germany's Great War ally, would be signed in the immediate future. It would replace the existing verbal agreement between Britain and Turkey to fight along side each other in the event of the Mediterranean becoming a theatre of war.

Official London places great importance on Anglo-Turkish relations because of Turkey's position at the eastern end of the Mediterranean straddling the Dardanelles.

On every side, in the press, in conversation with people, in government offices, everywhere you hear reflected the country's grim determination to stand by the Poles. From Whitehall to Whitechapel you see evidence of a "no surrender" policy.

WILLING TO SETTLE JUSTLY

The government and people seem united in telling Hitler that if he wants a fight he can have it, but that if he abandons force and shows some sign of conciliation Britain will be willing and ready to help him get a just settlement of his Polish claims.

Hitler Under Thumb of Stalin, Whose Interest Is Peace, Says Shaw

London, Aug. 28 — (CP) — Bernard Shaw, in a letter to The Times, inquired today what all the excitement over the international situation is about.

"A week ago," said Mr. Shaw, "Dean Inge, writing in The Evening Standard, guessed that Herr Hitler had gone to Canossa (scene of the penance performed by the Emperor Henry IV before Pope Gregory VII in 1077.)

"A few days later, the joyful news came that the Dean was right, and that Herr Hitler is under the powerful thumb of Stalin, whose interest in peace is overwhelming.

"And every one except myself is frightened out of his or her wits!

"Why? Am I mad? If not, why? Why? Why?"

City and District News

TOURISTS KEEP TRACK OF EUROPEAN NEWS

United States tourists now visiting the city and district, though displaying considerable interest in and eagerness for news concerning the European situation have shown very little inclination to discuss the matter, it was stated this morning by city tourist camp caretaker, Geo. Wilder.

First slackening of the numbers of tourists passing through has been noted at the camp, though a fair week end was reported by the caretaker. By the end of next week, it was estimated the homeward trek of visitors will be in full swing.

LAST MINUTE ENTRIES FLOOD FAIR OFFICE

Secretary R. H. Ketcheson of the Belleville Fair Board and staff of assistants concentrated their efforts in the Front Street office this morning on the final registration of entries for the annual fair.

A veritable flood of last minute entries from exhibitors arrived in the mail this morning, nearly 1600 new ones in the various classes. A record entry list of fowl will be shown this year, revealed by the fact that 515 new entries in this class had been received in this morning's mail.

"We have the heaviest registration this year we have probably ever had", stated the secretary today.

ICE CREAM MAKE IS REDUCED THIS YEAR

Ice cream consumption has been reduced this year through this part of the Province, it is observed by Mr. Chas. R. Kennedy, inspector of dairy products of the local office of the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

In charge of the area between Napanee and Orillia, Mr. Kennedy describes ice cream make considerably below that of last year, with a consequent use of less milk from the producer. Cooler weather during the fore part of the summer is believed responsible.

It is estimated that for each 400 gallons of ice cream made, 1500 pounds of milk and other ingredients are necessary.

WAR SCARE RESULTS INCREASED RADIO USE

"It's an ill wind...." remarked the proprietor of one of the city's radio equipment stores this morning.

The present war scare in Europe may have resulted in a slackening of trade in some lines lately, but radio men of Belleville are enjoying boom times in the sale and servicing of receiving sets, it was stated.

Lately the demand for car radios evidently for the purpose of keeping owners informed of the latest events abroad while they travel, has been so great, it has been filled with difficulty, reported one radiotrician.

BIG 'LUNGE CAUGHT IN NOONDAY HEAT

The proverbial fishermen's theory that fish bite better at certain hours on certain days was dispelled by Mr. Frank McKeown of this city who at sharp noon yesterday, on one of the hottest and calmest days of summer, hooked and landed after an hour's battle on the unusually still waters of Muscote Bay, a 35-pound 'lunge. Today the fish reposed in the window of Green's butcher shop, an attraction for many who viewed it.

The record fish was caught on a simple spoon troll. Mr. Geo. Wallbridge was the second occupant of the boat.

MOIRA LAKE YIELDS A RECORD MUSKIE

Moira Lake is still the fisherman's mecca. Fishing on Friday afternoon in the lake 14-year-old Jack Turkington of Manchester, Connecticut, with Bill Williams of Erinsville, caught and landed one of the season's biggest fish, a 30-pound 'lunge which was brought to gaff after nearly an hour's battle. It was the first fish of any size the young tourist had caught. A buffalo spoon was used as bait.

HALF FEE LICENCES NOT AVAILABLE SEPT.

Notification was received from the Ontario Department of Highways by local issuer of motor vehicle licences Major S. E. Vermilyea today that sale of licences at half fee as in previous years commencing September 1st would not go into effect on this date this year.

No definite date for the issue of half fee licences has been named by the Department, but it is believed by the local office that such licences would be available at the beginning of October.

GUARDS PLACED ON HYDRO PLANTS

Trent Canal, Armouries and Other Gov't Buildings Protected from Sabotage

Under the direction of the Ontario Provincial Police guards were placed on all district Hydro plants and sub-stations and at the locks along the Trent Canal over the week end, in an effort to stop sabotage in case of war hostilities. Guards were also stationed in the Belleville Armouries and at the 34th Field Battery headquarters, Church Street.

War veterans, who had been sworn in by Provincial Police authorities for the purpose of guard duty some weeks ago, were immediately notified their services were required as special guards. A 24 hour guard duty, with three shifts, was set-up late yesterday on the Trent Canal and all Hydro substations, including the Belleville sub on Reid Street.

"Merely precautionary procedure," explained Inspector Frank Gardner of the O.P.P. as he completed the placing of such guards today. The guards along the Trent Canal were placed on duty by High County Constable W. E. Smith.

Cleaning Plant Entered By Night

After failing on several attempts to gain entrance, robbers finally forced a front door leading into the Belle Cleaning and Pressing establishment, operated by Adrian Cruji in the old Tiger Tire Plant near the second C.N.R. overhead bridge, and stole considerable clothing some time early Sunday.

The loot taken consisted of overcoats left by the owners for storage, suits of clothes and ladies' wearing apparel that had been pressed. The entire loss is covered by insurance, city police were told by Mr. Cruji.

The robbery was discovered early Sunday by an employee and police investigations proved there had been several attempts made to enter windows and rear doors, before the robbers finally gained entrance by forcing the front door. Mr. Cruji would not personally place any estimated loss on the goods stolen until a complete check-up of the company stock had been taken.

Police are of the opinion that escape was affected in a high-powered automobile, that was seen driving away from that vicinity early Sunday. City police under Chief Kidd made a thorough investigation of the matter.

U.S. MOTORISTS INCONVENIENCED

Alleged they were Halted On Highway by Uniformed Man

United States motorists found themselves called upon to halt and produce their identification cards and other registrations near Milltown early Sunday morning by a man wearing a khaki uniform. Indignant American motorists, who claimed they were being insulted complained to the Belleville City Police Department. Later, however, Provincial Constable Wm. McBrien and H. T. O. Sam Ervine found one Cornelius Barnhart, of Milltown, standing along the highway.

Barnhart was dressed in a military uniform and had only the night before returned from two weeks' military training at Camp Borden. The police alleged today that Barnhart had apparently been imbibing a little too freely.

Strangely enough the man in the uniform did not molest or hinder Canadian motorists, merely stopping tourists from the U. S. A., and requesting their licence cards and registration papers. With the exception of some little embarrassment caused the Americans, nothing serious resulted from the escapade, however.

City police arrested one Frank Bryce, who gave Kingston as his home address, over the week end. Bryce was charged by Trenton police with having stolen a camera and was turned over to the police of that town on Saturday night.

CARELESS DRIVING CHARGES LAID

Excessive Property Damage Results from Two Accidents

Property damage resulted in two motor accidents over the week end, but no serious injuries were reported by H. T. O. Sam Ervine today.

After allegedly falling asleep at the wheel, an automobile driven by J. M. McCreery, of Noranda, Que., and formerly of this city, crashed into a Hydro pole near Chatterton shortly before 4.00 a.m. Sunday morning. The pole was broken off at the base, the car damaged, but fortunately Mr. McCreery escaped unscathed and uninjured. A charge of careless driving was preferred by Constable Ervine.

Early Saturday night a military truck, filled with supplies, turned over on Highway No. 2 near Napanee. Corp. J. Crawford, Kingston, was driving at the time and was enroute from Port Hope with a load of supplies. In attempting to pass another motor vehicle, Crawford applied the brakes of the laden transport too quicqly and the vehicle overturned in the centre of the highway without injurying the occupants. There was considerable property damage here also, but the vehicle was righted and driven to its destination. H. T. O. Ervine preferred a charge of careless driving in this case as well.

Half Number of Trees Planted By City Showing Sturdy Growth

Of an estimated 20,000 new seedlings of various trees planted this spring under a general city reforestation plan on vacant areas through Belleville, it is believed that at present more than half of this number have survived and are showing sturdy growth.

Zwick's Island nursery visited by the Mayor over the week end revealed that nearly all deciduous varieties, the young maples, basswood, yellow birch and elm trees are making a brave show and give promise of attaining mature growth. The softer varieties, Norway Spruce, Scotch and Red Pine and others have not fared as well, it was reported. But the mortality of the young trees has been less than that of half the number, a good average it was stated for trees transplanted to strange soil.

Zwick's Island soil is not of the best for this growth, it was stated, but if the district had been favored by more precipitation earlier, loss of the young trees would not have been as great.

Majority of Belleville Citizens Believe Hitler Must Back Down Or Britain Will Go To War

Twenty-Eight Persons Quizzed by Reporter on Front Street

Belleville's business, industrial and shopping circles placed its faith in the ability of Great Britain to straighten out gnarly tangle that is the European situation today, with the greater majority of twenty-eight persons interviewed on Front Street declaring that war is inevitable if a lasting peace is to be arrived at.

Trim stenographers, clerks in stores, factory-hands, veterans and the "man-on-the-street" generally, answered the question of an inquiring reported with the statement, that England must fight if the German Fuehrer does not modify his demands.

No Doubt of Outcome

There seemed to be no fear apparent as the ultimate outcome of the struggle, if struggle there is. Faith in the country and Empire was voiced by practically all, who were interviewed although in a few cases there was a difference of opinion regarding the position of Canada.

A policeman answered the question with the grin "Sure, we will have to fight, and the sooner we get it over the better".

As Well Now as 5 Years Hence

"We may as well do it now as five years from now," a Front Street store manager answered. "The longer it is delayed, the worse it will be. Hitler must be stopped if this world is to have peace".

A prominent business organization executive shrugged his shoulders, "I don't know," he answered. "I have two sons that are of military age, and if Canada was attacked, I would not hesitate. But I am not in favor of sending over Canadian youth to fight again on a foreign soil. I would go myself if this country were attacked, but . . . ."

"Sure we should go to war", a tobacco store employee stated, "and let the fight be to a decision this time. No draws, and no flukes. A knockout should decide this "battle of the century".

Milk Peddler Optimistic

"Why worry about a war. when I don't think there will be one", an optimistic peddler of milk grinned. "True I think that the situation has arrived at the point where one side must do one thing or the other, but I think Hitler will break down his bluff at the last minute. My study of the situation is that Hitler is faced with trouble inside his borders as well as outside. Yep I'll go again, but wait until the war starts".

"God forbid", a grey-haired day worker said. "I went through the last war, and if another is to come by all means let's get behind England, and keep the horrors of another conflict from this country. We didn't know what war meant over here during the last fight. England. France and Belgium did. They saw their cities and towns razed by shell-fire, but we were fortunate. If it does come, and I can't see now what is to stop it, let's keep war away from this country. by going over and stopping the German before he gets his clutches on Canada".

Says Hitler Bluffing

"Hitler is still bluffing I don't think he will start anything. but Heaven knows how far he will go before he does pull in his horns. England can't back down now, if she does she will lose forever the 'face' tha makes her the best country in the world", a private secretary said.

Half-a-dozen men employed on construction decided the country was good enough to fight for. "It's coming all right, the spokesman of the group stated, "and I hope we will be ready for it. Hitler must be stopped".

JAPANESE FLIERS ARRIVE IN NOME

Seven on Round-the-World Good-will Flight, Start for Whitehorse

Nome, Alaska, Aug. 28—(AP) — Their first and most difficult flight safely over, seven Japanese aviators on a round-the-world good-will flight prepared their twin-motored monoplane today for a hop to Whitehorse, Yukon Territory.

They brought the plane, named the Nippon, down here at 11:02 a.m. (6:02 p.m. EDT) yesterday at the end of a 2,400-mile flight across the North Pacific and Bering Sea.

Plans were to take off again today for Whitehorse, weather permitting, then fly to Vancouver, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles before turning east across the United States.

STORE MANAGER ROBBED OF $700

Stanley Walker Abducted and Forced to Give Over Safe Combination

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 28—(CP)—Manager Stanley Walker of Pollock's grocery was found by police early today, bound hand and foot and blindfolded. He said three men abducted him and forced him to turn over $700 from the safe of the store.

A Provincial Constable who pursued a speeding automobile obtained the numbers of the licence plate and a Province-wide search was started.

Walker was lured to the store by a telephone call that something was wrong at the store and a cruiser would pick him up in a few minutes. When he stepped into the car, he was greeted by two revolvers, he said.

He told police he was ordered to remain on the floor of the car and was blindfolded. He said he was held at a lonely spot for an hour and a half and forced to give the men the combination of the store's safe. Two men departed, only to return with the report they could not open the strong box.

Walker said he was bundled into the car and taken to the store where he was forced at gun-point to open the safe.

Soviet Parliament To Ratify Pact

Moscow, Aug. 28.—(AP) —The Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R., the "Parliament" of the Soviet Union, assembled today to ratify Russia's non-aggression treaty with Germany.

The belief was expressed in foreign circles that Premier Vyacheslaff Molotoff, who also is Russia's Foreign Commissar, would address the body, explaining Russia's shift from the policy of collective security to one of isolation.

Wide prominence was given yesterday to a statement by Defence Commissar Klementi Voroshiloff blaming the refusal of Great Britain, France and Poland to allow Russian troops to cross Polish territory for the breakdown of mutual assistance negotiations among Moscow, London and Paris.

PREMIER DALADIER

Export of all photographs and newsreels was forbidden except for those bearing a visa from the information service.

France was reaching the last stages in full preparedness with progressive mobilization of troops, requisition of transportation and partial evacuation of Paris.

3,000,000 Under Arms

Approximately 3,000,000 men were under arms in the French Empire.

Starting at noon (7 a.m. EDT), all telegrams and cables sent from Paris by all telegraph and radio companies of every nationality had to pass through the government censorship office.

Telephone communications continued, but press organizations in Paris were informed these calls soon would be passed through an official office. Censorship offices were installed hastily in several floors of the Hotel Continental.

Starts Immediately

The General Information Service was expected to start operating shortly. It was created by a decree July 29 and placed under Jean Geraudoux, author who has written many popular plays and books and who has been inspector of diplomatic posts abroad. Military authorities were in charge of censorship.

With Musette bags on one arm and girls on the other, hundreds of French reservists converged on the Gare de L'Est, where blackboards told the time and place of their entrainment.

Tears in eyes, dogs in arms, infants singly and doubly in baby carriages—all were in the picture as wives, mothers, sisters and sweethearts accompanied their men to the final military barrier.

Milling crowds of sympathetic sightseers were kept circulating by the police. Taxis made their way through, carrying French officers and their trunks.

There were youngsters in brand-new khaki and oldsters slightly grizzled wearing decorations won in wars before.

Persons close to Daladier said he had not abandoned the fight for peace, and that he would send another message to Hitler at almost the same time the British cabinet transmits its note to Hitler.

Stand Not Altered

The second letter, these sources said, would not alter France's firm stand in support of Poland.

It would undertake, instead, they said, to persuade Hitler of the "error of his ways" in refusing to negotiate directly with Poland over his claims on Danzig and Pomorze, the Polish Corridor.

This was the latest move in a swift exchange of views between France and Germany, which began Friday with Hitler's outline of his aims to the French Ambassador to Berlin, Robert Coulondre.

France replied Saturday with Daladier's first letter, urging Hitler to negotiate with Poland. Hitler's answer came Sunday in a letter of refusal, flown in haste from Berlin to Paris.

Britain, having received more concrete proposals from Hitler, was expected to send a more detailed note to Berlin.

Parisians were told again to leave the capital, if they could.

If war comes, the French and British strategy is believed by some military circles to be aimed at cutting Italy quickly from her ally, Germany.

NEWS ODDITIES AND BRIEFS

BLACKBOARDS ABOLISHED

Sudbury, Ont., Aug. 28 (CP)—Days of the schoolroom blackboard in Sudbury may be numbered. When school opens next month, pupils will write on yellow glass with purple chalk in the King George public school, most recent addition to Sudbury's school buildings. Blackboards are said to absorb too much light, and all boards will be changed if the experiment proves successful.

BEE CAUSES CRASH

Galt, Ont., Aug. 28 (CP)—Bees are bothersome creatures, especially when you are trying to drive a car, Mary M. Esch of Preston told a police officer. A bee entered her car, buzzed about and caused her to run into a parked automobile owned by Mrs. F. A. McLeod of Brantford. Slight damage was caused both cars.

FARM TO BE USED FOR FALL WHEAT

Clinton, Ont., Aug. 28 (CP)—Agricultural Representative J. C. Shearer has selected W. R. Dougall's farm at Hensall as the place for a test to determine the highest yielding variety of fall wheat and the type of commercial fertilizer best adapted for wheat yield. It is the only test scheduled for Huron County this year.

Sydney, Australia, Aug. 28 (AP) —The British survey flying boat Aotearoa conquered severe storms and alighted at Aukland, New Zealand, late today from Sydney, covering the 1,250 miles in 7 1-2 hours, according to wireless advices.

FIVE RATS KILLED IN CLICK OF TRAP

Raleigh, N.C., Aug. 28 (AP)—If this story gets around, the world may beat a path to the door of E. G. Edney, Pacolet Valley farmer. Edney set a rat trap and covered the trigger with "mash." or cowfeed. The rodents gathered about the trap in a semi-circle for a feast, and when the trap was sprung, five rats were killed.

DOG SENTENCED TO DEATH FOR ONE BITE

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 28 (AP)—"Every dog is entitled to one bite." Attorney Irvin Levin told Municipal Judge Perry Wheeler. But after hearing George Goodhart relate he had to hire two weeks medical treatment after being bitten, the Judge ruled "not that kind of a bite," and sentenced the dog to death.

CRIME OF PERJURY

In Magistrate Menzies' court at London a young man was sentenced to two months in jail after he pleaded guilty to a charge of perjury. "This man went into the witness box," stated the magistrate "and on the bad advice of others told a false story." Magistrate Menzies pointed out that perjury was a serious offense and carried a maximum penalty of fourteen years' imprisonment. In view of that a sentence of two months in jail looks like an inadequate penalty.

Perjury is a serious crime, and every effort should be made to stamp it out in the courts of the land. The administration of justice is based on the theory that those who are called upon to give evidence will tell the truth, and they are sworn to do so. If they commit perjury there can be no justice. False testimony is becoming entirely too prevalent in the courts. There is scarcely a trial in which witnesses for the prosecution and for the defence do not swear to the truth of diametrically opposite stories.

Anyone who takes the trouble to listen to this conflicting testimony can scarcely be blamed for concluding that the trial is a farce. Very frequently cases are dismissed because of this contradictory evidence. Anyone who deliberately goes into the witness box and gives false testimony deserves a very severe penalty.

Both the Chatham News and the Kingston Whig-Standard have expressed strong views of late regarding the prevalence of perjury and its detrimental effect on the administration of justice. "The work of the courts," says The Whig-Standard, "is seriously hampered and justice itself may be jeopardized by perjury. Indeed, the entire motive for perjury is to obstruct or evade justice. If perjury charges were laid in every instance where the law enforcement authorities had sound reason to believe that perjury was committed, even thought the proportion of convictions were relatively low, the deterrent effects of the fear of facing such a charge would, we think, greatly reduce the amount of false evidence given in the courts." — Brantford Expositor.

Belleville Fair Association

THE ONTARIO INTELLIGENCER

THE DAILY ONTARIO INTELLIGENCER is published every afternoon (Sunday and holidays excepted) at The Ontario Intelligencer Building, Front Street, Belleville.

THE OPENING OF THE FAIR

Belleville Fair grounds are the scene of usual fairtime activity now. Tomorrow (Tuesday) marks the opening, Warden Thompson, reeve of Rawdon, officiating at the ceremonies.

The day before the fair opens is usually a time when there is everything to be seen, an endless stream of exhibits into the grounds and placing of them in their proper places. About the horse barns and other buildings many visited on Sunday and Monday to look over the animals. About the grounds hundreds strayed as workmen were setting up concessions today. In city shops and plants and on the farms from which are brought exhibits today and before the opening of the exhibition, there is more than the usual intense activity of this late summer season.

Plans are in last stages. The next event is the beginning of the fair.

Once again it is urged that citizens of Belleville and of the towns and villages and countryside around about prove their appreciation of what this fair means by an attendance which will top all attendances in the scores of years during which fairs have been held in this centre.

Tuesday should be a big day in the fair's history, with a full program, with fine exhibits and with entertainment.

Let everyone make every effort to patronize this institution this year. No one who attends will leave without feeling that fairs like this ought to be continued and made larger year after year in company with the growth of agriculture and of the county centre.

THE EUROPEAN SCENE

An anxious weekend has passed with Chancellor Hitler raising his demands on Poland and trying to convince the French Prime Minister that Germany was entitled to Danzig and the Corridor, while he waited Britain's reply. Hitler's rejection of the French plan of submission of the issue to a conference and his attempt to pry the French away from the alliance with Poland so that Germany might be left to deal with Poland was one of these revelations which indicate to the world what it has to face now if ever in dealing with the Germany that Hitler dominates.

The conquest of Czechoslovakia makes for all Hitler's appeals to logic and to the justice of his cause a poor impression upon the world, which is not going to yield to force. In all the Chancellor's demands is implied force, against which the democracies are firmly set, because the security of the world depends upon reason, and upon mutual confidence of nations and guarantees that agreements will be kept.

The man who created the Polish crisis which has led, it is reported, him to say that Germany's cup of trouble over Poland is full, stands revealed as Nazism itself, the foe of liberty and established institutions.

Italy is anxious that there be concessions, so that there may be no war for which she evidently has no heart.

The Netherlands has mobilized its military strength, a sure sign of a greater crisis than has been. But this is the crisis Hitler made, and he faces two determined great powers which if they take up the sword and gun will not cease until the evil force of Nazism as represented in Germany shall have been crushed and Germany cured of the obsession which dictates Hitler's policies.

WHOLE COURSE OF LIVES DIVERTED

At this moment the world sees a glimpse of the troubles a type of thought and mentality can bring upon mankind. Cities are being evacuated, as many as three hundred thousand persons having left Warsaw, and the exodus from London and Paris and Berlin proceeds. What this means in leaving homes and parting from friends only the imagination can tell. People are hurrying through Central European countries to the frontiers to try and find transportation by train and later by boat for the British Isles and America, while thousands of French and Germans cross the border to their homelands lest war should strike. France has already sent two million men to guard the borders opposite Italy and Germany. These men have all had to leave their jobs and their homes and loved ones to be ready to defend those homes and their friends and keep alive the spirit of France. In intense Poland women dig in the fields trenches to guard their country and many people of all ranks in this country are engaged inin normal and physical labor.

In Germany ration cards have been issued to become automatically effective in the event of war. A despatch from Poland says that there are signs there of rise in prices and that some persons who have been charged with profiteering have been sent to concentration camps and their shops closed.

The whole course of life has been changed throughout many countries of Europe while Hitler keeps alive the crisis he has made but at which he has been faced by a resolute group of nations, who see that Germany's aims are destruction of peace, security or liberty. It is the showdown which France and Britain have decided must come to stop the irresponsible demands and the threats of force from Germany.

SONG

I spread my mind out
On the grass and the clover
And left it day-long
For wind to blow over.
It needed an airing:
Ah, me, it was fusty,
Camphored with winter,
Wrinkled and dusty!
When I came back at nightfall
To claim it again
How sweet and how white all
The delicate fabric—
..o moth and no mar in
(I folded the peace
Of the evening star in)!
Now my each thought
Is windy imprinted,
Aromaed with grass,
Red clover tinted!

A LONDON TAXICAB DRIVER GOT A TIP WHICH TOPPED ALL TIPS. His fare took him to New York with him. All of which goes to show that whatever your station in life it pays to try and be the best in that particular station. Edward A. Barnes, taxicab driver of London, England, is a student of antiques, and when he was engaged by a wealthy Pittsburger to take him around London and show him genuine antiques he was right at home. The fare was William J. Fownes, Jr., retired Pittsburg, Pa., steel man, and he was so tickled with the antique results achieved with the aid of his antique taxicab driver that he presented him with first-class passage to New York and return on the Queen Mary. Barnes is 54 years old, was a sergeant in the Royal Engineers in the World War. He expects to spend two weeks in New York and will visit the World's Fair and antique shops. Mr. Fownes when asked why he was giving the London cabby the free trip, said "Just for fun, Barnes is a very fine antiquarian." And so, we repeat, if you are a taxicab driver it pays to endeavor to be the best taxicab driver possible, and fit yourself to give the very best service possible to customers. The same holds good to all professions and callings.

"THE BUSINESS OF STANDING UP IN A CANOE to change places should either be stopped, or else canoes should be abolished," says the Brockville Recorder Times in drawing attention to the many drowning accidents each year the result of carelessness in moving about canoes or skiffs. "If the owners of such craft would make sure that persons renting the same know something about the handling of canoes and rowboats, we believe that many of the tragedies could be averted," says the Recorder Times, which also draws attention to the fact that there are fewer boat liveries operating today as compared with 25 years ago, and no doubt, fewer people familiar with the proper handling of canoes and rowboats.

THE GREATEST SCANDAL WHICH EVER ROCKED Connecticut, that Puritan, Blue Law State, has been brought to a climax by the sentencing of the Mayor of Waterbury and twenty of his subordinates; the Mayor to ten or more years in prison, the others to lesser terms. Twenty-seven public officials were involved in this case, contractors and owners, who, according to the charges against them, conspired to defraud the city of more than one million dollars over a period of eight years. Of the 27 originally charged, one is a fugitive in Denmark, 20 were convicted, three were discharged, two pleaded guilty and one trial is yet to be held. Tre convicted Mayor rode high in popular favor as a Democratic politician, was even elected Lieutenant Governor of Connecticut. A Waterbury newspaper smelled something "rotten in Denmark" and poked enquiring fingers into the administration, drawing the attention of the taxpayers to certain suspicious developments. At the next election the administration was dethroned by a margin of thirty-three votes and the investigation which ensued resulted in the civic administration being found guilty of graft, alleged to total a million dollars, and sentenced to prison.

The sailing and motor boat races which were held on the bay off the southern portion of Victoria Park were a great success and many spectators enjoyed the sport. In the sailing yacht race there were three entries, namely, the "Portia" owned by W. Fraser of Trenton, the "Cynthia" owned by S. E. Carman and Fay Wills of this city and "Little Nell" owned by Barton Hooey of Trenton. This was an excellent race and resulted as fololws: "Portia, first; "Cynthia" second and "Little Nell" third. In the race for dinghys (16 feet) the entries were the "Viola" owned by J. Munro and J. Ayers of this city, the "Alma" owned by A. Hicks of Trenton, and the "Senga" owned by Mr. Reid of this city. The "Viola" as usual proved to be an easy winner. Although the "Alma" finished second, the "Senga" took second prize on time allowance. This was one of the prettiest races of the afternoon. In the race for dinghys (14 feet) the entries were the "Agnes" owned by H. Rathbun; "Yno" owned by Mr. Sprague, "Jo-Jo" owned by J. Caldwell. The boats started in order given and finished in a like order. In punt race there were three entries, but only one finished, namely, "After You", owned by J. Callaghan. The "Alaska" owned by C. The Classes Scholars Are In

When a child tells us that he is in grade 3 in public school, we have to stop a moment and figure out just what "book" or public school reader he would be using. In our public school days the pupil's standing was indicated by his "book," that is to say the "reader."

The First Book was not really the first book that a boy or girl studied or was taught when he or she first went to school, as the old soft-covered "Morang's Primer" was the book for the beginners. As we remember the books in the order in which we advanced from one class to the other they were as follows: After the Primer came the First Book, then the Part Second Book, the Second, Third and Fourth Books. Then there were classes for each book, junior and senior and some schools had three classes for the Fourth Book, junior, intermediate and senior.

Today there are no senior or junior class but each class is numbered by grades, and it is more logical than the old system. The grade system has been used in United States for quite some time.—Oshawa Times.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

By James W. Barton, M.D.

Weeks of Rest Needed After An Attack of Coronary Thrombosis

About the first thing that happens when blood is pumped out of the heart into the big artery (aorta) to go to all parts of the body is that some of this blood goes directly from the aorta to supply the heart muscle itself.

There are two small vessels called coronary or heart vessels which carry the blood from aorta one to each side of the heart. It is by means of these two vessels and their branches that the heart gets its supply of blood to strengthen its walls so that these walls can continue to pump blood. If anything obstructs or blocks these vessels, then the heart fails to receive enough blood to do its work. These two vessels must carry enough blood to the heart at all times to enable it to pump the ordinary amount of blood to all parts of the body and also the extraordinary amounts that must be pumped when the individual is doing hard work, is digesting a large meal, or is fighting an ailment.

It can readily be seen that anything that blocks these vessels or their branches is a serious condition and may cause complete heart failure. The blocking may be done by a little bit of tissue from vegetable-like growths on valves of the heart, by spasm which closes the mouths of the coronary vessels and prevents blood getting to the heart muscle to nourish it, or to what is called 'thrombosis' where the lining of the coronary blood vessel becomes thickened and blood cannot pass through. When the heart blood vessels are affected, usually all the vessels of the body are affected. In thrombosis, a small part of the heart muscle becomes soft (no blood going to it), may rupture, and scar tissue replaces the muscle tissue. It takes a number of weeks for the spot to heal and that is why rest in bed for six to eight weeks is prescribed after an attack of coronary thrombosis.

Although these coronary vessels or their branches may become blocked and a part of the wall of the heart thus does not receive its blood supply for a time, other tiny vessels in the vicinity of the block may begin to join one another and set up a new circulation of blood at the injured point.

When the coronary vessels are badly blocked and a great amount of scar tissue has taken the place of elastic tissue in the vessels, sometimes, by means of an operation, a blood supply for the walls of the heart is obtained directly from the blood vessels supplying the huge chest muscle.

Letters to the Editor

THE RUSSO-GERMAN PACT AND ITS IMPLICATIONS

Editor, Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir: The non-aggression treaty drawn by Germany and the Soviets came as a thunderbolt to France and England. It had, however, this in common with other sudden visitations that its force is critically spent, and that the damage, if any, is rarely in proportion to the noise made.

At the battle of Jutland, the British started by acknowledging a crushing defeat. It was only a few days later that the news slowly came through that the Gemarns had really lost that famous battle.

The story goes that when the former Kaiser congratulated old Von Tirpitz on his naval victory, the German admiral answered with a straight face, "Yes, Sire, if we should happen to gain another victory as great as this one, we won't have a battleship left."

Let us, then, study the Russo-German pact in all its various aspects and estimate exactly the damage, if any, caused by this clap of thunder.

Russia's Value Exaggerated.

France and England have lost a possible ally—this is the worst that can be said about it. Considering, however, that prior to the pact, the threepower conference had struck an unspecified snag and that the conversations had been interrupted; that in military matters Russia is an enigma while politically she has no common border with Germany; let us add to these points the significant fact that Poland, faced with a war of conquest, steadfastly refused to allow the Russian army free passage through her country, even in the event of Russia coming to her aid. Taking, I say, all these considerations into account it slowly dawns upon us that Russia's value as an ally has been grossly exaggerated.

As for the credit of 80 million dollars granted by Germany to her new ally, we can afford to laugh, as this huge sum of money represents a mere fraction of Germany's daily expenses if she goes to war.

The allies' loss is Germany's gain. We have seen in its true perspective exactly the size of our loss. Let us now endeavor to compute the loss to Germany by this same pact.

In the first place, Hitler has given the death-blow to the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo axis. Neither the Pope, nor the King of Italy, nor Mussolini will tolerate a treaty made with Russia. Italy is fundamentally Catholic and Fascist. It was strange enough to see an alliance between Italy and Germany, two countries who have not a single thing in common, neither in language, religion, ideals, aspirations, inhibitions nor modes of life.

It would be more true to say this alliance was formed between Hitler and Mussolini.

There have been many signs these past weeks that Mussolini was beginning to find the German yoke irksome.

Hitler, by his unilateral action, has shown his two fellows how little they count in his calculations. It is likely that Mussolini will seize this heaven-sent opportunity to secede from the axis.

Tokyo, on the other hand, is directly threatened by this change in Hitler's policy — Russia being now free of any fear of becoming embroiled in a European conflagration, is free to devote all her energies to the settlement of her far-eastern problems.

The Japanese, becoming mired deeper and further in the Chinese glue-pot which is slowly sucking her dry, having, on the strength of Hitler's promises, antagonized irremediably, her greatest benefactor, Britain, is now doomed to failure, and is in no case at all to face a major issue against a united Russia, not to mention Chiang Kai-Shek's new army of three or four million men.

In any case the Japanese cannot help Hitler in his European imbroglio.

The Ukrainians who had fondly hoped that Hitler would help them to conquer their autonomy if not their actual absorption by the Reich, now see their hopes frustrated and will have to turn to the Allies for help to gain their political ends.

Either Hitler is mad, or he must realize, too late, that his great diplomatic victory has, in effect, deprived him, in one sweeping blow, of all his friends and allies.

One most significant fact is that, as soon as the enactment of the pact became known, Poland withdrew all her troops from the Russian frontier and used them to man the Carpathian boundaries and to encircle Danzig.

Incidentally this defection of Russia has had on the Allies, an influence which Hitler has certainly not foreseen—it has anchored in the heart of all governments an ever-stronger determination to stand by their pledges to Poland with all the resources at their command—to call for a final showdown and to crush this time, once and for all, the German menace.

Domei, Japanese News Agency, predicted that since the entire cabinet took the responsibility for the old foreign policy symbolized by the Japanese - German - Italian anticomintern pact, none of the present government would be reappointed.

Worried About Russia

Many Japanese obviously were worried as to whether Russia, taking advantage of her isolation from the European crisis through the pact with Germany, might attempt to hamper Japan on the Asiatic continent.

This might come, it was said, in an attempt to drive into Manchoukuo from the Outer Mongolian border—zone of sporadic hostilities more than three months—or through Japanese-controlled Inner Mongolia into North China.

A long-range duel between gunners in Soviet-supported Outer Mongolia and Japanese-protected Manchoukuo, near the confluence of the Khalka and Khorsten Rivers, has persisted since the Japanese began a counter-attack last Thursday.

The Japanese news agency reported the Japanese, on Sunday, shot down 19 of 40 aerial raiders from Outer Mongolia.

The Empire's Navel Bases

pore into a mighty naval base, with the strongest fortifications, oil tanks and huge storage facilities for ammunition, foodstuffs and all else needed in the event of war, has been fully vindicated by subsequent events. Today the base stands completed and ready for eventualities, more than one hundred million dollars having been spent on the work.

It is said that a British fleet operating from Singapore would be in a position to dominate the Indian Ocean, the Dutch East Indies, New Guinea, Borneo, Australia and New Zealand. But Australia does not rely on that protection alone, she is taking her own measures to defend herself and imperial interests by building a gigantic air and sea base at Port Darwin, on the northern coast, conveniently situated geographically for co-operation with Singapore. Also it has been decided to fortify Penang Island, at the northern end of the Straits of Malacca, Singapore being situated at the southern end. A strong garrison is to be established at Penang, with big calibre guns and the most modern anti-aircraft weapons. "Britain will literally stand astride the route to the Orient," says The Navy, "it is believed that Penang will eventually become one of the strongest of the defended ports of the Far East.

Nor is this all. Over five and a half million dollars has been appropriated for a naval and air base at Trincomalee, the superb harbor in Ceylon. Royal Air Force warplanes have given demonstration flights from Singapore to Penang and thence to Trincomalee. The three bases, it is claimed, will provide Great Britain with a self-contained defensive triangle, dominating the North Pacific and the Indian Ocean.

For the protection of the North Atlantic, the naval base at Halifax, N.S., and at Bermuda in the south are relied upon. South Africa is transforming Robben Island, off Cape Town, into a veritable Heligoland of the south." In the Mediterranean Gibraltar, Malta and Cyprus have been "quietly but effectively" strengthened during the last two years, though the exact nature of the improvements is being kept secret. Oversea garrisons are to be augmented and every portion of the world-wide Empire—by their own efforts, in varying degree, in the case of the Dominions—is looking to its defences. Canada must do its full part, loyally and without grudging. — Hamilton Spectator.

How Do The Birds Know?

In what language do they telegraph the news? How does it get about that suddenly a dangerous wood has become safe for deer, that the people of this place like screech owls, that here the fox need fear no hound?

Only a generation back the sight of a wild animal in what is now Bear Mountain Park would have roused in most watchers regret that they had no means of killing it. Animals were to be shot, nests to be plundered, rare flowers to be uprooted and thrown away.

Yet with wonderful speed, upon the establishment of the park, these primitive notions were replaced by interest and admiration. Crows won champions. Hawks and owls were granted their rights. Beaver drudged away in peace, to the joy of beholders. Box turtles and garter snakes took the sun tranquilly, like the estimable citizens they are. The pileated woodpecker whom few ever had seen, began his carpentry again, undisturbed by so harmless a public. Exquisite wood ducks dropped in and stayed; wildcats and raccoons roamed in the night on velvet feet, close to whirring traffic.

Even northern orchids, of which their foolish gatherers were thought to have picked the last, discovered the new security, and their pink and yellow slippers were seen on the leaf mold in Spring. It didn't take any of them long to find out that this comparatively narrow tract of forest, though trodden by humans and laced by motor roads, was the place for them.

Did they tell one another, somehow, then? Did warbler call to bittern: "Hey—the boys here only look at you and don't hurt." How might peregrine falcons of Ausable Chasm hear about choice accommodations in Bear Mountain Park?

A visit of inspection, to investigate happy rumors, could hardly have encouraged prospective resident. They would have found that a million people a year come to the park, that more than 80,000 camp there, usually with noise and active shenanigan. How could a deer tell that while some of its kind met their death through straying into towns, here the same sort of creatures would welcome her?

To a passing thrush or mink Bear Mountain visitors must look much like hunters, trappers and urchins with slingshots. Yet already the wariest of birds and animals recognize them for friends, perceive a different character.

Are such peacefulness and comprehension of alien virtues contagious? Will a day come when great regions of the world will be like this woodland and men will feel the change with no announcement, telling their kind by their own conduct, as these animals and birds have done, that in a certain place there is inexplicable but proved tolerance and well-being? Will they make for that gathering of unlike beings as sure and swift as orchids, coon and beaver have returned to near-by hills?

Almost it seems credible, when a mired million of humans a year can pass through a wilderness park and harm nothing.—New York Herald Tribune.

Mertha, Queen of the Onions

Of the making of Queens, like books, there is no end. Unless the finale has been reached in the crowning of an "Onion Queen" in Orange County, New York State.

Texas is the strongest State (in the onion sense) below the border—and Elgin, by the grace of King Mitch's peerless product, ranks strongest in Canada. But it took the Polish-American onion-growers of a section of the Empire State to celebrate a two-million-bushels crop in royal manner.

The parade route was thirty miles long—and easily detectable throughout it full length. Believing that in onions (as well as in union) there is strength, German-Americans and Italian-Americans joined the Polish-Americans in the colorful and odorific festival. They gathered 5,000 strong (and we mean strong) for the coronation of 18-year-old Martha Plock as Queen of Onions.

Queen Martha was definitely different from the bathing beauty type of Queen. Instead of peeling off most of her wearables she actually put on plenty of glad raiment.

Again, though she showed no traces of old Mother Earth on her very personable person, Queen Mar that had complied with the rules requiring contestants for the onion crown to labor in the black muck of the onion fields. Fifty-four other genuine onionists had competed strongly with Miss Plock for the throne.

Sixty floats went the full distance, through streets gay with strings of onions and star-spangled banners. And—as you have already guessed—there was a huge American flag made of onion. That drew cheers above the (onion) tears.

Be it noted that a Polish entrant came out on top over the Germanic and Italian groups. Perhaps that was an omen of what may happen over in Poland if bombs instead of aromatic vegetables are the harvest. What a pity Herr Hitler and his Nazis and Signor Mussolini and his Fascists couldn't be satisfied with an onion festival that gave the Polish people a merited break. Over here in a democracy the three racial neighbors live in friendly co-operation, while in Europe—well, it is to weep.—Stratford Beacon-Herald.

Trades Apprentices Needed

The inadequacy of the number of apprentices now being trained to become building mechanics is shown by figures contained in the recently issued 1938 report of the Ontario Department of Labour. It is reported by the Apprenticeship Branch, which administers the Ontario Apprenticeship Act under the regulations of which all aprentices in the building trades are indentured and trained that on March 31, 1938, there were 347 apprentices receiving training — 16 bricklayers, 2 masons, 38 carpenters, 54 painters and decorators, 8 plasterers, 107 plumbers, 21 steamfitters, 25 sheet metal workers and 76 electricians. Of these, 79 were in their fourth year of training and ready to become journeymen—surely an inadequate number to replace the mechanics who are constantly becoming non-effective because of death, old age, accidental injury and change of occupation, let alone to form a reservoir from which to draw as business improves.

At the present time, according to figures obtained from the Ontario Department of Labour, 360 young men are actively on the apprentice roll—15 bricklayers, 1 mason, 49 carpenters, 44 painters and decorators, 9 plasterers, 99 plumbers, 26 steamfitters, 28 sheet metal workers and 89 electrical workers. Of these 86 are in their fourth year of training. These figures are slightly better than for last year, but they still represent an entirely insufficient supply of potential mechanics.

Many contractors argue of course, that the volume of business now being carried on does not warrant the training of more apprentices and they point out also that the labor unions oppose an increase in the established ratios of apprentices to journeymen. The situation, however, is not one of meeting present conditions but of anticipating future requirements. If these are taken into consideration there ought to be a very considerable increase in the number of apprentices currently being trained. — Canada Lumberman.

Mussolini Replies

Prime Minister Mackenzie King has the assurance of Premier Mussolini that the head of the Italian government would "leave untried no effort to safeguard the peace of the world—a lasting peace that is a just peace." The brief Mussolini cable, made public here last night, was the first reply Mr. Mackenzie King had received from a triple appeal for peace.

Late last week he sent cablegrams to President Moscicki of Poland, Chancellor Hitler and Premier Mussolini, declaring they would have the wholehearted support of the Canadian people in any use of their power and influence to maintain peace. Mr. Mackenzie King still awaits replies from Poland and Germany.

Will Move Quickly

If war comes, the government is expected to move quickly. It was believed an order in council necessary to summon parliament into session has been already prepared and can e rushed through and signed by the Governor in a very short space of time. Parliament could be convened a week, it has been estimated.

The War Measures Act of 1914 is still on the statute books and in case of war "real or apprehended," it would cloak the government with broad emergency powers until parliament could gather.

Marching feet echoed in a score of cities over the week-end as the volunteer militia moved to guard the nation's vitals from possible sabotage. Bayonets gleamed along canals, bridgeheads and outside important building and factories. Army tents mushroomed rapidly as the special guards settled down for an indefinite stay.

Troops on Move

Militia lorries and buses loaded with troops were on the move. An anti-aircraft battery stationed at Kingston was shifted to Halifax so the long muzzle of the gun could rake the skies for possible raiders from the sea.

Airports in Nova Scotia received droning visitors from Central Canada as air force squadrons moved down from Trenton, Ont., and Ottawa bases to augment squadrons already in Nova Scotia to patrol the seacoast.

Navy men were on the alert all week-end and Canada's navy ships were manned for emergency. Coastal defence batteries on both coasts have gun crews standing by waiting to go into instant action.

High Praise From Minister

Defence Minister Mackenzie had high praise for the efficiency of his militiamen and the rapidity with which they responded to the call for volunteers, sometimes "at a real sacrifice of a personal nature," as he said in a statement last night. At that time the national security was 90 per cent complete, the Minister reported, and should be 100 per cent in operation sometime today.

The following is a list of the corps or parts of the active militia of Canada which district officers commanding have been authorized to call out under the provisions of section 63 of The Militia Act, for the purpose of manning coastal defences and providing guards for certain vulnerable points. Approximately 10,000 members of the non-permanent militia are affected.

Military District No. 2 (Toronto)—The Governor General's Horse Guards (details); The Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury Regiment (M. G.) (details); The Irish Regiment of Canada (M. G.) (details)); The Lincoln and Welland Regiment.

Military District No. 3 (Kingston)—The Midland Regiment (Northumberland and Durham (details); The Governor General's Foot Guards (details); The Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Highlanders (details); Le Regiment De Hull (details); The Princess of Wales's Own Regiment (M.G.) (details).

NON-PERMANENT

As the trend of international events grew more serious, Attorney-General Gordon Conant called up 50 men from the reserve list to augment the Provincial Police Force in combatting possible acts of sabotage. He reviewed the men yesterday in Queen's Park at Toronto.

Around 100 officers and men of the anti-aircraft battery stationed at Kingston, hastily summoned from training camp, were despatched Saturday night for Halifax amid depot scenes reminiscent of the departure of troops during the Great War. Mothers, wives and sweethearts wept at the railway station as the train loaded with men and anti-aircraft equipment left.

Air Force to Halifax

The Royal Canadian Air Force's No. 2 Army Co-operation Squadron arrived Sunday at Halifax to augment defence forces.

The canal at Sault Ste. Marie and the Welland Canal, key channels in the movement of Western Canada grain, were placed under heavy guard. At Sault Ste. Marie yesterday, citizens expressed resentment when their way to the Ship-Canal Park, a Sunday gathering-place, was barred by bayonets.

The Ste. Lawrence canal system, from Cornwall to Cardinal, was placed under guard according to instructions issued by headquarters of Military District No. 3. Guards were ordered to challenge all persons found loitering near the canals and to make a search if considered necessary.

Members of the Midland Regiment (Northumberland and Durham) patrolled the Dominion Arsenal at Lindsay, pitching camp on the grounds.

Hitler is Willing

Hitler Cites Conditions

In Paris, Daladier had commented on the Hitler correspondence without, in the opinion of some German leaders, doing justice to Hitler's arguments.

Hitler cited what he called "Macedonian conditions prevailing along other parts of the Polish frontier, presumably Upper Silesia. The plain inference was that Germany has claims in this direction, too. Germans use "Macedonian" as a synonym for "terrorist."

To Daladier, Hitler spoke as one soldier patriot to another. He said he wanted nothing more for Germany than Daladier would want for France, if France were in Germany's "intolerable" position.

Advances Argument

France, Hitler argued, would not tolerate a foreign corridor through its territory, so why should Germany?

The argument, it was said in informed quarters, was designed to appeal to the French sense of logic, for which Hitler frequently has expressed admiration.

The demands on Poland definitely were increased, because Hitler had been on record before only for a "corridor through the corridor"—a strip of territory to connect Germany with Danzig and the isolated province of East Prussia.

Now Poland's right to a corridor to the Baltic Sea is conceded no longer. The comment about "Macedonian conditions" farther south was regarded as a hint other claims might be taken up in the future.

The Fuehrer argued he was lenient with Poland.

Only One Offer

"I have made an offer to the Polish government which shocked the German people." he said. "Nobody but myself could even dare to go before the public with such an offer. It could therefore be made only once.

"I am deeply convinced that if especially England at that time had, instead of starting a wild campaign against Germany in the press and instead of launching rumors of a German mobilization, somehow talked the Poles into being reasonable, Europe today and for 25 years could enjoy a condition of deepest peace.

"As things were, however, Polish public opinion was excited by a lie about German aggression....

Declined Proposals

"The Polish Government declined the proposals. Polish public opinion, convinced that England and France would now fight for Poland, began to make demands which one might possibly stigmatize as laughable insanity were they not so tremendously dangerous. At that point an unbearable terror, a physical and economic persecution of the Germans although they numbered more than 1,500,000 began in the regions ceded by the Reich....

"I see no way of persuading Poland, which feels herself as unassailable now that she enjoys the protection of her guarantees, to accept a peaceful solution. I should, however, despair of an honorable future for my people, if it were not determined under such circumstances to solve the problem in one way or another."

The question of whether Germany's enlarged demands left any room for negotiation in the tense Polish-German quarrel remained unanswered. But apparently the problem was made no easier by Hitler's letter.

Daladier Speaks Plainly

"I am bound to tell you personally and our two peoples that the fate of peace still lies in your hands," Daladier told Hitler at the start of his original plea to the Fuehrer.

The French Premier told Hitler France would fulfil her obligations to Poland and was confident of her allies, but, he assured, there is nothing in the Polish-German issue "which could not be subjected to procedure for a just and peaceful solution."

"In such a serious hour," he said, "I believe sincerely that no noble-thinking man could understand that a war of destruction should be undertaken without a last attempt of a peaceful solution between Germany and Poland. Your will to peace could be applied with all determination without doing harm in any way to the German cause."

Daladier, too, recalled that both he and Hitler were "front fighters in the last war" in offering "to make every effort which an upright man can undertake to lead" peaceful efforts "to a good end."

Asks For Answer

"You as well as I know that abhorrence and condemnation the destructions of the (last) war left in the conscience of the people regardless of how the war ended," Daladier concluded.

"The idea I have about you in your outstanding role as leader of the German people on the road of peace, toward the completion of its task in a mutual work of civilization, leads me to request an answer to this proposal.

"If French and German blood flows again like 25 years ago in a still longer and more murderous war, then each of the two peoples will fight with confidence in their own victory. Destruction and barbarism will be the surest winner."

Foreign observers were a little relieved by the fact Germany had not struck at Poland, and that Hitler seemed to be in a mood to argue merits of the situation. It was not expected he would act before gauging carefully the world reaction to telling points he raised in the debate with Daladier.

POLAND WILL

Whoever controls Danzig, he said, controls Poland and to surrender the Free City and the Polish Corridor to the Germans in the so-called interests of world peace would be tantamount to reducing Poland to the humiliating status of a vassal state.

Heavy Troop Movement

All along the German-Polish frontier we saw evidence of heavy troop concentrations on both sides. The German war machine moved along an excellent system of roads with lightning speed. Poland's machine, mainly horse-drawn, rumbled slowly over cobblestoned winding trails which her strategists regard as the nation's second line of defence.

Poland has adjusted her field equipment and defensive tactics to the peculiar terrain of the frontier zone. Should war come her army leaders profess no fear of a sudden break-through by the force of mechanized units.

Hold for Three Months

They are confident their lighter and fast-moving artillery, and their rugged soldiery could hold the Germans in check for at least three months without aid from Great Britain and France. With those powers on the Polish side, Polish leaders say they felt certain victory would be their's should the German army march.

Poland, we were assured, does not want war. She is chiefly interested in going about the business of consolidating her independence gained at a heavy price during the last war and developing her resources.

Few Poles were willing to give recognition to the existence of such an issue as the "Danzig problem." So far as they are concerned Danzig is part and parcel of their nation and will continue to be such as long as the strength of Polish arms can dictate.

"War of Nerves"

Throughout the corridor area and along the frontier to Warsaw the belief prevailed that Fuehrer Hitler's drive for recovery of Danzig is but another phase of his unrelenting "war of nerves." Polish leaders were insistent that Danzig is only a pawn in a larger game that the Fuehrer is playing.

They were convinced the German leader primarily has his eyes on the rich grain and oil fields of Southeastern Europe and it would be in that direction that he would ultimately seek his greater "Lebensraum."

Fear was expressed in some circles that Great Britain and France might succumb to the pressure of "subtle German propaganda' 'and that a serious move might be made to influence Poland to give way.

But Poland, we were told, would never yield at gunpoint. Such a surrender, the Poles believe, would only be construed as a sign of weakness, and serve as an invitation to Fuehrer Hitler to come back for more. He might then direct his attentions to Alsace and Lorraine, Schleswig - Holstein or even Holland and Belgium.

Hitler, it was argued in Poland, is intoxicated with a mad ambition to dominate the world and he would never be appeased until he has brought the Democratic powers grovelling at his feet or his fantastic dream is shattered by a resolute, united stand on the part of the earth's freedom-loving people.

His vacation suddenly ended by the trend of European events, U.S Secretary of State Cordell Hull is shown as he arrived at his offices after rushing back to Washington.

A KING'S COUNSELLOR

No art needs to conceal itself more deftly than the fine and useful art of managing a husband. So discerning wives are grateful for any aid to supplement their talents. During the latter years of King Humbert's reign, which ended in 1900, his Queen and Counsellor Margherita thus confided her successful technique:

"I can overlook many faults in a man", she said, "and make allowances for his shortcomings. One fault, however, I cannot overlook is his not smoking. When the King is annoyed, I give him his pipe; when he is good tempered, I give him a cigarette; when I want him to do anything particular for me, I give him a cigar. With a pipe I can console him, with a cigarette I can delight him, but with a cigar I can lead him anyhow and anywhere."

This Company supplies "the Colonel's Lady and Judy O'Grady" with products which contribute to domestic tranquillity — and it accepts the responsibility that these products must always be good to induce in husbands that state of benign calm in which they are willing to listen to their wives' advice.

Veterans' Parade Is Most Timely Says Col. Bishop

Toronto, Aug. 28—(CP)—Col. W. A. Bishop, Air Marshal of Canada, told a gathering of Great War veterans at the Canadian National Exhibition Directors' luncheon Saturday that now is the time for those "who carried the torch in the grim days of the last war, to throw the torch, with a keen eye, to the youth of today."

"Our hopes and prayers are for peace, happiness and prosperity for youth, but if the ruthless challenge is flung at us, youth will respond with the same gallantry as did Canadian boys in 1914."

Speaking of the parade of veterans, at which he took the salute in front of the grandstand shortly after the luncheon, the Air Marshal said that "this year's parade seems most timely."

"I feel that the spirit of the veterans symbolizes the youth of this country," he added. "Youth needs no goose-stepping to build up their courage for crisis that may be ahead.

"Today the youth of Canada are quite as brave, quite as gallant and quite as spirited as you were 25 years ago," he told the veterans.

British Merchant Vessels Advised By Admiralty

London, Aug. 28—(CP)—The Admiralty, now exercising control over all British shipping, said today British merchant vessels had been advised to stay out of the Mediterranean and Baltic seas.

Shipping will stop at both ends of the Mediterranean British ships already in that sea will continue their voyages, but have been directed to leave Italian ports.

THE NETHERLANDS WILL MOBILIZE

Amsterdam, Aug. 28—(AP)— The Netherlands proclaimed the general mobilization of its army and navy today.

The Netherlands had about 130,000 men under arms prior to the mobilization orders. The first act of mobilization should add 114,000 men to the army or make about 244,000 all told.

The Royal Dutch Navy which includes 12 modern men-of-war has been in readiness for some time. Reservists will be used to fill out skeleton crews on second line ships.

Brussels, Aug. 28—(AP)— The Belgian Defence Ministry, in the second phase of its precautionary mobilization, called to the colors today additional thousands of men for frontier service.

All railroad traffic between Germany and Belgium was suspended last night.

Black Cat Of Downing Street Makes Appearance

London, Aug. 28 —(CP)— The black cat of Downing Street, which rose to fame during the anxious days before the Munich Settlement last September, made a somewhat furtive reappearance before the Prime Minister's residence yesterday.

Crowds gathered before No. 10 awaiting the outcome of the cabinet meeting cheered it when it nonchalantly strolled up. When photographers rushed to the scene, the cat, which proudly posed last fall grew camera shy and bounded away.

While statesmen of Europe are anxiously awaiting the next move in the deadly chess game of power politics by Reichsfuehrer Hitler, the work of preparing for the worst goes feverishly ahead in London. Latest move is the commandeering of London motor buses for the transportation of troops in the event of war. Here you see some of the mobilized buses at a London barracks. Scene is reminiscent of 1915 in Paris when the government commandeered all street rolling stock, including taxicabs, to rush troops to the Marne to stop the German advance.

After seeing the trousseau the guests were invited to the dining room. Mrs. Wanda Sine poured tea and Miss Doris Williams and Miss Bernice Robinson assisted at the tea table.

Mrs. E. V. Ilsey of Seattle, is visiting her parents, Dr. and Mrs. D. H. Ackerul, John Street.

Mrs. E. Holst has returned to her home on Earl Street, after a very enjoyable two months' holiday to Vancouver and other points of interest in British Columbia, returning by way of Toronto, and Campbellford, where she spent a few days at the home of her daughter, Mrs. S. A. Hopping.

Miss Betty Holst, who has been spending the past two months at the home of her sister, Mrs. S. A. Hopping, Campbellford, has returned to her home on Earl Street.

On Thursday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. Jones, Corbyville, Miss Mildred Jones and her sister, Mrs. Robt. E. Empson were hostesses at a delightfully arranged crystal shower, in honour of Miss Ferne Patterson, bride-elect. The rooms were prettily decorated with flowers and on the dining-room table a charming little bride under an arch of orange blossoms, held pink and white streamers, which were attached to the crystal pieces placed upon a beautiful refector also girls' gift to the bride. Miss Mildred Jones read an address and presented the gifts. Miss Patterson expressed her thanks and appreciation to her friends, after which the hostesses served a dainty lunch.

Weddings

PHILLIPS—ANNIS

A pretty wedding took place at the home of the officiating minister, Rev. J. D. P. Knox, 104 West Bridge Street on Saturday afternoon, when Hilda Bernice, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Annis, Oshawa, became the bride of Mr. Hugh Wilbert Phillips, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Phillips of Orland, Northumberland County.

Miss Doris McLaurin was bridesmaid and Mr. Ambrose Jackel was groomsman, while little Misses Phillips and McLaurin were flower girls.

It is interesting to note that the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Phillips (nee Genevieve Vanalyke) were married twenty-six years ago by the same minister, the wedding taking place in Colborne.

AT THE BELLE

"GOODBYE MR. CHIPS"

The Toronto Daily Star in a recent Editorial speaks in the following terms of "Goodbye Mr. Chips" now on the Belle Theatre screen:—

The secret of youth, sweetness of character, faith, selfless devotion, peace of heart and mind and the grandeur of tradition is packed into the story and film, "Goodbye Mr. Chips." To be perpetually in the company of youth is to remain young in heart. Those who deal with children, who daily live with them and help to mould their lives achieve a status of peace and happiness also for themselves.

But to win this secret of youth and inner peace depends on a number of things; temperament, outlook and character. That is why "Goodbye Mr. Chips" is not so much the story of all men or all teachers, but of a unique and memorable personality who was a teacher. Such persons are present and wield their influence around us here, now; they always have and always will, and the world is much enriched through them.

No more beautiful monument could be laid to honor the life of a man than has been done by James Hilton to "Mr. Chippy," the Latin master of Brookfield school. It is equally a tribute to a woman, who with soft, honest feminine graces, infinite tact, sincere love and abundant goodwill, leaves an indelible imprint on everyone. In selecting and filming this story, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has demonstrated the unique powers of the screen preserve, the poetry, romance, tragedy, gentle satire and humor that is contained in the original. Some people have gone to see "Mr. Chips" two and three times and this is understandable; it is like going to have a treasured visit with your beloved teacher after you have grown up.

The movie industry has been criticized, and often with cause, for its unwise choice of story material, especially because children form a large part of its audience. There are times when a good story is spoiled by an unwise choice of actors and sometimes a good story skilled performers are spoiled by poor direction. Those who make movies, are, after all, human, and it is human to err. But here is a film which is supremely satisfying on all counts: story, acting and direction. Mr. Robert Donat, who is admired and respected for his many excellent performances, achives in "Mr. Chips" a new record. Miss Greer Garson as "Mrs. Chippy" is a real find. The schoolboys are natural. In fact there are 153 speaking roles in this film and there is not one jarring note. Mr. Sam Wood, who directed it, claims that this is because it was filmed in London, where the choice of character actors is easier than elsewhere. In this, then, "Goodbye Mr. Chips" is a triumph also for the British-made film. After its 3 weeks' Toronto premiere at Loew's Theatre the film will soon begin moving about the Neighborhood theatres and will continue to bring to each member of the family, young, old and middling, an extraordinary delightful experience.

AT THE McCARTHY

"FIVE CAME BACK"

Now playing at the McCarthy theatre is the dramatic screen triumph that already is spoken of as definitely one of the year's 10 best, "Five Came Back."

It is a story that is stark...... startling .... different .... revolving around the experiences of nine people trapped by an airplane crash in the head-hunters jungle in faraway Brazil!....their crippled plane can carry only five away!.. who was to stay and die .....and who to do the choosing?.... You have never seen anything like this on the screen before!.... scene by scene that great climax builds .... word by word and act by act emotions are unleashed! A desperate human cargo—all facing death —or life for five.... the superb! ... romantic! Dramatic achievement that has made motion pictures your best entertainment.

The great cast of this production "Five Came Back" includes Chester Morris, iron-jawed pilot whose word in the air was law, Lucille Ball, lady of leisure, fleeing unpleasant disclosures, Wendy Barrie, socialite heiress on her first elopement John Carradine craven-hearted detective escorting a prisoner, Allen Jenkins, gangster chaperone of his chief's little son, C. Aubrey Smith, botanist absorbed in search of science, Kent Taylor, man-of-action, co-pilot of the plane, Joseph Calleia, political prisoner on way to his doom, Patric Knowles, wealthy wastrel, eloping with socialite heiress—and Elisabeth Risdon, charming wife of the absent-minded botanist. The management of the McCarthy theatre takes pleasure in presenting "Five Came Back", for your enjoyment and pleasure and in addition present as an added attraction, the first football story of the new season "Swing That Cheer" featuring Tom Brown, Robert Wilcox, Andy Devine, Constance Moore and Ernest Truex. Also presented is an all-star comedy entitled "Marriage-Go-Round" that is a real "tears-in-your-eyes" laugh riot.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

When You Introduce One Person to a Group

If the group in the room is small say six or seven people, an arriving guest is introduced to everyone. Each one in the group is presented in tre order in which he or she is sitting or standing, not first the women and then the men. The name of the newcomer need not be repeated for each introduction, but it may be repeated for the benefit of the person or persons toward the end of the group, who may not have heard the name in the first introduction.

Do not rush through these introductions. Give the guest who has just arrived an opportunity to associate name and face, making it easier for her or him to start a conversation after the introduction.

When the group is a large one, we should not attempt to introduce an arriving guest to everyone in the group. The hostess may think that it is socially awkward and ungracious for her not to do this, but the guest will be grateful to her if she does not put him or her through the distrssing experience of being taken around the room and introduced to everyone. It is far better if the hostess introduces the newcomer to two or three people nearest her. She graciously brings the newcomer into the conversation by saying something like this, "We were just talking about the new movie at the Main Theatre. Have you seen it?"

At appropriate opportunities, introductions will naturally "spread to other people or groups. But, whether introduced or not, the newcomer chats with other guests.

Planning a Quiet Wedding

Dear Mrs. Beeckman

Will you please help me with various questions I am trying to solve about my wedding? My mother is not very well, and we cannot afford an extravagant wedding. Please tell me if you think my plans so far are correct for a late October wedding.

1— I would like to be married in the chapel of our church, or in the minister's study, with only my parents, the groom's parents and my fiance's sister and her husband as witnesses. Do you think this a good plan?

2—Then I would like to have an "open house" reception for about seventy-five guests. Buffet supper and cocktails. We know of a very good maid who will help Mother with preparations for this. Would you suggest a menu?

3—The time of the wedding and reception will depend on when our train leaves for New York. Now soon after the wedding should we have the reception and how long will we be required to stay?

4—What kind of announcement should we send out for this kind of arrangement?

Dorothy

1—Yes, I think that, under the circumstances, the wisest plan would be to have the ceremony performed either in the chapel or in the minister's study. It is customary for the bride to have her own sister or a favorite cousin or an intimate friend as her attendant. Have you considered this . . . or is your fiance's sister your closest friend?

2—I'm not so sure about the wisdom of certain details of this plan. If your mother is not very well, and you are planning to have only one maid to assist her in preparing for a buffet supper, won't this be too much of a tax on her strength?

In any case, I suggest that your menu be of the simplest. You can undoubtedly ask several of your men guests to help with the mixing and serving of the cocktails. And in your city you could, of course, find an excellent caterer who would make and deliver small, thin sandwiches of various kinds; these will not be very much by the dozen. The caterer also would rent the necessary dishes, glasses, cups and saucers, linen and necessary containers for the occasion.

You should have the dining-room table set for buffet service. The bride's cake (a white, iced cake, as large and elaborate as you wish) would probably be the centre piece, and after you cut the cake, it can be served with ice cream for dessert.

You should have a non-alcoholic alternative for the cocktails . . . maybe a very cold fruit punch. And two or three of your girl friends could take turns presiding at the end of the buffet table at which is the coffee (hot coffee) service.

These items would be the simplest and most easily planned-for menu for whatever time of day you decide on. What items you add to this menu should depend on your budget and your convenience.

3—The reception customarily is held directly after the ceremony. But since you are having so few at the ceremony, you can properly have your reception at any time convenient to you.

You and your bridegroom may leave the reception directly after the wedding supper is over, and thus give your guests the opportunity of saying good-by to you after you have changed to traveling clothes. Or you may wait until the guests have departed. In other words, it is correct for you to leave at any time you wish, so long as your departure doesn't seem too soon after the guests have arrived at the reception. But you can regulate that after you have decided on your train time.

4—I wonder if you don't mean invitation, not announcement? The invitation to this informal kind of reception would appropriately be by written notes. To relieve your mother of this task, you should write these notes.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

Tells Her He Won't Marry

Dear Miss Fairfax

About five years ago my brother brought a young man to the house, and we all liked him very much. For the past year he has been taking me out riding or swimming, and we have also gone to shows and a party or two. He's a year younger than I am, and I am 23.

Now he tells me that, as he never intends to marry, we ought not to see so much of each other. Of course he can't be aware of my love for him, and I know he doesn't go out with other girls. Now why do you suppose he said that to me?

In Doubt

I shouldn't advise you to lose any more time on a young man, a year younger, who says he never intends to marry. He probably feels he can't support a wife and does not wish to take up your time. If he sees you going around with other young men, he may change his mind about getting married.

'Uncertain, Coy and Hard to Please'

Dear Miss Fairfax

Does a girl who realy loves you treat you coolly at times? Does she love you and one night act very sweet and the next cool and distant.

She, the girl I'm worrying about, insists she loves me very much. Yet she becomes distant toward me. What causes this and what should I do to stop it? We're engaged. Have I any reason to believe this will continue after marriage? Even during those cold and distant times, she contends she loves me.

Worried

Don't worry about the blow-hot, blow-cold treatment of the girl. If she were always the same it might not be natural—she'd be acting the part of the adoring little girl. And while some are always adoring, others have their ups and downs. You can't rush things at top speed always. Imagine a piece of music played constantly fortissimo.

Bluest of Eyes Not Always Honest

Dear Miss Fairfax

I'm 18 years old and in love with a married man. He has asked me to go out with him but I'm afraid of what might happen if his wife shows up. He is separated from her but won't give her a divorce, and he doesn't want her to come back to him. Says he'll only give her a divorce if absolutely necessary. I suppose he means, if he should ever fall in love again.

He proves he is honest, because he told me he was married, when I first met him. Also, he has the bluest of eyes. He's 25 years of age. Don't tell me to forget him—I can't.

Cannot Forget

I see, my dear, that you're another one of those girls who tells your symptoms but decline to take your medicine. So you can't forget him: there's no use telling you to do that.

What do you think about a man separated from his wife, won't give her a divorce, yet doesn't want her to come back? This seems the "dog in the manger" tactics to me. But if at 18, with the whole world before you, you insist on messing up your life what can one advise?

In spite of the poets, blue eyes do not necessarily mean innocence.

Fashion Flashes

THAT FIRST COOL WEATHER frock may well be black faille, moire or satin. Slim frocks with the fullness drawn to the back lead the march of silhouettes.

Still first in our affections is the alliance of black and white. A slim evening dress of black net has a wide hem of white starched lace. Lace also outlines the neckline and makes the shoulder straps.

In the lead for the smart wardrobe is the richly-trimmed cloth suit. A new model of dull black woollen combines a loose hiplength jacket trimmed with collar and revers of fox which twist into pockets and end in heads at the hem of the jacket. The skirt is flared.

Everything goes for hats this autumn. A tiny one-sided topper of black velvet is balanced by an enormous bow of striped taffeta in dusty rose and medium blue.

Any-season fashion always sell. In this category is the travel or casual coat of oatmeal or beige tweed with big collar or tuxedo revers of natural blonde lynx.

A good choice for afternoon wear is a frock of slate blue sheer woollen. The slim skirt is tiered onto a snug bodice with a row of tiny gilt buttons down the front. Tiny collar is white faille.

A treat for some lucky girl is a full length box coat, with collarless neckline and bracelet length sleeves, fashioned entirely of silver fox.

Body Lice and Head Lice Keep to Their Own Fields

Head lice and body lice must have an agreement between them as to division of territory. And they abide by it, too, for the head lice stick to the scalp, while the body lice do their work only on the victim's body. Some people have lice that attack them in both areas, you say? Well, if they do, it is because they have both kinds.

Like head lice the body lice are gradually becoming less and less common. In my section there was an outbreak of them every spring. You could be pretty sure of that.

The reason was that men went to the lumber camps in the winter, and in those days lumber camps weren't the models of cleanliness most of them are today. The men were herded together in small quarters they slept together, so that if one had lice it wasn't long before the whole camp was polluted with them. Lumber jacks used to tell me how they would spend all day Sunday killing the nits in their clothing with a hot iron.

These men returned to their homes when operations in the bush were over. Some of them didn't care much about the lice. They had got used to them, and just brought them home without thinking. Others would try to clean up before they returned, but a nit or so would remain in their clothes, and in a few days the whole family would be scratching.

Please understand me, I am talking of the old time lumber camps. Those we have today are models—at least some I've seen. The men are fed well, their quarters are kept scrupulously clean and provision is made for the men to bathe. Very different from the old conditions.

When these incipient outbursts of lice came along, I would advise the family what to do—wash themselves carefully every day and boil their clothing carefully. The bathing removed the lice from the body, and the nits, or eggs, which the lice had laid in the clothing were destroyed by the boiling.

Many mothers try heroic measures when one of her children happens to "catch" lice. I remember one serious aftermath to a delousing I was called to attend. The mother had rubbed a quantity of coal oil on the child's head to kill the lice. The youngster got too close to a flame and his head caught fire. The boy's father managed to smother the flames, and then he came for me, for there was no telephone nearby in those days.

When I got to the farm house, I found the child badly burned about the head. I worked with him for a long time, and finally got his burns fixed up. Fortunately he recovered from his burns with nothing more serious than some scar tissue and a few bald spots on his head to show for it.

This talk about lice will no doubt sound very familiar to men who served overseas in the last war. Often my soldier friends tell me of the ravages of the cooties, and how ashamed and embarrassed they were when they first became infected.

I understand that feeling too. One day a minister called and told me there was a man lying in the ditch near his home. I went over and the two of us investigated. On examination I saw he was pretty sick, so the two of us loaded him into my car and took him to the hospital.

About a week or so afterward I spent an afternoon with the minister, and we both did a bit of scratching. It was hot weather and we blamed the heat for it. The fact was we both had caught lice from the old tramp we had taken to the hospital. But we never admitted it to each other.

A BIG HAND FOR ONE of the prettiest suits we have seen! Sheer black silk printed on an all-over design or green leaves and tiny white flowers. The flared skirt and trim, tailored jacket are complemented with a white chiffon blouse.

Can't go wrong if you get a black satin frock for now and months to come. A model of pure silk shirred through the bodice, flat over the midriff and tying in back in a bow is becoming to slim and not-so-slim.

College clothes indicate what the business girl as well as the co-ed will wear. At a recent show there was much applause for a campus velveteen in red and black checks. A two-piece model, the jacket blouse has two back panels curving from the yoke to end in a little flared peplum. Gilt metal buttons. Back flares to gored skirt.

Look-out for brown as a fashion hue come autumn, and for such vivid contrasts as a sports hat and belt in mustard yellow antelope.

"The GLASS SLIPPER"

by MIGNON G. EBERHART

Greer Garson, and Robert Donat, in the charming heart-warming romance, "Goodbye Mr. Chips" now at the BELLE

CHAPTER 22.

"Mrs. Hatterick, think; did Juliet Garder tell you that Crystal Hatterick was murdered?" the coroner continued.

Rue was on oath, and the question permitted an honest answer.

"No," she said clearly but held her breath for the next question.

Guy was purple and, at that stage, could do nothing. An inquest is not a trial, and there are leniencies.

"Did she tell you who murdered Crystal Hatterick?"

"No."

"Isn't it possible, judging from your knowledge of the situation, that Juliet Garder had some evidence bearing importantly upon the murder, if it was murder, of Crystal Hatterick?"

Guy got up and sat down again. Rue said: "I don't know."

But the point had been made.

Rue was dismissed. A nurse from the hospital, trim and scrubbed-looking in tailored street clothes, gave Rue a recognizing little nod as she passed her, and went to the witness chair. She told of seeing Julie at lunch the day of her death and that she was in good spirits and that there had been nothing that she knew of to suggest suicide.

"You talked with her at lunch?"

"Yes."

"Did she mention the police inquiry into the death of Mrs. Crystal Hatterick?"

"No."

"Did she—did you have reason to believe that she believed Mrs. Hatterick had been murdered?"

"No," said the nurse, Elizabeth Donney, after a moment.

The coroner frowned. "But she did seem to be in good spirits?"

"Yes."

"Nothing at all to suggest suicide?"

"No."

She, too, was dismissed.

It was not quite noon when the verdict was returned and it was that Juliet Garder was the victim of murder at the hands of a person or persons unknown. In the verdict, naturally, nothing was said of Crystal Hatterick. That inquest would come later; that they believed her murdered was an open inference.

That noon the papers made official statements. Both women had been murdered.

But there were as yet no arrests.

x x

It was that night that, besides the columns devoted to the inquest, a curious small story found its way to the newspapers.

A bartender in a little restaurant and bar on a back street not far from the Hatterick house claimed that on the day of Julie's death a girl much resembling her pictures and wearing a plain brown hat and coat had come into the restaurant and had had two cocktails. The first one she poured into the potted palm near her table; it was why he had remembered her. The second one she drank.

The story, it developed, had reached the police and the newsboy who had telephoned to both, papers by way of an excited bus boy who had telephoned to both, saying that the bartender, seeing a picture of Juliet Garder in the paper, had commented on the likeness. But the bartender's story, amplified under police inquiry, was actually not amplified but the reverse. He wasn't sure it was the girl; the restaurant side had been dark because it was a dark day and in the slack time between lunch and dinner, not lighted.

And she had been alone.

He told the police that and stuck to it. He wasn't able, even, to make a definite identification of Julie.

Had he not surrounded his story with so strong an atmosphere of uncertainty it would have lent color to the suicide theory which, at that point, Guy said he intended to build upon when it came to a trial.

It was that night, too, that Rue asked Brule to send Alicia away.

She did more than ask, she demanded it—shaken by her own courage.

It was, really, because of Andy.

That night as she entered the little guest room Brule called to her from his study next door and she went in. Guy had just gone away after a long talk with Brule.

Brule said abruptly: "Sit down Rue—you're not forgetting what I told you about not seeing Andy?"

She had not seen Andy, except at the inquest briefly, that day. Brule's straight black eyebrows made a line across his face. He went on brusquely: "Not that Andy isn't all right; he is. But just now—"

Again an unexpected current of rage caught her.

"Don't you think then, just now, it would be better to send Alicia away?"

Instantly that impenetrable mask seemed to slip over Brule's face; there was a moment of silence while he watched her. Then he said: "I see. So that's the way the land lies. Who told you?"

It was like Brule. She would meet his own method of attack.

"You were honest enough about our marriage; I believed you. But you didn't tell me you asked me to marry you because of—Alicia."

His eyes narrowed a little.

"I suppose it was Alicia who told you. Well—you want to know the truth, and I'll tell you the truth. I did marry you because of Alicia." He leaned back in his chair and waited for what she might say.

And there was enough she wanted to say. A very flood of fury, of accusation, welled up, clamoring to be spoken, to be cried out angrily. Humiliation has its own special cutting power, and she felt that keen edge so acutely that it was like a physical wound.

But there were things Rue had learned about self-control. She said at last, slowly:

"You've not failed in any way to keep the terms of the marriage you offered me. But now that I—know the truth, I cannot have Alicia in the house. If she stays here I must go."

"Where?"

It confused her; brought her up short to regard the practical aspect of it.

"I think I could find work. I've done so before."

"Not if I refused to let you return to the hospital."

"I don't think," said Rue slowly, "that you would be so ungenerous."

"In any case you've forgotten the police and our present situation. You can't go away. Or at least if you did there would be a lot of to-do on the part of the newspapers—comment and speculation. And in all probability a policeman or two would go with you. You wouldn't much like that."

"It can't—last forever."

"Look here, Rue," said Brule suddenly. "Are you in love with Andy? You'd better tell me, you know." He paused and then went on: "He's been making love to you, hasn't he? I asked you that once before. Oh"—he put his hands up toward her in a quick gesture as if to check words of defence he felt were coming—"I know I've not exactly the right to ask you. Except—you are my wife, you know."

"Alicia . . . ." said Rue, half whispering.

"All right. I'll—tell you the truth, Rue, so far as I can. Alicia must stay, if for no other reason than that she's Steven's fiancee and we've got to have her friendship."

"Poor Steven," said Rue. "He's in love with her."

"Well," said Brule. "What about it? That's all right . . .. You think I'm inhuman, don't you, Rue? Perhaps I am, but nevertheless, I expect you to go along with me in this emergency."

"Exactly what do you mean?"

There was a sudden, amused sparkle in his eyes.

"You were always like that, Rue", he said. "In the hospital, I remembered, all i's dotted and t's crossed."

"You—" she began and stopped, for it would have sounded friendly.

"I demanded it, I suppose you were going to say." A shadow went over his face. "I'm responsible for too much, Rue. 'Things we have done that we ought not to have done' eh? Funny how the Book of Common Prayer manages to put its finger on so many of humanity's common failures. Well, just now, I mean—do as I say. Remain here yourself, of course, and Alicia will remain in the house. Don't see too much of Andy just now.

Brule was always clever about getting, in one way or another, the thing he wanted.

"Why don't you want me to see much of Andy?" It wasn't jealousy. Rue knew that, therefore she could ask it.

"Newspapers," said Brule promptly. "Talk. We are very much—too much—in the public eye just now."

"But I should think Alicia's presence here—" She checked herself. She leaned forward, fingers tightly interlocked. "Brule, why did you think Crystal was murdered? You must tell me that much. Why did you think it necessary to—actually to marry someone else in order to protect Alicia in case the inquiry into Crystal's death ever arose? What happened before Crystal's death? What had Alicia to do with it? Why—"

"Wait a minute. Who told you all this?" He paused, and as she didn't answer, he went on quickly and angrily: "It doesn't really matter, of course who told you. I can guess. But get these facts straight, Rue. I did not know Crystal was murdered—and thus there would be no reason at all for me to —marry you to prevent talk and suspicion touching Alicia. That's sheer nonsense."

"You went immediately to Alicia we had talked of Crystal's death. night we were going to the opera and you sent Andy to take me." She said it with a kind of impersonal detachment; a mere stating of facts.

Brule rose, paced impatiently up and down the small rug and paused in front of her to stare angrily down at her.

"Now listen to me, Rue. I did go to see Alicia that night. And the night the inquiry began. The But understand this: in the beginning, at the time Crystal died, I really thought she had either killed herself or had made what she intended to be merely an attempt at suicide—and the attempt had turned into the real thing and she died. That's what I really thought."

CHAPTER 24

"Why did you think Crystal killed herself?" Rue asked Brule.

"Because Crystal—Crystal was extraordinarily determined about anything she wanted. It's not a pleasant thing to say, but it's the truth; if Crystal had decided that by using a threat of suicide she could get something she wanted, she would use it as a threat. Crystal—well, just believe me when I tell you that, for it's the truth. Believe me and be patient with Madge, poor child . . . At any rate that's what I thought; Alicia kept hinting at murder, but it didn't seem possible—then. So when the police inquiry began and I heard about those confounded letters, naturally I went straight to Alicia to ask her why she had suggested murder when she did—right after Crystal's death. I arranged to meet her about nine-thirty or so; she said she'd leave the opera, and I was to pick her up in the car, and I did. I didn't see you and Andy; and I did send Andy to take you because I thought you'd be disappointed about not going, and yet I had to talk to Alicia—I had to find out why, when Crystal died, as long ago as that, Alicia had thought of murder."

"And did you—"

"No. She—she either knew nothing or wouldn't tell me. She knew—or said she knew—nothing of the letters. If I could only discover who wrote those letters! It's got to be someone close to us; no one else would care. I suppose I have enemies, but I can't think of anyone who would do anything just like that—who would know, even, the circumstances. There's only Madge, Steven, you—"

He watched her anxiously for a moment. "Would it help you remember events of that day if we could find the charts?"

She looked at him doubtfully.

"I don't know. Perhaps. Where are the charts?"

"I don't know. Somehow I don't think they were destroyed. But Gross can remember nothing about them. I certainly didn't take them away from Crystal's room. Madge says she doesn't even remember seeing them; I've even asked Steven about them, and he said, 'Charts? What charts?' I know Crystal's medicines were thrown out; Rachel, I remember—or someone—asked me about them, and I said, naturally, throw them away."

Rue said after a moment "If you thought of suicide—"

"Crystal wouldn't have put poison in her medicine. She would have taken it alone—and now it seems she didn't do that."

"Brule, who could have put the poison in the glass in my room?"

"Anyone in the house, of course; anyone who could have got hold of the stuff. That's another thing, Rue, that convinces me you must have some extremely important bit of evidence in your possession even if you don't know it. For that attempt on your life—wasn't really an attempt on your life, I mean it wasn't meant to succeed."

"You mean it was a —threat?"

"Exactly. You've thought that yourself, haven't you? You see, even if you had poured water into the glass, you would have known at your first taste that there was something wrong. You'd never have taken enough to kill you."

"It's not been—exactly pleasant, thinking of it," said Rue in a low voice.

"It was a threat. Think of it only as that."

"Who—"

"I don't know. Madge—so far as I know—has had no access at all to the stuff that was found in the glass. Alicia I don't know about, but I'd say offhand she wouldn't have had them with her, that night for she had no chance to send for her things. Steven, of course, has a supply of practically everything there is."

"Steven!"

"Certainly. He's had neuritis for years; every time he gets an attack he gets scarced about his hands. The only thing I can do for him is keep him supplied with all kinds of sedatives."

"Then Steven had the poison that was found . . . " Her voice broke off. Brule nodded coolly.

"Oh, yes. The poison found in Crystal's body and in Julie's. None of these drugs is harmful except in excess. As you know. But I had access to them too; and Andy. And you yourself, Rue."

She leaned forward again, anxiously.

"Brule, there's something that's worried me. I'm afraid the police have found it. Yet if they have I don't see what's keeping them from arresting me at once. I—"

"Arresting you!" He got quickly to his feet and came to stand beside her. "What on earth do you mean?"

"My—I had a lot of medicines. In a little bag. Left over from nursing—you know a nurse gradually acquires a lot of medicine."

"Where is it?"

"I don't know. I brought it here—in a trunk, I think, along with my other things. It may be in my room; I can't think where else it would be. There are shelves and drawers in the dressing room; it must have been placed there. Rachel might remember; she helped me unpack. But I've been—I haven't wanted to ask her. And the police have closed the room. I've had to ask permission just to go in and get—clothes and things; a policeman watching me all the time. I couldn't search for the bag."

"What was it in?"

"I don't remember exactly; a pretty complete supply, I suppose."

"Was there morphine in your drug supply?"

"Yes, of course. I don't know how much. I'd never had occasion to draw on my own supply; it had accumulated gradually. There couldn't have been much."

"But enough," said Brule, "enough . . . . " The look on his face frightened her. He saw that, too, and said quickly: "Well, when the room is opened we'll have a look. If the police had found it they would have arrested you instantly. So almost certainly they didn't. If someone else did —we'll find it. Look here, Rue." He put his hand suddenly under her chin, lifting her face so he could look directly, deeply into it.

"Rue—it's asking a lot, perhaps. It's asking a—a little blindness and a lot of faith on your part. But will you—trust me? And do the things I've asked you to do?"

His hand cradled under her chin softly. She had all at once, with breath-taking sharpness, a desire to turn her face, moving it softly against that hand. So her lips touch it.

Trust them, he'd said. Do what he asked. But that meant accept Alicia's presence and all that presence implied.

Pride is a luxury of price.

She moved her face from the caressing cradle of his hand. She stood up and turned toward the door.

"I can't do anything else," she said clearly but, despite herself, not quite naturally, and went away.

CHAPTER 25

It was the next day that Rue went to the hospital. It was that morning, too, after Rue (without telling anyone what she had planned to do) had ordered the car, that her own bedroom was at last opened.

She went immediately to the opened room. She stood for a moment at the threshold, thinking of Crystal and thinking of Julie. The room was in slight disorder; and it had evidently been searched minutely.

She went to the large cupboard-lined dressing room.

She was still searching when Rachel, neat and efficient in her crisp morning uniform, appeared in the doorway and asked if she could help.

Rue, standing on a footstool in order to search a shelf, sighed and got down.

"I'm looking for a small brown leather bag," she said. "I think it was somewhere here—on a shelf perhaps. Have you seen it?"

Rachel hadn't. Together they looked again, but the little bag, shabby from years of constant use, was not there.

Rachel vaguely remembered it.

"A small bag," she said. "Yes, I remember. I unpacked it myself when I unpacked Madam's trunks. I believe I placed it in a drawer. There were little boxes of medicines and some things that—looked like the doctor's instruments in it."

"Rachel," said Rue on an impulse, "there's something else that's been lost. Perhaps someone has already questioned you."

Rachael's rather broad, dark face was blank.

"Yes, madam?" she said inquiringly. Rue took the plunge.

"When Mrs. Hatterick — I mean —"

"The first Mrs. Hatterick—"

"Yes. When she was ill we kept what we called charts—sheets of paper, printed forms, on which we wrote the progress of her illness—things like her temperature and the medicine that was given and—"

"Yes, madam."

"You remember?"

"Yes, madam. They were kept on a little table by the door."

"Exactly. Rachel, after she died and when the room was cleaned, do you know what happened to those charts?"

The blankness on Rachel's face had intensified itself.

"No, madam," she said instantly. It was too prompt.

"You've—already been questioned about it?" said Rue slowly, watching the maid.

"Yes, madam. The police and Dr. Hatterick and also Dr. Crittenden questioned me. I know nothing of the chart."

"But you—it was you who cleaned the room afterward."

"Yes, madam. But I know nothing at all of the chart."

She's lying, thought Rue and attempted persuasion.

"No one would blame you, Rachel, if you had put them away someplace and forgotten them. Or—even if you know what happened to the charts, but didn't want to tell the police for fear of getting yourself in any way involved in this—this horrible thing. No one would blame you; you would still tell me."

The very slight hesitation, the swift weighing of what Rue had said and the instant of choice, convinced Rue. For the maid's eyes wavered, then fixed boldly and with determination upon Rue's. She said:

"I know nothing of them, madam. . . .. Shall I clean the room now and prepare it for Madam?"

In the car Rue pondered over it. She had told no one that she was going to the hospital. It had been an overnight decision. Somewhere in the record of Julie's last day of life lay the secret of her death.

Rue's mind touched again that curious story told by the bartended; curious because if someone had been with Julie it would not have been curious.

Well, she would see the girls—nurses who knew them both so well. Tight-lipped from training and habit, reserving their cool, pregnant opinions, they would not, any of them, have been inclined to talk much to the police. Even if they had known anything.

Something about Elizabeth Donney had perhaps suggested that trip—some intangible girding of herself against the questions hurled at her; that and the friendliness in the nod she'd given Rue.

She made her way to the nurses' dormitory. Elizabeth Donney was on duty. But three nurses of her own graduating class were not on duty; they would tell Elizabeth that Rue had asked for her; they were anxious to talk; they exclaimed, too over Rue, hailing her back to the fold.

And they talked of Julie; soberly, trying not to show the horror they felt. The trouble was they knew nothing; Julie by some miracle of secrecy had even kept the fact of the police inquiry from them; they hadn't known Julie had intended to see Rue, much less why.

It was as Rue went away that she met Andy.

He stopped short.

"Rue! What on earth are you doing here? Is Brule with you?"

And when she said no, he insisted on her going to lunch with him.

"I'm ready to go back to the office," he said. "Did Kendal bring you? Dismiss him and I'll take you home in my car after lunch. I've got to talk to you, Rue."

Why not? thought Rue and went.

Crimson-shaded lamps were on the tables, and flowers. In the balcony the ensemble, muted, all strings and piano, played softly. Andy pushed aside silver and plate and leaned across the table and smiled.

"Nice," he said, "isn't it? When have I had you alone! Oh, darling, I've been starving for you."

Rue looked at him with a little dismay; she was inexpressibly grateful for him, but she was unused to speaking in fervencies.

"Starving for lunch, you mean."

He looked wounded and covered it. And melon came, chilled exactly to suit Andy.

Luckily they saw no one they knew; it would have reminded them of the ugly thing that, for those moments, as Rue was trying instinctively to forget. Andy helped her. He talked of anything and everything; and made love to her gaily, as if there were no obstacles between them, as if they were carefree and young and had all life before them. With nothing tragic to forget.

Or to face.

Joe Dimaggio May Be First .400 Hitter In Nine Years To Appear In Majors

Almost Certain there will be a Bumper Crop of Hurlers Winning 20 Games

SOME MAY PASS 30

Ruffing and Walters Reach 20 Game Circle with Derringer, Feller Close up

(By Judson Bailey Associated Press Sports Writer).

Before the finish this baseball season may be notable for many things—including Joe DiMaggio, first .400 hitter in nine years—but it seems certain to have a bumper crop of pitchers winning 20 or more games.

In the first flush of mid-season enthusiasm over achievements of Bucky Walters, Bob Feller, Red Ruffing and their fellow tradesmen, some fans even thought a 30-game winner might pop up.

This project faded when Walters was stalled two weeks trying to win his 21st game for Cincinnati Reds. However, he's going to have plenty of company in the 20-class, which last year numbered only Ruffing, Bill Lee, Buck Newsom and Paul Derringer.

Ruffing Wins 20th Game

Ruffing reached the goal for the fourth consecutive year yesterday as New York Yankees tamed Detroit Tigers 13-3, for their ninth straight victory, extending their American League lead to 13 full games.

Feller pitched Cleveland a four-hit, 1-0 shutout in the first game of a doubleheader against Boston Red Sox for his 19th triumph and virtually assured himself of a berth. The Tribe also bumped Boston in the second game, 5-3, for the Sox' fifth consecutive loss.

Derringer hurled Cincinnati Reds to a 7-2 decision over New York Giants on six hits, bringing his total of games to 17, within easy range of the target.

Dutch Leonard of Washington Senators got his 15th yesterday as the Senators downed St. Louis Browns 8-7 in the first game. Ken Chase went the route in the 11-inning nightcap to win, 4-3.

Bill Lee Fails

Bill Lee failed to increase his total as the Phillies nudged out the Cubs, 4-3 and 3-2. He gave only six hits in losing the first game. The combination of Ray arrell's four-hit pitching and a two-run homer by Gus Suhr decided the second game.

Boston Bees and Cardinals split with Bill Posedel winning the first game, 10-4, for Boston, helped by a four-run homer of Henry Majeski. The Cards came from behind to take the second, 6-5, in eight innings.

Cy Blanton stopped the Dodgers, 9-5, in his first start since April 23 after they had beaten the Pirates, 8-2, in the opener.

B. Beckman shut out Chicago White Sox for the Philadelphia Athletics, 2-0, in a pitching duel with Thornton Lee.

Sports Roundup

(By Eddie Brietz Associated Press Sports Writer).

Atlantic City, N.J., Aug. 28 (AP)—They're not kidding about Lou Nova's performances....We saw him in two drills over the week-end and he looked terrible....So bad that in New York last night Joe Jacobs laid $2,000 against $10,000 Galento wins by a knockout in four rounds....Lou's handlers wanted to move the camp into Philadelphia hoping the change would put a little pep into the fighter, but Nova vetoed it....They'll bet you here George Blake referees the fight.

Nova is training on the same pier where Gypsy Rose Lee, the strip teaser, is appearing in a drama called "Burlesque"....From left to right the signs in front read: "Lou Nova....Wrestling .... Gypsy Rose Lee.....Next week."

Coach Tommy Thomas is all set to succeed Rogers Hornsby as manager of the Baltimore Orioles ....Eddie Mead is going before the N.Y. Boxing Commission tomorrow and take back all the things he said about the Ambers-Armstrong fight ....Several members of the Dusek wrestling herd week-ended here.... They looked plump and sassy despite the famine in burping circles.

This week's dunce cap is awarded to the Jacksonville Baseball Club ....Last year they gave a youngster named Johnny Rucker the air for not being good enough....The other day the Giants bought Rucker from Atlanta for $30,000 cash on the line.

Literary circles will be interested to note that "My Life and Works, by Tony Galento" now appears daily in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

CLARY FORAN AS COACH

Montreal, Aug. 28 (CP) — Fred Porter, an executive of the Westmount Club, new entry in the Ontario Rugby Football Union, announced last night that Clary Foran who led the Montreal Amateur Athletic Association team to a Dominion title in 1931, would coach the Westmount squad.

Foran will replace Hoddy Foster as coach of the team which played under the name of Nationals last year. His assistant will be Ernie Kempey, veteran line star.

Young U.S. Team To Defend Trophy

Haverford, Pa., Aug. 28 (AP)—One of the youngest teams ever to represent the United States will defend the Davis Cup against Australia in the challenge round here next weekend, Sept. 2-4.

Bobby Riggs, Frank Parker, Joe Hunt and Jack Kramer, whose average age is only 20 1-2 years, were named defenders of the cup by Walter Pate, non-playing captain, after Australia had beaten Yugoslavia in the interzone final at Brookline, Mass., yesterday.

The Australians won easily from Yugoslavia when John Bromwich and Adrian Quist beat Drago Mitic and Franjo Kukuljevic in straight sets.

HAMILTON EIGHT DEFEATS ARGOS

Clearly Earned Right to Represent Canada at the Olympic Games

Toronto, Aug. 28 (CP)—All question of Hamilton Leanders' right to represent Canada in the eight-oared crew competition at next year's Olympic games seemed ended today after another notable triumph for the Leander senior eight.

On one of the calmest courses in the history of the Canadian National Exhibition regatta, the Hamilton crew stroked to a half-length victory over Ottawa Rowing Club Saturday along the Lake Ontario waterfront. Leanders finished the mile in the good time of 5.16.

Nearly a length farther back was the Toronto Argonaut eight—with the exception of three changes in personnel—which lost to Harvard University in the final of the Royal Henley in England last month. Argonauts' junior eight was fourth.

The Leanders swept the boards in eight-oared competition at the exhibition. Their 140-pound eight sped to a three-quarter mile victory over Toronto Dons and their 150-pound crew whipped the Argonauts at the same distance.

Joe Burk of Philadelphia, Diamond Sculls winner, won the open mile singles by two lengths over Herb Miller of Argos. Herb Turner, Australian star whose preference is for greater distances, finished fifth and last. Burk's time was 6:13.6.

BELLEVILLE INTS. DEFEAT AIRPORT IN FINAL GAME

Locals Rally in Ninth to Score Two Runs and Win 3 - 2

THRILLING CONTEST

'Orfuns' Will Now Play Coe Hill in the Next Round of Playdowns

Belleville "Orfuns" advanced to the first round of the Intermediate O.B.A. playdowns by eliminating the R.C.A.F. "Flyers" in the Intermediate "B" finals of the Bay of Quinté League at the Trenton Airport on Saturday winning by a 3-2 count.

Battling at even terms throughout the pastime, Belleville rallied to come from behind and score two runs in the last inning and annex the league "B" title. The game developed into a pitchers' battle between "Chuck" Barriage, who limited the Flyers to seven hits and Lefty Collins, the Airmen's portsider, who gave up eight hits. The win was Barriage's second in the league finals over the Air Force.

Score in Third

Little and Empson hit to give Belleville their first run in the third, while Leach, Webb and Smith pounded out hits to give the Flyers an equalizer in the seventh as the Airmen assumed the lead with L'Heureaux and Crawford banging out hits in the eighth. Carson's hit, an error coupled with pinch-hitter Churchill's double gave Belleville two ninth inning runs and victory. Barriage retired the Flyers in order in the ninth.

Barriage struck out nine to Collins' three and showed splendid control as he did not issue a single base on balls, as Collins walked two. Belleville now meet Bancroft in the first round intermediate O.B.A. playdowns.

Manager Ray Blades of the St. Louis Cardinals, used a good big towel to mop his brow as the Brooklyn Dodgers pounded out a 7-1 victory over the Cards at Ebbets Field, Brooklyn. No one denies that it was an extremely hot day, but Blades probably would have been cooler if the Cards continued their winning streak.

Hagen Bids Farewell To Tourney Contests

(By Earl Hilligan Associated Press Sports Writer).

Chicago, Aug. 28 (AP)—Walter Hagen, after 25 years as one of golf's most commanding figures, bade farewell to serious tournament competition today.

"I'm going to play for fun in a tournament or two occasionally but it's too hard to keep in playing shape any more," he said. "Anyway, I've had my share of championships—I figure I've averaged about two a year for 25 years—and I'm ready to call it a day."

It's certainly been a great game for Walter. The records show that he won the United States open twice, the Western Open five times, the British Open four times and the Canadian Open once—in addition to some 40 other titles.

He's generally recognized as the greatest money maker professional golf ever knew, earning about $1,000,000 in a quarter of a century. He made $6,800 in a match with Bobby Jones, the largest sum ever earned by one golfer for a single match.

He paired with Gene Sarazen during the last four days and finished 4th in a tournament arranged solely to pay him honor. The best-ball event was won by Ed Dudley, Philadelphia, and Billie Burke, Cleveland, with a rating of 19 "plus" holes won.

Ival Goodman, Reds—batted in four runs with homer and single as Cincinnati crushed Giants, 7-2.

Red Ruffing, Yankees —earned his 20th victory of season with seven-hit performance against Tigers.

Bob Feller and Hal Trosby, Indians—young pitching star shut out Red Sox, 1-0, on four hits in first game. Trosky hit three-run homer to decide second game.

Spud Davis and Ray Harrell, Phillies—Davis singled two runs home to decide first game. Harrell's four hit pitching captured second chapter of doubleheader from Cubs.

LEAGUE LEADERS SPLIT TWIN BILL WITH THE BEARS

Newark May Upset All the Dope in International Loop Race

TORONTO LOSES

Red Wings Advance by Winning Double Bill From Montreal

(By The Associated Press)

With only two weeks to go in the most exciting pennant race the International Baseball League has had since 1936, you can figure it a three-team struggle for the championship and a five-team race for the four playoff positions.

There's little use trying to argue that Buffalo, six games off the pace, has a chance to take the title, or that any of the last three clubs can break into the playoff list.

Rochester and Syracuse have excellent chances to knock off Jersey City Giants, or Newark might be the club that settles the whole affair.

League Leaders Split

The league leaders and Newark Bears split a doubleheader yesterday, while Rochester and Syracuse won two games apiece that left the Jerseys only two games up on Rochester's fast-moving Red Wings and 4 1-2 games ahead of the Chiefs. Rochester has played fewer games, trailing by only one in the losing column. Rochester will play most of its remaining contests against Toronto and Montreal.

The Little Giants, on the other hand, take on Newark seven more times before the regular season ends Sept. 10 and Syracuse, five times.

Longest Win Streak

Jersey City wound up its longest winning streak of the season, five straight games, by winning yesterday's opener, 7-5. They hammered out all their runs in the last three innings. Walt Judnich's 20th homer of the season, coming with bases loaded in the second inning, featured a six run rally which gave Newark the nightcap, 7-4.

Buffalo belted over Toronto Leafs, 9-0, as Ollie Carnegie hit his 27th and 28th homers behind four-hit flinging of young Clay Smith.

Wings Win Two

Rochester, meantime, looked more and more like a pennant threat as Si Johnson and Roy Henshaw, veterans, pitched the Red Wings to 11-2 and 7-5 victories over Montreal. Johnson recorded his 22nd win of the season in the opener despite Gene Hasson's two four-baggers.

Jack Tising and Johnny Gee did some fine elbowing for Syracuse as the Chiefs beat Baltimore, 3-2 and 5-0, but the former had a narrow escape when Nick Etten homered in the ninth inning of the opener to tie the score. Gee allowed only two hits, both by Johnny Gill, in chalking up his 19th victory in the second game.

PETES BEATEN BY PARKDALE

Winners Score 5 Runs in Eighth When Peterboro Leading 4-2

(By The Canadian Press)

Stratford Nationals today needed only one victory to make their march to the senior A title in the Ontario Intercounty Baseball League a successful parade. Paced by Earl (Schoolmaster) Craig, the Nationals won their third game out of four starts in the best-in-seven series Saturday by defeating Brantford Alerts 10-3.

Craig struck out 10 batters as his mates slugged the offerings of three Brantford pitchers for 15 hits. Homers by Sud Allan and Eddy Radiff, a double and triple by Edmison and three hits out of five tries by Miskimmon and Carrick were highlights of the championship struggle.

Kitchener Panthers tied it up at two games apiece in the senior B title best-of-five series by winning 7-5 over Guelph Maple Leafs. Although Butter Smith, Guelph pitcher, allowed only four hits to Kitchener's 11, nine errors ruined his chances as his infield fumbled the game away.

Danforth Aces Win

In the Intercity senior loop Toronto Parkdale and Toronto Danforth Aces emerged as winners in opening games of the round-robin playoffs. Parkdale bested Peterborough 7-4 with a five-run splurge in the eighth inning when the Petes were leading 4-2. Parkdale pitchers Ross and Moon put together a seven-hit effort as their team mates banged 11 hits off three Peterborough hurlers.

Danforth Aces, the league leaders, downed Toronto Webbers 9-1 although Webbers equalled their 10 hits. Twelve Webbers players were left on base in the struggle.

In the north, Coniston evened their best-of-five series for the Nickel Belt senior title at one game apiece by downing Copper Cliff 5-2. Milt Awrey proved better than Joe Murphy in a tight hurling duel, with Coniston obtaining five of their seven hits in the fourth and fifth frames for all their runs. Awrey kept Copper Cliff's six hits well scattered and two double plays helped his cause.

After struggling all season for existence, the Belleville "Orfuns" finally landed into the O.B.A. playdowns by beating the Air Force in the Bay of Quinte finals, winning two games of three played. Saturday "Chuck" Barriage pitched a seven-hitter as his team mates showed some ninth inning clutch hitting to come from behind and win. Pinch-hitter Freddie Churchill came through in grand style to pound out a timely double to score tying and winning run. The game was played at the Aerodrome grounds with military guards around at every post, orders to rigidly guard the grounds having been received earlier in the day as the result of the war scare. Aeroplanes zoomed overhead during the game, but their appearance had little effect on the civilians. The Flyers won the first game of the series, but Belleville battled back gamely to snatch the next two and the league honors.

The success of the Belleville team and its continuance in the league was due solely to H. M. (Dolly) Gray, who personally has proven the man behind the scenes. Take for instance on Saturday the locals wanted Lorne Jarrell, their second baseman, for a twilight fixture. Mr. Gray and Jack Carson, the first baseman, drove out in Thurlow Township to pick up Jarrell and transport him to the game. Upon their arrival at the Jarrell farm, Lorne was milking the cows. In order to get Jarrell to the game on time, both Carson and Gray pitched in and helped Lorne with his milking, Carson never having milked before. "Gosh, I thought milk came in bottles," Carson remarked as he was introduced to his first milk-producing effort. The Belleville team has had a bitter struggle all season, but now they are in the O.B.A. playdowns perhaps the sailing will be a little more smooth. The locals now meet the winners of the North Hastings League, commencing Wednesday.

Now that the majors have followed the lead of the minors and are providing their patrons with night ball, Charles Young of the Knickerbocker News, Albany, N.Y., believes the big leagues may give consideration to the Shaughnessy play-off plan, which has made a decided hit in the minors.

"The playoff system, like night ball, was ridiculed when it was suggested by Frank Shaughnessy, now president of the International League" points out Young "We will admit we did not think International League would fall for it when Shaughnessy brought it up, but he persuaded them to give it a trial. They did. Under the original system, the team which won the playoffs was awarded the championship, but this was changed when Buffalo, which finished fourth, won the playoffs.

"Under the new management, the team which finishes first in the regular race is awarded the championship and the team which wins the playoffs is given a cup by some leagues and in others it represents the league in playoffs with representatives of another league.

"Of course, the playoffs, if adopted by the big leagues, might force a change in the World's Series arrangements, but in recent years the Yankees have been making a joke out of the World's series just as they have made a farce out of the American League race."

There was no need for the Bay of Quinte League moguls to hold the Picton protest on Walt Gerow Jr., as the Ontario Baseball Association stepped in and declared that Gerow was eligible to play in the O.B.A. for Napanee. The decision on the part of the body was based on the fact, that the younger Gerow was not considered as an import into Napanee as he was merely returning home after playing hockey in Northern Ontario last winter. Naturally the Picton Club feel they were given "the business" by the association and their own league, but the O.B.A. could hardly toss out Gerow because he was a few days late over the residence rule when after all he was merely going home. Had it have been a clear case of Napanee importing a player, under the same circumstances, we imagine the O.B.A. would not have dealt so leniently.

Paul Derringer chalked up his 17th win of the season as the Reds beat the Giants 7-2 yesterday, while the Cardinals were splitting a dual bill with the Dodgers, thus giving Cincinnati a five game margin in the National League. Of course the surprise team of the senior circuit is the Brooklyn "Daffiness men", who are no further out of the National League leadership than the Boston Red Sox are behind the Yankees. Incidentally Joe McCarthy's merry men beat the Browns and Tigers over the week end and are leading the junior loop by 12-1-2 games.

Headed by their ace and veteran moundsman, Bill Gowsell, the Kingston Tanners, intermediate "A" champions of that district, pry off the O.A.S.A. provincial play-off lid versus the Shell "Oilers" this evening at the Flats. The Kingston-Belleville series last year proved highly entertaining and ultimately resulted in Belleville players being suspended from the parent association, but we hope no such drastic moves will be necessary in 1939. Johnnie Bawden and Gowsell will doubtless be the starting pitchers tonight at the Flats.

Sport Spice — Next Saturday Bobby Pearce, world's professional singles sculling champion will try to beat the Hamilton Leanders eights in a special sculling race at the Toronto Ex. next Saturday .... This will be quite a trick, that is if he can do it....Cleveland Bob Feller won his 19th game of the season yesterday, while Red Ruffing, of the Yankees, pinned No. 20 to the masthead for the Yanks .... Port Hope knotted their Lake Shore play-off series with Bowmanville at two games each on Saturday.

WIGHTMAN CUP STAYS IN STATES

American Ladies Tennis Team Wins Five Out of Seven Matches

New York, Aug. 28 (AP)—The Wightman Cup, coveted International Women's Tennis Trophy, is back to rest for a ninth straight year in the United States.

The United States team retained the cup by taking five out of seven matches with the invading English team at Forest Hills. Going into yesterday's matches with a two-to-one margin, the Americans saw the series deadlocked as Valerie Scott of England defeated Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, 6-3, 6-4.

Alice Marble sent the Americans into the lead again by defeating Kay Stammers, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4, in the tourney's highlight match. Helen Jacobs clinched the series by turning back Mary Hardwick, 6-2, 6-2.

In the final doubles match Mrs. Fabyan and Miss Marble defeated Mrs. Freda James Hammersley and Miss Stammers, 7-5, 6-2.

NEUTRALITY LAW WILL BE INVOKED

President Roosevelt will Put Law into Operation if War Comes

Washington, Aug. 28—(AP)— If a European war breaks out, a United States government official said today, President Roosevelt will invoke the neutrality law at the same time that he calls congress to consider its revision.

The law places an embargo on all shipments of arms and ammunition to belligerents. The administration wants to repeal this provision and permit sales on a sort of "cash and carry" basis.

The President is directed to invoke the Neutrality Act whenever he finds that a "state of war" exists. It has not been applied to the Sino-Japanese conflict, where no declaration of war ever has been forthcoming.

Authoritative sources said the law might not be called into operation if there was only a "lightning" war between Germany and Poland, but they expressed certainty that it would be invoked if the conflict spread throughout the continent.

BRITISH PEOPLE HOPE FOR PEACE PREPARE FOR WAR

Attitude of Whole Country As Another Critical Week Begins

NERVES TAUT

By PAT USSHER
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 28—(CP Cable) — The British people, in the words of this morning's Daily Express (Independent) "hope for peace and prepare for war."

That summed up the attitude of this country as another critical week began with Europe's nerves still taut.

The Express warned "we are not prepared to buy another short respite at the price of surrender. This time it must be a real peace —a genuine laying down of arms."

The Daily Herald (Labor) said Britain and France would both support "free negotiation between Germany and Poland as equal" but added that they were not prepared to "win peace for a few months by a betrayal of pledges."

The Daily Mail (Ind.) wrote: "Don't be misled by any facile optimism. There is nothing today which suggests that the peril of war is any less imminent than it was when the Prime Minister warned the nation a week ago yesterday."

The Mail said the British Government was advising the Fuehrer that the "first essential is a truce of three to six months."

"Thus the way to peace is still open," the newspaper said.

The New Chronicle (Liberal) said "Nothing tangible is known which would justify us in believing that the tension is substantially relieved or that the outlook is really any brighter."

"For the Democracies to concede that they have no interest in what happens outside their own borders would be the shortest way to suicide," said the Daily Telegraph (Conservative).

These Nazi troopers, members of the Heimwehr or Home Guard, are shown in Danzig as they marched toward the Polish border as European, American and Canadian statesmen strove to keep the peace of Europe. This picture was radioed from London to America.

Men of Britain's Royal Air Force are shown mounting a torpedo in the rack of one of the torpedo-carrying planes that would be used in the event of war against warships. The torpedo, capable of sinking the most formidable battleship if properly placed, can be launched from the air.

Three o'Clock—Wednesday

By PAUL M. VEST

"What time is it, Sally?"

"Ten minutes to three, Miss Helen."

"Very well, you may go now, but be back promptly at five. Dinner will be at seven tonight."

"Yes, Miss Helen."

The outer door of the apartment closed with a soft thud.

The fragile and palpably lovely figure before the Louis Quinze dressing table sat chin cupped in one slender hand as she looked into the crystal depths of the mirror.

Yet she seemed scarcely to be aware of the pink and golden loveliness reflected there.

About her was an air of tense expectancy. Unseeingly she glanced down at the toe of one small satin mule peeping out from the trailing green folds of her negligee.

A little frown puckered her forehead.

She looked nervously about the expensively simple bedroom.

The frown deepened.

She got up and adjusted the white Venetian blinds to soften the light filtering through.

For half a moment she peered between two of the little white slats to catch a fleeting glimpse of Central park many dizzy floors below.

She walked a few steps back into the room and stood still; she seemed to be listening intently.

She picked up a sparkling crystal of perfume from the dressing table, and delicately applied a little glass rod to her hair, the lobe of each ear.

Fretfully she glanced at the red morocco leather clock on the writing desk.

Out in the apartment a doorknob clicked.

The figure in green chiffon started slightly.

Hurriedly she picked up a chiffon handkerchief from the dressing table.

She walked a few steps toward the door, paused and came back to the dressing table where she sat down.

In the softly shaded mirror she saw the tall figure of a man appear in the bedroom behind her.

Her face in the glass blanched a trifle—that was all.

"Why, dearest!" she exclaimed—there was a nervous catch in her voice—"What on earth are you doing home at this time in the afternoon?" She seemed to be very busy with her cosmetics.

"It's Framingham," the man in the doorway said, "he refused to follow out my plan. Won't co-operate. We had a director's meeting this afternoon. I blew up and walked out."

"Oh, darling, I'm so sorry." She picked up a comb, but her hand trembled so violently that she had to put it back. Her body was tense, quivering. With wide, staring eyes, she glanced desperately at the clock. The man in the doorway looked at the timepiece also.

"Three o'clock," he said. Was there just the trace of strain in his voice, or did she imagine it?

"Where is Sally?" he asked.

"I let her have a few hours off. You know we are having dinner at seven tonight. She wanted to see her brother or something."

"Oh." He selected a cigarette from the rich brown leather box on the writing desk, and lighted it with the lighter she had given him for Christmas.

She got up. The room seemed very unsteady. She swayed slightly. The man in the doorway didn't notice—or did he? She crossed to the writing table. The little red morocco leather clock ticked with a vengeance—five minutes past three. She wanted to scream.

"Guess I'll take a shower," the man said. "Awfully warm for this time of year."

"Why don't you, dear? It will rest your nerves. I'll lay out your things for you." Her voice trembled. She leaned against the table to steady herself.

Suddenly the telephone jingled loudly. She jumped and muffled a cry in her handkerchief. "I'll get it, dear," she managed to say. "Oh, hello, Marie, darling.... Yes, of course, I've been expecting you.... Surely....Surely, I understand. Bill just came in from the office .... Trouble of some sort. Of course, we'll make it another afternoon..."

A great wave of relief swept over her, leaving her unbelievably weak. Somehow she got the receiver back on its hook. "It was Marie Jaynes, dear," she explained to the broad back turned toward her. "She was going to drop by but couldn't make it."

"Umm-m," he mumbled. "Help me bet this dang tie off, will you?"

Water was splashing merrily in the bathroom. Weakly she commenced to pick up his clothes from where he had flung them on a chair. A single sheet of note paper dropped from his coat pocked. It read:

"Would it interest you to know that your wife is having an affair with one of the boys about town? Drop in at your apartment three o'clock Wednesday afternoon.

"A Sympathetic Friend."

With trembling fingers she replaced the note. The blood had drained from her face. She looked fondly at the diamond bracelets on her slender wrists and the diamond rings on her long, tapering fingers.

A moment later, at her writing desk, she very deliberately and completely erased from a tiny red leather notebook the name "Raoul Desmond, 44 Central Park West — OE 55515."

HIGHER HYPHENATES

The connoissuer of hyphenated names would no doubt admit that Plunkett?Ernle-Erle-Drax is a pretty stout effort, but when it comes to three-hyphened names the army beats the navy both on the score of the number of names and on that of the number of syllabes in the names.

The Scots Guards a few years ago had a Lieutenant Colonel Hepburn-Stuart-Forbes-Trefusis, whose name has two more syllables than the admiral's, while the 2nd. Life Guards once had a captain whose surname was Montagu-Stuart-Wortley-Mackenzie — a total of three hyphens and ten syllabes. The hyphens in these names, moreover, are older-established than the admiral's.—Manchester Guardian.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

New York, Aug. 28—(AP)—A slow rally got under way in the stock market today after leaders had tumbled 1 to 4 points on a revival of European war fears.

Improvement started near midday and, with volume relatively small, extreme losses had been reduced in many instances near the fourth hour.

While the general feeling in boardrooms was that a German-Polish showdown was imminent there were those in Wall Street who still felt an explosion would be averted.

In arrears the greater part of the time were U.S. Steel, Goodrich, Chrysler, Montgomery Ward, International Harvester, American Telephone, Anaconda, Westinghouse, American Smelting, General Electric, Eastman Kodak, Santa Fe, N. Y. Central and Loft.

Resistant were Bethlehem Steel, General Motors, U.S. Gypsum, Standard Oil of N.J. and Cerro de Pasco.

Among Canadian shares, Dome Mines and Hiram Walkers each lost about a point and Distillers Corp.-Seagrams a major fraction. Canada 4s were off more than 2.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Aug. 28—(CP)— Prices on Toronto Exchange today were erratic. Only 238,000 shares changed hands.

At the opening prices in all groups except the base metal shares, dropped quite sharply. In the second hour a rally brought recovery. Base metal shares were supported by higher London metal prices, a natural sequence to the new fall of sterling. Nickel and Noranda were holding unchanged.

In cheaper golds losses of 5 to 15 cents ran through the list. In the western oils small losses were netted by Home, Calgary-Edmonton and Anglo-Canadian.

Steel, food, senior oils and liquor stocks all sold lower.

HITLER RECEIVES MR. KING'S NOTE

No Answer from Chancellor of Germany Received at Ottawa

Ottawa, Aug. 28—(CP)—Prime Minister Mackenzie King was informed today that Chancellor Hitler of Germany had received Mr. King's message of Friday.

Dr. Erich Windels, German consul-general in Ottawa advised Mr. King the message was delivered to the Fuehrer Saturday morning. No reply has yet reached Ottawa.

In identical messages to Hitler and the President of Poland Mr. King expressed the conviction there was no problem which could not be settled by peaceful discussion and negotiation.

He sent a message to Premier Mussolini at the same time urging the Italian leader to use his great power and authority to obtain a peaceful settlement of the present controversy. Signor Mussolini replied yesterday that he would spare no effort to effect a just and peaceful settlement.

German Liner Europa Omits Calls On French, English Ports

Southampton, Aug. 28—(CP)—The German passenger liner Europa, homeward bound from America, suddenly omitted her customary calls at Cherbourg and Southampton today, presumably to hasten to German waters.

Tenders were standing by with 40 passengers here when an unexpected announcement was made that the Europa would not call and those who had reservations should get in touch with the German Embassy in London.

On Saturday the Europa advised Southampton by wireless that she expected to make her usual call here.

Produce Prices Firm—Trading Quiet

Toronto, Aug 28—Quiet trading ruled the Toronto open produce market on Saturday. Receipts were generally light, and prices of eggs, butter and cheese held steady.

Trading in butter was practically at a standstill as buyers ceased bidding to await overseas developments. Offerings of Ontario butter were very light, with first-grade creamery solids priced nominally at a range of 21 3-4c to 22c. Holders of Western butter asked 22 1-4c and 22 1-2c.

The egg market was quietly firm. Supplies were light, but were ample for buyers' requirements, and there was no shortage. In the graded section, A-large eggs were steady at 28c dozen, with a premium of 1-2c to 1c possible on Government-inspected eggs.

The threat of war in Europe brought buyers into the market and coupled with the disinclination on the part of holders to sell, caused the advance. A lack of offerings, however, appeared as the main factor. The advance was also partially due to a strong tone in the United Kingdom market where Australian butter advanced to 116 shillings by Friday last.

However, buyers in the United Kingdom at the present time are purchasing neither butter nor cheese, as they are disinclined to take any forward position during the present critical period. Canadian price levels are out of line with British equivalents, and this situation was sharply accentuated by the severe decline in sterling. At the same time, however, it must be recalled that holders here are not pressing offerings.

Montreal Produce Prices Up.

Montreal, Aug. 28 (CP)— Rising tendencies marked butter, egg and cheese prices on produce markets here last week, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported. Potatoes, however, held unchanged.

Job price of first grade creamery butter prints was 22 1-2c to 23 cents a pound and of first grade solids 22c to 22 1-2c. Western butter delivered in Montreal was unquoted. Prices to creamery of Quebec No. 1 pasteurized butter delivered in Montreal for current make was 21 1-2c and the price of Quebec No. 2 pasteurized butter was 20 1-2c. Receipts: 18,914 boxes, compared with 21,066 a year ago.

Price to factory of Ontario white cheese delivered in Montreal for current make was 10 13-16c to 11 3-16c and colored 10 13-16 to 11 3-16c. Quebec white was quoted at 10 3-8c and colored at 10 1-2. Receipts: 32,405 boxes, compared with 33,209, a year ago.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases, inspected, sold at 30 cents a dozen for A-large, 28c for A-medium, 22c to 22 1-2c for A-pullets, 21c for B-large, 15c for C. Uninspected lots sold at 1-2 cent less. Shipments of lower grades only were offered at 18c to 19c for grade B and 14c for grade C. Receipts: 8,636 cases, compared with 8,175 a year ago.

With all the calm of childhood, this little French girl with her doll is shown in this radiophoto from Paris as she waited for her train in a railway station to carry her—merely one of a thousand fleeing the French capital to safety.

SIR N. HENDERSON

But—and here's the crux of the whole thing—any settlement must be just to the Poles as well as to the Germans. In other words the British government and the British people are determined there shall be no Munich in 1939.

Official circles in Whitehall did not attempt to hide their dismay at last night's declaration by Hitler that Danzig and the Polish Corridor "must be returned".

This spoiled the little game Britain has been playing to give Hitler a chance to back down without losing face before his people. At no time since the German-Polish crisis became acute had Hitler publicly stated what he wanted, not even in his peace plan did he enumerate specific demands.

TRYING TO HELP HITLER

Britain had carefully shielded from the public terms of Hitler's message so that he could enter the conference room without his people knowing he was demanding this, that or the other thing. The British were attempting to put him in the position of being able to return to his people with certain concessions which he could hold up to them as victories of his diplomacy without making excuses for those he did not get.

But Hitler spoiled that game by stating publicly that Danzig and the Corridor must be returned to the Reich. He now is committed to these demands—demands which the Poles say they cannot fulfil without destroying their country.

The unanimity of the press on what the government should tell Hitler at this critical hour indicated the cabinet had decided to stand firm on the policy already laid down by Prime Minister Chamberlain.

CABINET'S PROPOSALS

This is: Poland and Germany must negotiate any settlement of their dispute; Poland is ready to negotiate on a basis of complete equality and when the threat of force is removed; Great Britain is ready to help create favorable conditions for a general European settlement, if Germany will make her contribution; but, finally, if Poland has to resist any vital threat to her independence, Great Britain will be at her side immediately.

A source close to the government indicated Britain did not regard Hitler's publication of his letter to Premier Daladier of France, embodying a flat demand for Danzig and Pomorze (the Polish Corridor), either as heightening or lessening the present crisis.

In general, it was understood, Hitler's message to Britain covered, besides the immediate question of Poland, the broader issue of future German-British relations. It was said to be somewhat more inclusive than the Fuehrer's letter to Daladier.

POSITION WELL STATED

Britain's position, the Times said editorially today, "could hardly be better stated" than in the week-end "message to the German people" issued by the British National Council of Labor.

This message said: "There need be no war, if the threat of force is renounced. But if Poland is attacked, Germany will be at war not with Poland only, but from the first day, with Great Britain and France, who both stand firmly by their pledges."

The Times commented; "There is, of course, a whole range of vast questions, headed by that of the reduction of armaments, which this country would be glad enough, if conditions were favorable, to discuss with Germany and other powers on terms of complete equality."

CRISIS BRIEFS

Canberra, Australia, Aug. 28 —(CP-Reuters)—Prime Minister Robert Menzies, following a cabinet meeting, today said the International situation will take a decisive turn within the next 24 hours.

"The situation has not worsened, but is still very critical," he added.

Boston, Aug. 28 (AP)—National Commander Eugene Van Antwerp told the convention of the United States Veterans of Foreign Wars today that "we might as well accept the fact America will inevitably be forced to take part when another world war gets underway."

He called upon the convention to "take a realistic view of matters."

Canberra, Australia, Aug. 28—(AP)—A government proclamation, published today, places a ban on the export of gold and currency notes from Australia and institutes strict control of oversea exchange transactions. The order limits sale or exchange by trading banks to £5,000 for each person a month for business purposes and restricts private remittances to £5 a month.

ADD CRISIS BRIEFS ETC.

Salt Lake City., Aug. 28—(AP)—Major Nicholas Szilagyi, adjutant at Ft. Douglas, suspects soldiers are remarrying their own wives to escape further military service. New army regulations call for the automatic discharge of soldiers marrying without permission. Major Szilagyi said county records show numerous service men and their "prospective brides," applying for licences since July 1, already were married.

Paris, Aug. 28—(AP)— The Air France Company announced suspension today of airlines linking Paris with Berlin, Rome, Bucharest, Turin, Milan, Geneva, Zurich, Le Touquet, Marseille, Bordeaux and Biarritz. All seasonal service also was cancelled.

Hong Kong, Aug. 28 —(AP) — Several thousands Japanese troops began withdrawing today from the area occupied by Japan on the border between this British Crown Colony and the Chinese mainland. The troops could be observed boarding transports just outside the British territorial waters where they disembarked 12 days ago.

Boston, Aug. 28. —(AP)—Louis Johnson, assistant United States Secretary of War, asserted today failure of Congress to repeal the Neutrality Act, lifting the embargo of arms, was a "contributing factor" to the current European crisis.

London, Aug. 28—(CP Cable) — Plans for carrying on broadcasting service in the event of war have been perfected, it was stated today.

Some members of the British Broadcasting Corporation's staff arrived at Broadcasting House today with luggage ready to leave for emergency headquarters in a remote part of England.

Oslo, Aug. 28.—(AP)— The Norwegian government imposed a general embargo on the export of all classes of goods except fish, wood, iron ore and iron pyrites.

Singapore, Straits Settlements, Aug. 28.—(CP-Reuters)— "If Great Britain should be involved in war she would have the empire solidly behind her," Sir Shenton Thomas, governor of the Straits Settlements, said today in an address to the Legislative Council. "Nowhere will more loyal support be given more fully or more willingly than in Malaya," he added. "Malaya is ready—let us not be uneasy".

GOV'T ASSUMES SHIPPING CONTROL

Naval Control Service has Been Instituted Ottawa Reports

Ottawa, Aug. 28.— (CP)— The government has assumed control of shipping, and a naval control service has been instituted, it was officially announced here today.

The government's action extends to control of merchant ships of Canadian registry. It became effective Saturday night.

The naval control service will govern the sailing and routine of all vessels concerned. Type and disposition of cargoes and similar matters, however, are not at present affected.

Ship-masters will receive from the naval service any special orders considered advisable with respect to routes, moorings and other related subjects.

The naval control service consists of retired naval officers who have volunteered their services, and members of the naval reserve called out for duty.

100 NEW D.O.R.A. ORDERS ISSUED

School Playgrounds Buzz With Excited Chatter of Children in London

By FRED BACKHOUSE

Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 28—(CP Cable)—Whether eating their lunches out of paper bags on the sun-lit Thames embankment or toying with a salad in smart air-conditioned west end restaurants, news-drugged Londoners today waded through more than 100 orders of a "new D.O.R.A." (Defence of the Realm Act.)

They learned that authorities can order them to billet people; that nobody is allowed to liberate homing pigeons except by police permit; that it is an offence to communicate with anyone who may assist the enemy. Postal restrictions have been imposed and travellers searched.

Meanwhile school playgrounds buzzed with excited chatter of children gathered for a nationwide evacuation test. The children, who carried gas masks instead of satchels, had been up since 6 a.m. and regarded the whole thing as an adventurous treat. Parents, who helped to marshal them into parties, didn't smile.

Newspaper Tell of Climax

The newspapers told citizens that the crisis was rocketing towards what was expected to be a climax and hundreds of families left by road and rail for havens of safety.

The afternoon papers agreed there could be no surrender to Adolf Hitler. The Star (Liberal) said:

"The Germans, as they did with the invasion of Belgium, are trying to persuade the world that this is a tactical and not a moral issue.

"Danzig is to Hitler a pawn in his terrible game. To Poland it is a symbolic and a guarantee of her very existence. To the world it is the last moral challenge. To sign away Danzig would be to join in an international perfidy which is sweeping across the world like something fouler than war itself."

Italy Less Ready

The Standard believes that the fact Hitler should have decided to pause at all is "one small gain for peace."

The factor which may be causing the German pause, says The Standard, is the unknown effect of the Russo-German pact on Rome.

"Italy appears less ready for immediate war than any of the great continental powers.... She has still only a quarter of her army under arms.

"Italy would suffer far more terrible havoc from a war than her partner in the axis. She would not view readily an encroachment of German influence southward through the Balkans."

"It appears that in these hours the influence of Mussolini has been exerted strongly in the cause of peace."

Reiterating that England will never accept an ultimatum from Hitler under the guise of "negotiation," The Standard concludes:

"The last hope for genuine peace is that the mounting power of the free common peoples throughout the world will force genuine negotiation."

Eccentric Throws Black Balls And Women Scream 'Bombs'

London, Aug. 28 (CP)—Women screamed "bombs" and scores were knocked to the pavement in a stampede in Downing Street today shortly before the cabinet met.

A suitcase was hurled into the air, releasing several dozen round black objects among the crowd.

However, instead of bombs, it was a shower of black rubber balls which chalked slogans, "peace now," and "Britain must not go to war."

Mounted police arrested a hatless eccentric who had thrown the suitcase.

Why the Weather!

Rain intensity! To have 2.5 inches of water fall in about 3 minutes was the experience at Porto Bello, Panama. If continued for one hour such a downpour would amount to 50 inches, a good year's supply for any agricultural country. At Campo, Calif., 11.5 inches fell in one hour. In London there is a record of 7.3 inches in 6 minutes. The largest monthly amount in the United States is 167.29 inches in December, 1917 at Glenora, Ore. In Canada the largest yearly amount is 260 inches, at Henderson Lake, Vancouver Island. Rain intensity for any place may be calculated in a number of ways, but the best way is to divide the total rainfall for any period, as a month or year, by the number

FIRMS OPEN 'COUNTRY HOMES'

Latest War Risk on German-Italian Controlled Ships Doubled

LONDON, Aug. 28.—(CP)—Many suburban dwellers who for years have caught the 8.25 to come to town to work took trains in the opposite direction today. Over the week-end scores of banks, insurance companies and other business firms opened "country homes" to carry on operations from "safe areas" less subject to hazards of air raids than the congested city district.

New York, Aug. 28— (CP)—Latest war risk rate issued today by United States insurers was $10 for $100 valuation on German-Italian controlled ships sailing for German or Italian ports. This rate went into effect on Saturday and doubled the emergency rate quoted last Thursday.

Ottawa, Aug. 28.—(CP)—Normal summer congregations at most of the Ottawa churches were larger at services yesterday as special prayers for peace were offered. Sermons mostly were on the theme that "war was bound to come unless people underwent a change of heart and returned to faith in God."

APPLE CROPS BETTER IN EUROPE

London, Aug. 28—(CP)—The prospects for the apple crops in all European countries are considerably better than last year, according to reports reaching the Canadian fruit trade commissioner, W. B. Gornall. Yields in 1938, he said, were at rather low levels.

The estimated yield of dessert and cooking apples in the United Kingdom is reported to be well above average. It is not expected to be of record volume, but the crop will be undoubtedly large.

OMIT STOPS AT GERMAN PORTS

These planes have a flying radius with full bombing load of more than 3,000 miles.

THE BLACK WIDOW

The Black Widow is a spider. She is a ferocious creature; she gobbles up her husband when she become tired of him. Some other spiders are cannibalistic in the same way, but the Black Widow holds the spotlight as the husband-devourer de luxe.

H. L. Seamans, the Lethbridge entomologist, who gained fame last year by winning the coveted Professional Institute medal for scientific achievement in the public interest, tells us that the Black Widow has been attracting a great deal of attention in Southern Alberta in recent years. Sensational articles with somewhat over-exaggerated statements have appeared in magazines and weekly journals. These at times have caused a wave of fear to sweep over the country that almost approached a panic. The Dominion Entomological Laboratory at Lethbridge has received many specimens of the Black Widow spider from people who were so thoroughly frightened that they would have gone to unnecessary extremes to avoid or control these insects.

Contrary to the age-old superstition and fear that spiders attack people, spiders actually avoid human beings as much as possible and in most cases will not bite even when initiated. The Black Widow is an exception, not only because it can penetrate the more tender skin but, because its venom is very poisonous. The venom is exceedingly powerful and rapid in its action, but only rarely is the bite fatal to human beings in good health.

The Black Widow spider is not vicious or aggressive, and does not voluntarily attack people. It will, however, bite quite readily any person touching its web when egg-sacs are present, and it is defending them. Usually it bites only when irritated. There is no foundation for the popular belief that the spider will spring from its web and attack a passerby.

According to Dr. Arthur Gibson, the Dominion entomologist, there is no record of anyone having been bitten by the Black Widow in Canada, although there are numerous records of such in the United States.

Reiterating her determination not to surrender any territory under force of armed threats by Germany, Poland continued to prepare for its defence as the capitals of Europe alternately hummed with the preparations for war and the hopes of peace. Ready to match its skill with any enemy, the Polish air force, top left, is standing ready to take to the air should the dreaded war come. Grim determination is graven on the faces of these Polish infantrymen, top right, mustered in Warsaw when the first rumblings of a new crisis became louder last week. President Ignace Moscicki, bottom left, is shown reviewing some of his troops as he served notice on the world that he was prepared to fight for Poland's outlet to the sea—the Polish corridor and Danzig Field artillerymen, bottom right, are reported to have taken up positions facing the German border as war clouds lower over Europe.

ISSUE OF PEACE OR WAR STILL UNDECIDED

Great Britain to Hold Fast To Line Already Laid Down and Last Note Sent to Hitler, Chamberlain States

U. S. Military Experts Express Opinion France and Britain Could Not Send Land Forces to Direct Assistance of Poland in Case of War

STAND BEHIND VISTULA

France and Britain May Send Bombers Over Germany to Encourage the Poles and Germany May Try Out Her Planes Against the British Fleet to Break Blockade

By ANDRUE BERDING

Associated Press Staff Writer

Washington, Aug. 29—(AP)—United States military experts expressed the opinion today that Great Britain and France could not send land forces to the direct assistance of Poland in case of war.

Some of them said they believed the start of a European conflict would be featured on the part of the western democracies by a period of "feeling out the other fellow."

Although calling any predictions the equivalent of looking into a crystal globe, experts here have figured out a prospective campaign about as follows:

War comes......

Germany attacks Poland and defends herself in the west behind the Siegfried or Limes line.

The Poles make their stand behind the Vistula river, which flows south from Danzig.

May Start Blockade

Britain and France institute a naval blockade of Germany, hoping to starve the country as they did in 1914-1918. Germany's institution of food ration even before the war breaks out has impressed some officials here, for the Reich waited a long time after the Great War broke out before doing that.

France mans the Maginot Line but does not break through the Siegfried line. An overwhelming force, in the opinion of military men, might be needed for a successful attack on the Siegfried Line.

Britain sends some planes to France, perhaps a small land force, but keeps the majority of her forces at home. Both Britain and France may send bombers over Germany to encourage the poles.

Germany may try out her planes against the British fleet in an attempt to break the blockade.

Britain and France look around to see how the situation lines up before embarking on a definite campaign.

Italy may or may not come in on the side of Germany. Opinion here is about equally divided.

Respect Neutrality

If Italy does not come in, Britain and France respect her neutrality. The idea that the two western powers would seek to strike at Germany's rear by going across northern Italy and up over the Brenner Pass is considered untenable in military circles here. There is no point, experts say, in forcing Italy into the war on the side of Germany.

If Italy does come in, France strikes at northwestern Italy to paralyze the country's industry, eliminating Italy as quickly as possible—if possible.

There are various other uncertainties. Will Russia mobilize on the Polish border, thus immobilizing a large portion of the Polish army? What will the smaller states like Hungary, Rumania and Turkey do? What they do might change the whole picture.

PARLIAMENT ADJOURNS

London, Aug. 29—(CP)— The House of Commons, after hearing Prime Minister Chamberlain and leaders of the opposition express their determination to stand unitedly with Poland against aggression, adjourned at 3:40 p.m. (10:40 a.m. EDT) to meet again next Tuesday, or earlier, if necessary.

Parliament Rocked with Cheers as Prime Minister Fully Explains all Aspects of the Polish-German Dispute As Respects Great Britain—Chamberlain Says Government will Hope and Still Work for Peace

BRITISH FLEET IS READY

Great Britain has Delivered "Our Final Answer" to a Communication from Hitler says Chamberlain. Obligations to Poland will be Carried Out in their Entirety—Parliament Now Awaits Hitler's Reply

By J. F. SANDERSON

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Aug. 29 (CP Cable)—The British nation is ready for any eventuality, Prime Minister Chamberlain told a wildly cheering House of Commons today while the world still looked to Adolf Hitler to make the choice between peace and war.

After reviewing Britain's far-flung war preparations, the Prime Minister said the British people may be slow to make up their minds "but when they do they do not readily let go".

"The issue of peace or war is undecided. We still hope and will work for peace, but will not abate any jot of our resolution to hold fast to the lines which we have laid down for ourselves."

This was the way the Prime Minister summed up the situation to the House: "The catastrophe is not yet upon us. I cannot say that the danger of it has yet in any way receded."

In a low voice which seldom rose above conversational tone, Mr. Chamberlain repeated Britain's determination to stand by its military pledge to Poland.

SWIFTLY MOVING EVENTS TRACED

In much the same manner as the president of a corporation addressing his board of directors, the Prime Minister traced the swiftly moving diplomatic events since Hitler called Sir Nevile Henderson to his Berlin Chancellery Friday with his peace offer. These terms, the Prime Minister said, could not be made public because of the delicacy of the situation, but in these words he indicated their general tenor:

"Herr Hitler was concerned to impress upon His Majesty's Government his wish for an Anglo-German understanding of complete and lasting character. On the other hand, he left His Majesty's Government in no doubt as to the urgency of settling Polish-German questions.

"His Majesty's Government have also frequently stated their desire to see the realization of such an Anglo-German understanding and, as soon as circumstances permit, they would naturally welcome an opportunity of discussing with Germany the several issues, settlement of which would have to find a place in any permanent agreement.

"But everything turns upon the manner in which the immediate differences between Germany and Poland can be handled and the nature of the proposals which might be made for any settlement, for we have made it plain that our obligations to Poland, passed into formal shape by the agreement signed on Aug. 25, will be carried out.

TENSION MUST LESSEN

"His Majesty's Government have said more than once publicly that German-Polish differences should be capable of solution by peaceful means.

"Meanwhile the first prerequisite if there is to be any chance of useful discussion is that the tension created by frontier clashes and by reports of incidents on both sides of the border should be diminished.

"His Majesty's Government accordingly hope that both governments will use their best endeavor to present the occurrence of such incidents, the circulation of exaggerated reports, and all other activities that result in dangerous inflammation of opinion."

Britain, he repeated, would welcome an equitable settlement of the German-Polish dispute by free negotiation and also would welcome a wider settlement which would benefit Europe and the whole world. At this stage, however, everything depends on Hitler's reply to the British Government's message, now being awaited in London.

Queen of Netherlands and King of Belgians Reported to have Offered 'Good Offices' Effort to Mediate Crisis

TALKS AT BRUSSELS

Proposal is Reported to have Been Advanced Between Belgian Premier and Ambassadors of Major Powers

Paris, Aug. 29—(AP)—King Leopold of the Belgians and Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands were reported today in a quarter close to the French Foreign Office to have offered their "good offices" for an effort to mediate the German-Polish crisis.

The two powers, these sources said, have made their offers to France, Great Britain, Germany, Italy and Poland.

France was said to have received the Belgian and Netherlands communications this morning and to have replied with a prompt acceptance.

Conversations Held at Brussels

The proposal of mediation in search of a peaceful settlement of the strife between Germany and Poland was reported to have been advanced during conversations at Brussels last night between Belgian Premier Hubert Pierlot and Ambassadors of the major powers.

Final decisions by Britain and France whether to attempt to put the Belgian-Netherlands offer into execution was understood to depend on Adolf Hitler's reply to the British note which was delivered to him last night by Ambassador Sir Nevile Henderson.

Prime Minister Chamberlain, addressing the House of Commons today, said this reply would determine whether the numerous forces working for peace would be put into motion.

FRANCE HAS HAD ENOUGH MENACES; NO NEW MUNICH

Expects it May be Known Today if Hitler Accepts Arbitration

Paris, Aug. 29—(AP)— France expected to find out today whether Fuehrer Hitler would negotiate his claims on Poland.

The country awaited the report of the British Ambassador to Berlin, Sir Nevile Henderson, who carried his government's communication to Hitler last night.

Diplomatic quarters said they understood Hitler told Sir Nevile that he would reply today or tomorrow. But they believed the three allied nations—France, Great Britain and Poland—would know before then whether there was a chance of steering Germany into a negotiation frame of mind to try to save European peace.

Optimism Felt In Berlin Over Premier's Words

By LOUIS P. LOCHNER

Associated Press Staff Writer

Berlin, Aug. 29—(AP)—Optimism spread in Berlin this afternoon after entirely unofficial and unverified reports were heard that the British government was willing to consider "conciliatory and far-reaching" solutions of both the Polish-German issue and European problems generally.

The note from the British government, which Sir Nevile Henderson brought with him last night from London, was reported to be such that negotiations between London and Berlin might continue.

Chamberlain's Words Stressed

Those circles in Germany which clung to an optimistic view laid stress upon Prime Minister Chamberlain's assertion in the House of Commons today that "the British government would hope that if an equitable settlement of Polish-German differences could be reached by free negotiation, that this might lead on to a wider agreement which would accrue to the lasting benefit for Europe and the world at large."

Spirit of Optimism Felt

"That," exclaimed one commentator with close government connections, "is at last getting down to fundamentals. If out of it all will come a general European settlement then perhaps this whole terrible situation we are all going through has been worth while."

KONIGSBERG ON WAY TO GERMANY

German Freighter Obtains Release from Admiralty Court

Quebec, Aug. 29—(CP)—The German freighter Konigsberg sailed down the St. Lawrence toward the open sea and the fatherland today after obtaining release last night from Admiralty Court here where she had been held in port since Friday for failure to deliver a cargo to Canadian consignees.

Warrants for the arrest of the ship were sworn out by four Canadian firms when she put out from Sorel Friday without delivering an 800-ton cargo.

Adjutor Lachance, Registrar of the Admiralty Court, gave the ship's release to Captain Wilhelm Stegert after the skipper had posted a $20,000 bond, covering the claims of the four concerns. The concerns' legal representative, John Home of Quebec, informed Lachance that the bond satisfied his claims.

The court registrar then released the vessel and notified custom officials. The vessel's full cargo, originally destined for Montreal, was unloaded here during the weekend and placed in a harbor shed. The cargo, consisting of zinc oxide, household effects, rubber goods and other merchandise, will be shipped to Montreal, Toronto and other Canadian points.

PREMIER IN OTTAWA

Ottawa, Aug. 29—(CP)— Premier Mitchell Hepburn and Attorney General Gordon Conant of Ontario arrived here today after flying from Toronto.

They met Defence Minister Mackenzie shortly afterwards at lunch. The two Ontario Ministers came here to discuss the division of responsibility for the protection of key industries and power plants in Ontario.

GERMANS BLAMED FOR NEW SERIES SUBVERSIVE ACTS

Branded as 'Lies' Hitler's Declarations Germans Victims of Terrorism

SEVEN KILLED

Explosion Wrecked Railroad Station at Tarnow in South Poland

Warsaw, Aug. 29—(AP)— Poles blamed Germans for a new series of subversive acts through this war-threatened country today while the press unanimously branded as 'lies' Fuehrer Hitler's declarations that his countrymen are the victims of terrorism in Poland.

Seven persons were reported killed when an explosion wrecked the railroad station at Tarnow in southern Poland. Police arrested two Germans.

DOOR STILL OPEN FOR SETTLEMENT OF THE DISPUTE

Next Move is Strictly up to Fuehrer Hitler, London Papers Announce

PAUSE IN EVENTS

By PAT USSHER

Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 29—(CP Cable)—Morning papers brought the news that the door is still open for a peaceful settlement of the situation created by Germany's demands on Poland but the editorials stressed that Great Britain is ready to take up arms if necessary.

The issue lies with Fuehrer Hitler, the papers said. It is up to him to decide whether Europe will be plunged into a war.

The Conservative Daily Telegraph remarked that the exchanges between the British cabinet and the Fuehrer had at least brought about a "pause in the march of events." Britain's latest message, it said, "cannot be denied an answer although it is realized that the answer may bolt and bar a door which still stands at the latch."

Paris Cafe Life As In War Days

Paris, Aug. 29—(AP)—The Paris of night clubs, cafes and boulevards turned back today to the days of the Great War—at least sentimentally.

There were many things reminiscent of 1914-1918. Outside a boulevard hotel last night, a grizzled old war veteran, with a peg-leg and a hook on one hand, capitalized on the crisis by digging up an ancient barrel-organ on which he ground out a collection of war tunes.

Cafes were gay. Orchestras blazed away with songs of the Great War—lilting songs about what the poilu said to the sergeant, and what—with um-da-da's for the cuss-words—the sergeant replied.

Sir N. Henderson Remains In Berlin To Watch Events

Meeting Between Ambassador and Adolf Hitler "Not Altogether Useless" Observers Declare But There is no Reason for Optimism

MORE TROOPS CALLED

Gloomy Certainties were Dispatching of More German Troops to the East and the Calling of More Reservists

Berlin, Aug. 29—(AP)—The special plane of Sir Nevile Henderson, British Ambassador to Germany, left Templehof Airdrome a few minutes after noon (7 a.m. EDT) today without Sir Nevile but with "several British passengers" on board.

The British Embassy declined to explain why the Ambassador remained in Berlin. Nor would it disclose whether the "British passengers" were taking any documents with them.

The Embassy spokesman said all questions must be referred to the Foreign Office press department in London.

Received in Chancellery

Fuehrer Hitler, now in the open with a public demand for Danzig, the Polish Corridor and other concessions from Poland, received Sir Nevile for a possibly history-making conference in the palatial chancellery in the Wilhelmstrasse shortly before midnight.

Anxious observers who were grasping at straws said the meeting between the Ambassador and the Fuehrer was "not altogether useless."

There were vague hints that neither side had turned down the possibility of further negotiation.

EMPIRE IS READY TO MEET ISSUE OF THE DISPUTE

Emergency Legislation and Special Decrees have all Been Passed

London, Aug. 29—(CP Cable)—The empire is ready to meet war—if it comes.

Emergency legislation or special decrees have been passed enabling the Dominions, colonies and mandated territories to take instant action if Germany's dispute with Poland makes it necessary.

Briefly here is what has been done:

At Ottawa emergency war legislation passed during the Great War has never been repealed and consequently the Canadian government can act at a moment's notice. The Dominion has assumed control of shipping, called up volunteers, and is guarding all key points. The cabinet council has held important sessions and parliament could be summoned if the occasion demands it.

Germans Surprised by Rationing Cake Shaving Soap to Last 5 Months

Berlin, Aug. 29—(AP)—A hundred dollar bill, or 1,000 marks, could not buy two sticks of shaving soap, a dozen handkerchiefs, or three dresses in Berlin today.

And without a letter stamped and sealed by a Nazi authority, the richest man in Berlin couldn't buy a pair of shoes.

Many Germans, most of whom are fairly prosperous these days, learned with a jolt yesterday that money is useless when a government, as determined and efficient as the Reich, decides to clamp down a war-time rationing system.

A man could buy one, but not two sticks of shaving soap. But to get even that one he would have to dig up a little ticket which would not be duplicated for five months.

Any woman with two dresses couldn't buy a third.

In a situation approximating war time conditions, Nazi authorities held, two dresses are enough for a woman.

Many things went wrong yesterday as Berlin introduced the rationing system. The milk didn't come until noon.

Worried merchants tried to figure out the regulations. They attempted to make deliveries despite the fact motorcycles had been requisitioned and thousands of drivers summoned for service. They tried to pacify customers who thought they ought to have more tea.

The sudden application of the rationing system was an unexpected blow which drove home the realization war may be very near.

Previously, Germans by and large had believed with confidence another Hitler coup would save peace and yet give Germany just what it wanted.

But the pink marmalade, milk, butter and textile certificates which excited housewives waved about as they stormed the shops awakened in many the fear this crisis may be more serious than anything modern Germany yet has faced.

CRISIS BRIEFS

Calgary, Aug. 29—(CP)— Scenes reminiscent of the Great War years were re-enacted here last night when more than 300 Calgarians bid farewell to 77 members of the Royal Canadian Air Force who left on a special train for Eastern Canada. The R.C.A.F. bomber squadron will be stationed at Dartmouth, N.S., Halifax, Newfoundland and Montreal, it was learned.

Calgary, Aug. 29—(CP)—All substations of Calgary's electric light department were closed to the public yesterday and floodlight equipment was installed near transformers as precautionary measures against sabotage in the event of war. Armories, bridges and key points on lines of communication are being guarded in other parts of Alberta.

Berlin, Aug. 29—(AP)—Adolf Hitler, in keeping with his government's emergency measures, has put himself and the staff of his Wilhelmstrasse Chancellery on a strict one-course meal basis.

Men in close contact with the chancellery said the Fuehrer instructed his cook to strike soup and dessert from bill of fare for the time being.

Coffee, rare in every household, also is scarce at the chancellery, informants said.

St. Catharines, Ont., Aug. 29 — (CP)—Mayor Charles Daley told the St. Catharines city council last night that families of unemployed men who enlist for guard duty on the Welland ship canal will not be cut off relief until their earnings exceed their relief allowances. Mayor Daley said the opportunity was open to men on relief to enlist and render a service to the country.

Berlin, Aug. 29—(AP)—Optimists saw a silver lining in the war clouds today when it became known that several foreign air lines had resumed regular service with Germany and that the German Lufthansa again flies to a number of countries including England.

One informant said he knew that the Swiss and the Swedish air lines again were flying to Germany and that Germany had resumed service to Istanbul and Rome.

London, Aug. 29—(CP)— The Ministry for Civilian Defence today ordered the elimination of all directional signs visible from the air from public and private buildings, railway stations, athletic fields and parks.

Sydney, N.S., Aug. 29—(CP) — The German freighter Helen, which left Yarmouth, N.S. hastily without completing loading of cargo, put into Sydney Monday to take on fuel. Sydney is about 400 miles from Yarmouth.

Port officials said the vessel would be bunkered as soon as a vacancy occurred in the line of waiting craft at the coal piers.

Berne, Aug. 29—(AP)—The Swiss federal council, or cabinet, today called parliament for Wednesday to vote the council full powers in case of war, discuss general elections and express confidence in the government.

CEMENT "POURED" FOR NEW CITADEL

With near-perfect weather playing an important part, the pouring of cement on the base walls of the new Salvation Army Citadel on Pinnacle Street is proceeding satisfactorily.

Workmen have brought the front base wall to its regular height slightly above ground level, and other work is now under way on the side and back walls. Another wall approximately twelve inches will be constructed atop the eighteen inch base wall. Excavation is practically finished, while other men are busy erecting forms for the construction of further cement projects.

BASS STRIKES TWICE ON DIFFERENT BAITS

The old poser of who owns the fish was again encountered yesterday by Norman Kellar and Barney Mundville local residents, both of whom while fishing in the bay yesterday caught and landed the same bass at the same time.

The fish had struck on the bait offered by one of the fishermen and as it ran in the opposite direction under the boat, it encountered a second bait which it immediately gulped. Securely hooked to both lines, the bass, a fine two pound specimen was landed by both men.

BEAR ADDS NOVELTY TO FISHING TRIP

A large bear estimated to weigh well in the neighborhood of 300 pounds added to the novelty of week end fishing trip in Arden district for Mr. Stanley Kerr, local mechanic, and companion.

Both men, ardent fishermen, were engaged at the art when the bear noisily broke cover through a heavy thicket and meandered down to the lake, apparently unafraid of the men but a short distance away. After calm survey of the scene the bear slowly ambled off.

FRANKFORD MAN ADMITTED TO HOSPITAL

Quite seriously burned about the hand, arm and face while working in an electrical shop near Frankford, George Tompkins, twenty-eight-year-old resident of that village was admitted to Belleville General Hospital yesterday where he is under the care of Dr. G. H. Stobie.

His condition today was reported as being favorable although he will be confined to hospital for the next week or ten days.

12 ARMY PLANES ROAR OVER CITY

Unusual Sight Does Not Lessen the High Interest In European Situation

Twelve army planes roaring over the city in "V" formation of three machines each, sent crowds of people racing to their windows and doors today. In less time that one can wink an eye Front Street in the vicinity of the city market was nearly filled with a crowd of curious humans, hands shading eyes as the squadron roared overhead in a westerly direction.

The unusual sight did anything but lessen the high interest in the European situation, that has characterized the residents of this city since late last week. People rushed to the front windows of the Ontario-Intelligencer building, where latest bulletins were being posted.

There was a glance of expectant curiosity in the eyes of many as they turned from where the yellow planes raced overhead to disappear like specks in the western sky, to the bulletins on the newspaper windows. On everyone's lips was the question, "what does it mean?" People stood in little groups conversing earnestly for minutes after the machines had disappeared.

Police Blotter

Two Stirling residents, Harry Snarr and Ernest Hamilton, were arrested by Provincial Constable Don Carruthers on charges of the theft of scrap metal and later remanded to the custody of the Belleville jail today.

Snarr is charged with stealing scrap metal from the Stirling Hydro Commission, while Hamilton is alleged by police to have taken scrap metal from the farm of W. Elliott, Stirling. The two men were remanded until Thursday.

John McLaughlin, proprietor of the Mayfair Beauty Salon, East Bridge St., reported a robbery to city police today. Mr. McLaughlin informed police that some person had affected entrance to his place of business through a rear door and had stolen a raincoat, valued at $25.00 and three radio tubes. Other articles of a minor nature were thought missing. Later police found the rear entrance had been forced open by the use of a sharp metal instrument.

An inebriate shared the cell block with three transients at the police station last night.

DAVIS INHALATOR ARRIVES IN CITY

Demonstrations Given Before Medical Men and Members of Fire Dept.

The last word in life-saving apparatus of its kind and bearing the approval of the Canadian and American Medical Associations and the Canadian Gas Association, a Davis inhalator, purchased by the city council arrived at Fire-Hall No. 1 yesterday where approved demonstrations were carried out.

Under the eyes of Dr. G. S. Cronk, city medical officer, Dr. R. S. Gibson, Mr. Gordon Friesen, administrator of the Belleville General Hospital and other officials of that institution, the new inhalator was given demonstrations at the city fire-halls and at the hospital itself. Official approval of the instrument was given by the above-mentioned officials.

The new inhalator will be available at all times from this Park.

The inhalator is equipped with two separate and distinct nozzles, making it caapble of delivering oxygen to two persons at the same time. Guesswork, on the part of operators of the new instrument is eliminated as tiny fans enclosed in small round glass containers inform instantly whether drowing persons or those under the influence of gases are being supplied with the life-going oxygen.

Three oxygen tanks are supplied with the instrument two of which can be used when in operation and the third an emergency tank to take care of operations, where additional oxygen is needed.

An extra mouthpiece for the use of inhalation when children need treatment is also supplied with the inhalator.

The operation of the new instrument is simple, Fire Chief William Lynch stated this morning. It can be used by the average person with a few seconds instruction.

Refuses Return Passage to Canada

A cabled offer of return passage from England to Canada by Dr. Lily B. Mathieson of this city to her daughter, Mary Elizabeth Mathieson at present in government employ, London, England, was refused in a message by air mail received this week.

"Thanks for the kind offer and your thought of me, but here we feel quite serene and unworried," wrote Miss Mathieson from London.

In the letter carried to Belleville from London in three days by North Atlantic Airmail, Miss Mathieson who is a valued member of the Imperial Institute of Britain, a graduate official of the A.R.P., and an art specialist employed by the Department of Mineral Intelligence confided that she will "have work here to do."

"Every precaution has been taken and we have already made arrangements to evacuate, if necessary.

"The general opinion here is that the upset can't last long, and we feel quite serene and unworried," she added.

Facts About the Fair

The Exhibition will commence on Tuesday, August 29, and close at midnight, Thursday, August 31st.

Gates will open at eight o'clock on the morning of each day, and remain open until after eleven o'clock.

The price of admission will be 25 cents for adults, 15 cents for children over ten years of age. A 25 cent fee for all automobiles entering the grounds will be paid.

There will be no cost attached to visiting the various buildings, and a trip through the various sections will well repay the visitor. Each merchant, firm and exhibitor will have some special interesting display and many of them will have liberal quantities of samples and literature. Hundreds of dollars worth of free merchandise will be given away during the fair to the holders of the various winning tickets in the individual competitions which entail no cost to competitors.

There will be ample bus and taxi service from the downtown section to the fair and cars and buses will in the majority of cases carry Fair identifying cards on windshields.

Regular meals and restaurant facilities will be available on the grounds. In addition there will be numerous food stands at which prices will be controlled by the fair executive.

One of largest carnival companies on the road will provide daily and nightly entertainment. There will be the usual free shows in addition to the afternoon and evening performances in front of the bandstand.

Music will be furnished daily and nightly by the Belleville Municipal Band.

One of the features, the annual Baby Show, will be held on Wednesday afternoon at the bandstand in the front grounds.

WARRIORS' HUSBANDS SAY FAREWELL

A 1939 version of the old world war gag — "Kiss Me Sergeant" — seen at Croydon Station, Surrey, as the 3rd Surrey company of the Women's Territorial Service left for training camp. Husbands and boy friends were on hand to see the amazons off and the impromptu kissing bee amused and amazed onlookers.

SADDENING SIGHTS FILL STORE WINDOWS

Gloomy signs for city school children have been appearing in shop windows and on counters of downtown stores during the past several days, recalling the mournful fact that there are but a few days left for free and open holidays. Stores have been laying in large supplies of books and other school aids while printed signs displayed prominently in windows and on counters call attention to the need of "Get ready for School Now".

Clothing establishments are displaying the latest togs for children, and holiday displays in other stores are fast giving away to Fall necessities of living in city homes.

BELLEVILLE 3-DAY

by early afternoon the scores of visitors had been increased to a count of many hundreds.

Some work remained to be done in some of the buildings, and a few of the exhibitors were rushing last minute preparations this morning. By late afternoon, however, it is expected that the final touches will have been given the exhibits, and all will be in readiness for the steady stream of visitors wending in and out of the various buildings this evening.

Busiest, Noisiest Day

Today was Children's Day, a day full and replete devoted to the interests of juvenile Belleville, and a day which by late afternoon had become perhaps the busiest, most hectic and noisiest day which will be experienced by those in charge. Through the blatant, colorful, noisy midway hundreds of the children trooped and congregated. Nickels and dimes and pennies were spent nimbly and freely by the clamoring youngsters who surged and eddied through the various amusements and lanes of the buildings and entertainment section.

But it was a day free of accidents or mishaps as far as could be learned. Hundreds of the youngsters enjoyed themselves to the full, and until a late hour this afternoon the noise and fury had swelled and rung. Not until darkness had spread its enveloping cloak over grounds and buildings did the first trek of the tired youngsters, homeward bound, occur. Laden with camples of the various products upon display they chattered happily subdued by the tiredness of exhaustion.

Appeal to Adults

But not all exhibits in display today were those desired only to attract the interest of the younger mind. To many adults within the grounds the annual fair was a different, a newer and a fresher panorama of the product of field and forest and busy mill and factory. Samples of the genius of man from work bench and soil were on display, different and more complete perhaps than in previous years.

This afternoon the first serious work of the fair was being undertaken by the special judges named for the examination and scoring of dairy products, roots and vegetables, fruit, flowers, ladies' work and domestic science. And never had exhibits been presented in as complete and perfect condition, it was stated by those in charge.

Acres of Exhibits

To the interested visitor apparently acres of exhibits are on the grounds for examination. The fact that the livestock entries are the heaviest in years will tempt many to visit the long row of stables where beautiful horses nicker and whinny softly in their straw floored stalls. Tiny inquisitive colts with velvety noses will form the centre of attraction for many, the heavier classes of work horses, the streamlined little race horses will all hold their own particular attraction for the visitors.

Today the air was fairly cool for the heavily fleeced sheep, hundreds of them which will also be on view at the far end of the stables. Last year owners and exhibits were faced with the heat question, and it was admitted that the sultriness of the days had added to the discomfort of these animals. Other classes of livestock also felt the discomfort of the warmth, but today's conditions were perfect for the showing of these classes of exhibits.

Fine Birds

In the poultry house may be seen the most complete display and the heaviest exhibit of birds, an exhibit which rivals in size any shown at any fair or exhibit in Ontario, barring the Ottawa Fair and the National Exhibition it was stated by this committee. "And at that, we believe we have here almost as many as are shown at Toronto", it was declared by an attendant.

This evening before the grandstand as in years past the first of the nightly open air shows will be presented what is expected to be a record attendance. New and different acts have been arranged, acts of individual performances which have been and will be shown at fairs many times Belleville's size will be presented for public approval. Many of the acts are headliners and worthy of the excellent advance notice given.

HOUSE IS BURNED NEAR FRANKFORD

Family Away at Time and It is Understood No Insurance Carried on Property

A frame house and drive-shed owned by Orloff Pearson and situated in the 6th Concession of Sidney Township, about three miles east of Frankford, was totally destroyed by fire Monday night, Aug. 28th, shortly before ten o'clock. The members of the family were absent from home at the time. Neighbors hastened to the burning house and succeeded in saving some of the household effects. Mr. Pearson had his supply of wood for the winter in store and this was burned.

It is understood that there is no insurance and the loss to the family will be severe.

The Stars Say

For Wednesday, August 30

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

FAIRLY moderate success may be looked for on this day, although there may be some doubtful conditions to be met with cleverness and precaution. The situation is not a crucial one, but calls for tact and diplomacy. There may be some delays or disappointments of a minor order. Rash and impulsive action would prove a menace. With care and sagacity there are financial benefits in store.

If It IS Your Birthday

Those whose birthday it is may expect a fairly successful year, with some advancement and benefits. But there also may be some small delays or disappointments. Impetuosity and strife would be perilous. Smooth over difficulties with tact.

A child born on this day may be rather genial, amiable and fun-loving, having a fairly successful life by working along lines of least resistence.

The historian, Mrs. Percy MacMullen gave a detailed account of family history which has been synopsized for publicity dating back over one hundred years ago when the late Mr. and Mrs. Stephen MacMillan with their five boys, Andrew, Hugh, Alexander, Ebenezer and Green and their two daughters, Fanny and Margaret left Edinburgh, Scotland and journeyed to the shores of Canada. On their arrival they settled in Rawdon Township. Margaret and Green died a few years later.

As these folk did very little writing the name was gradually cut and at the present time the family are known as MacMullen, or MacMullan, of Scottish designation while others use McMullen spelled the same as those of Irish descent.

During the past year the historian has actually traced over four hundred descendants and these are scattered all over Canada and the United States.

Beginning with that early family Andrew married Catherine Wescott and settled in Seymour Township and nine children blessed this union. There are over one hundred of this clan living but none were present at the picnic.

Hugh married Catherine Smith and settled on the Oak Hills. His one son William F. was present also sixteen other members of that branch of the family.

Alexander married Mandy Johnson and remained in Rawdon Township. Both he and his wife are buried in Mount Pleasant Cemetery. Twelve children blessed this union and about seventy-five reside in the State of Wisconsin, U. S. A. A son, William of Sidney was present at the picnic. This branch has one hundred and seventy-eight descendants and over thirty were present.

Ebenezer married Sarah Adams and settled in Rawdon Township. He and his wife are buried in Bethel Cemetery. Six children blessed this union and only one is living, Mrs. Fanny Wannamaker, Glen Miller. There are around seventy descendants, nine were in attendance.

Fanny MacMullen married John Wesley Wellington of Stirling and later they went to the Madoc district to reside. There were four children in this union and one is alive, Margaret, who is Mrs. E. L. Weiss living with her daughter in Detroit.

There are over forty in this branch and they live in and around Madoc, at London and in New Jersey and Detroit, U. S. A. Only three were present, Mrs. Geo. West, Madoc, Mrs. Alexander Wellington and daughter Isobel of Chatham, New Jersey.

Special mention was made that Douglas Evjue, aged thirteen, grandson of Mrs. Maggie McKee of Phillips, Wisconsin, has won seven gold medals for his musical ability and has been heard in several cornet solos over station W.S.A.U.

During the year there were four births (1)—Frances Barton, Campbellford, (2)—Thelma Ann Stickle, Johnstown, (3)—Grace Clarke, Halloway and Baby Reid, a daughter, born to Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Reid, Belleville on Saturday, August 19th.

One marriage—Margaret Danford to Melville Tanner.

Seven deaths—Mrs. Carl Barton, Campbellford; Mr. Samuel S. McComb, Bonarlaw; Mrs. Harry Dulmage, London; Mrs. George McMullen, Oak Hills; Mrs. William W. Kent, Belleville; Mr. Herbie Black, Toronto; Mrs. Henry Moyer, Green Bay, Wisconsin.

A family tree was worked out on sheets of cardboard showing each branch of the clan and the descendants down to the present time.

The older folk spent the balance of the afternoon reminiscing and becoming better acquainted while the younger members enjoyed the water and sports.

Several members of the clan are planning to attend the 1940 picnic and hope to arrange their holidays accordingly.

The re-union was most successful even though a small portion of the clan were in attendance.

Peaches, Watermelons, Sweet Corn Feature of Today's Market

A young avalanche of peaches divided interest with European war news at the city market today. The fruit fresh from the orchards of the Niagara and other districts was plentifully scattered all over the market with one vendor taking possession of the sidewalk near the city hall.

Prices marked a new low for this particular fruit as competition became keen with the advent of additional stocks and six-quart baskets dropped as low as twenty cents each. General quotations however hovered around the twenty-five cent mark.

Watermelons and canteloupes were likewise plentiful with good quality stocks being offered. Large watermelons were quoted at from ten cents each with higher prices ranging according to quality and size of the melons.

Canteloupe could be had in all sizes and prices with low being noted at five cents each.

Tomato and potato quotations were firm with the former selling at fifty-five and sixty cents the bushel and the "spuds" at one dollar for the same quantity, and twenty-five and thirty cents the peck. New vegetables were steady at week-end prices.

Sweet corn held the same good quality that characterized the Saturday offering. with choice ears offered at fifteen cents the dozen. Small fruits showed no change with huckleberries, and currants offered at ten cents the box. Eggs were quoted at twenty-eight cents the dozen with a few mediums quoted at a cent or two less.

White fish was quoted at seventeen cents the pound.

SIR N. HENDERSON

But there was not the slightest chance of getting official or authoritative admissions that there is any reason for this glimmer of optimism.

More Troops Dispatched

Among the gloomy certainties today were the dispatch of more German troop trains eastward, the calling of more reservists, the requisitioning of motor vehicles, the rapid change of all life in Germany from a peacetime to a wartime basis.

The seriousness of the meeting between Hitler and Sir Nevile impressed the crowd which stood outside the chancellery last night. There was no cheering either for Hitler or the Ambassador as Sir Nevile's big black limousine passed.

Want Reaction

One reason for Sir Nevile's haste to see Hitler, it was reliably reported, was a desire by the British government to get Hitler's reaction to the communication submitted by London before the meeting of the British parliament.

The fact that the Ambassador and Hitler, who brought his Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop to last night's meeting, talked for an hour and 20 minutes stimulated hope in some quarters.

Observers said: "It doesn't take long to say 'no' but negotiations take time."

CONSTIPATION DULLS YOUR BRAIN

● You can't think clearly when constipation keeps you feeling heavy and headachy. Millions of people make sluggards out of their intestines by eating food that fails to supply the right kind of bulk. Get back to regular bowel movements. Add Kellogg's ALL-BRAN to your diet. ALL-BRAN helps to form a soft "bulky" mass that gets at the cause of common constipation. Start today on this easy routine: Eat ALL-BRAN for breakfast; drink plenty of water. Feel alert once more!

FRANCE HAS HAD

French sources said France's general mobilization order was ready—if needed. The nation already has called up eight reservist classes. Requisitioning of all forms of transportation proceeded smoothly.

Civilians pasted black paper over windows and put in blue light bulbs as they did a year ago in the Sudeten crisis that ended in the Munich conference.

No Second Munich

Frenchmen of all walks of life said there was no question of another Munich. Impartial observers could not detect the slightest crack in this French resolution.

French sources said Premier Daladier and Hitler "did not talk the same language" in their exchange of letters over the Polish dispute. The French, therefore, awaited keenly the language contained in the note Sir Nevile took to Berlin.

Many believe the note was designed to set the German-Polish issue in as clear and unambiguous manner as possible.

They also suggested the note was framed so as to leave a "peace door" open.

Some French leaders continued to speculate on Italy's role. Some still suggested Premier Mussolini might offer himself as a mediator as he did a year ago. But none of them were banking very strongly on it, for the reason that they could not see how Hitler could change front following his letter to Daladier.

'They Shall Not Pass'

Charles Morice, writing in Le Petit Parisien, summed up the French attitude as:

"Frenchmen have had enough. They are ready for the supreme sacrifice. There is no hate for the German people. But enough of these menaces. The moment has come to repeat the famous words 'they shall not pass'."

Government censorship was in operation.

Careful husbanding of economic power was well under way. The official journal, published this morning, carried a decree forbidding exports of sugar, cereals, vegetable oils, medical supplies, surgical instruments, wood, cotton, oil, gasoline, rubber goods, nickel and metal products, and so forth.

President Albert Lebrun quietly observed his 68th birthday, after talking with General Mcxime Weygand yesterday.

Crisis Briefs

Winnipeg, Aug. 29—(CP)— Militia guards equipped with rifles and fixed bayonets patrolled Winnipeg's Stevenson Airport and several district railway bridges today as military authorities took extensive precautions to guard the city against sabotage. Army, air force and Royal Canadian Mounted Police were on standing orders for emergency duty. All permanent military forces were on duty, either at barracks or at assigned posts.

Vancouver, Aug. 29—(CP)—Canada is prepared to stand behind the British Empire and other world democracies, Lieutenant-Governor Eric W. Hamber said in a luncheon address here yesterday.

"No part of the empire will ever forsake the priveleges of the Magna Charta," he said. "We pray for peace, we hope for peace, but not at any sacrifice."

Bombay, Aug. 29—(AP)—Mohandas Gandhi expressed the wish today that Adolf Hitler would respond to the appeals for peace addressed to him by various leaders. In a statement Gandhi said: "I personally would not purchase my own country's freedom by violence even if such a thing were possible. My faith in the wise saying that what is gained by the sword will be lost by the sword is imperishable."

London, Aug. 29—(CP)— The Queen returned to London today from Balmoral. A crowd at Euston Station cheered on her arrival. The King broke off his holiday at Balmoral earlier because of the international situation. Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose are remaining in Scotland. The Queen was accompanied by Lady Hyde, lady-in-waiting, and Colonel Piers Legh, equerry to the King.

Liverpool, Aug. 29—(CP)—Within one hour after a new recruiting office had been opened here today enough applications had been received to man two new anti-aircraft batteries.

Pretoria, Aug. 29—(CP Cable) — Pending the meetings of parliament Sept. 2, the government has taken no steps to control shipping of South African registry.

(The United Kingdom and Canadian governments have assumed control of merchant shipping in their respective jurisdictions.)

TO LEAD AMERICANS.

Colonel Charles Sweeny, who led U. S. volunteers to France in 1914, will command an American volunteer infantry division of 10,000 men which will fight for the democracies in the event of a war in Europe. The second in command will be Brigadier-General Henry U. Reilly, of the U. S. Army Officers Reserve Corps. Sweeny admitted that he has a nation-wide recruiting organization in the U. S. and that he has signed up more than 50,000 volunteers, including many active U. S. army officers, who will resign their commissions and go to France if war breaks out.

ON TRIAL BEFORE THE WORLD

Hitler, Nazism, and Germany are on trial as if they appeared in a world court. Use of force means of course different methods than those which are used at trials but nevertheless, these three stand before the bar of the world. Hitler, who is the completest expression of German National Socialism, and has made Germany his instrument, is the one at whom the finger of the world points.

An aroused democracy, declaring that there will be no second Munich, which means no more such events as the seizure of Czechoslovakia, virtually declares "Hitler, you must yield or fight." Attempted sophistry such as Hitler's letter to France's Premier Daladier, pointing out to him how Germany had irrevocably yielded two provinces Alsace and Lorraine to France after wars and wars and how Germany had been unjustly treated over Danzig and the Polish corridor fails.

The whole question to the democracies is this — Hitler has threated force, first said he wouldn't accept arbitration and so must be brought to the judgment bar. In this instance Hitler himself is the one who has brought Adolf Hitler to the bar of justice. Hitler too is the man who has so talked and used force, and built himself a mighty army, with the result that he may find difficulty in explaining things should he seek to yield. If he cannot openly yield will he be able to find a plausible excuse to "save his face"? and what guarantees which must be so solid that they cannot be broken even by a dictator, can he give to Poland's satisfaction?

What intensifies the crisis is that the Danzig and Polish issue is just the sort which provides the democracies with a showdown and also puts Hitler in a spot in which he will find excuses very difficult, as far as the German people are concerned, for Danzig and the Corridor were formerly German and he has stressed the union of the Germans so much, and the rights of German minorities whom he so often finds being ill-treated, that Germans could not easily understand a retreat from his position.

But Germany knows little of what is going on—the Fuehrer thinks and acts for them. Only the departure of troops, mounting of anti-aircraft guns bring realization to Germans that the Fatherland may be soon at war. The people seemingly do not want war and trust implicitly in the man in whom they have to trust.

1938-1939 CRISES

August stole the place of late September this year with the Hitler 1939 crisis. Of a pattern with the Czechoslovakian seizure, the Chancellor has developed his Polish problem and found the German cup of misery over Poland overflowing. But Hitler is a man of words as well as of diplomacy and the world knows he made the crisis and stood with his armed millions to terrify or crush opposition if it dare fight him. It was last October first which saw the real sinister aims of the German Chancellor exposed as Germany took more of the territory than allowed. Not able to keep hands off the republic, Hitler ended it in March and then prepared his drive for Poland's "bloodless conquest", which has failed so far. Can the 1939 crisis be as brief as that of 1938? Today there are two sides facing one another, the democracies determined to fight for law and order and to oppose the use of armed force and it may well be that this crisis will be extended far beyond the limits of the 1938 crisis, even if war does not come. Arbitration would be a lengthy process.

In speaking of conference tables the nations remember what Adolf Hitler said not long ago — that Germany would go armed to a conference. He has taught democracies to be wary and be ready for any emergency.

Children were given the place of honor at the opening of the Belleville Fair today. To them as to adults a fair means a great deal and inspirations gained there through the eye and the ear will be lasting. Opening day is a fitting day for the children to visit the exhibition.

Justice without power is inefficient; power without justice is tyranny. Justice without power is opposed, because there are always wicked men. Power without justice is soon questioned. Justice and power must therefore be brought together, so that whatever is just may be powerful and whatever is powerful may be just.—Blaise Pascal.

It is not possible to found a lasting power upon injustice, perjury and treachery. —Demosthenes.

DRUMS OF AFRICA

Drums of Africa—drums, drums,
And over deserts, the long rain comes;
Drums for a foe, and his limbs begin
To wither away in pain and sin;
And the deep note throbs and the high note hums—
Drums! The age old drums of the jungle
—drums!

Twilight forests with bamboo shade;
Monkeys in yellow acacias curled;
Lakes where the rose flamingos wade,
That color the water and paint the shore
Red as death for a mile or more—
And drums that have echoed around the world!
Buff egrets and the dancing birds,
And the beautiful antelope in herds;
Maiden hair and the deep black fern,
And the glory of orchids at every turn.

Desert, thorns, and the call of death—
Seventy miles to a water hole;
Bones that crackle with choking breath;
The poisonous sting of the swirling flies;
Man's despair when his courage dies,
With respite neither for body nor soul.
Shimmering waves of heat, and then—
The merciless beat of the drums again.
Drums where serpents of death lie curled;
The drums that have echoed around the world.

Drums! After the death of men,
The weird, deep rhythm of drums
again,
Throbs and calls to the African stars!
Though warriors die of battle scars,
And ultimate silence of nations comes,
There will echo the drums of Africa—
drums!

THE THINGS I WORRIED MOST ABOUT NEVER HAPPENED. So said Mark Twain, (Samuel Clemens) the author, in recounting his life experiences. He said that he had worried all through life about this and that, but the things he worried most about never happened. Most people in looking back over life's pathway can duplicate Mark Twain's experience. So what's the use of worrying, it never was worth while — pack up your troubles in your old kit bag, and smile, smile, smile.

PARENTS TALK TOO MUCH, SAYS A WRITER, who recommends a day of laryngitis and compulsory silence as a helpful visitation in any family with young children. Parents, rather than their offspring should be seen not heard, says this revolutionist who thinks there is too much nagging, scolding, etc., which tends to upset the even tenor of the family circle. Like other radical statements perhaps there's a mite of truth in what he says.

"THE LAND OF THE MUSKEG AND THE STUNTED PINE" continues to gild Canada's rainbow with the glow of prosperity. Fifty-eight well-established properties produced gold in March, the output for the month grossing $8,711,972, the fourth highest figure in history, according to the North Bay Nugget.

THE MAN WHO INVENTED THE ZIPPER, A SWEDE, IS DEAD. He made a fortune and retired early to enjoy life. The button is on the way out, apparently, and is no longer the sole support of a man's pants. But the British army retains its loyalty to buttons with more buttons than ever to polish. They're not a-cuttin' of his buttons off, according to Danny Dever, and will continue not to do so, despite the zipper attack, apparently. A report from the Front indicates that there are 38 buttons on the new "battle dress", many of which are merely ornamental. St. Thomas Times-Journal undertakes to trace the rise and fall of the button, tracing it way back to the ice age when the early Britons had trouble keeping their skins together when the north winds blew. The first button was evolved, according to the Times Journal as the result of a Briton on a very cold day making a hole on one side of the skin while he pulled the other side through the slit. That served for a little while, but the slit word and the skin flew open. So the early Briton pondered the problem and broke off a piece of bone from the animal he had been eating, made a sort of peg of it and stuck it through the hole. It stayed that way, and thus man evolved the first button. And from that first button to the zipper there have been many weary years and many first aid horseshoe nails with galluses depending upon slender threads for support.

RATIFICATION OF TREATY DELAYED

Russian Diplomats Fear Outbreak of "Capitalistic War"

Moscow, Aug. 29—(AP)—Soviet Russia cautiously delayed formal ratification of her non-aggression act with Germany today and watched the movement of the European situation.

Most observers thought a speech by Vyacheslaff Molotoff, Soviet Premier and Foreign Commissar, expected to precede ratification, was being delayed because of the possible outbreak of a "capitalistic war."

Foreign observers did not doubt that Russia would ratify the treaty with Germany. But they expected Europe's coming events would decide the tone of Molotoff's speech.

If there is peace, the Soviet Union is expected to claim credit for it. If it's war, she expects to remain neutral. In any event, Molotoff is believed waiting to seize the most effective propaganda angle.

German circles in Moscow professed no concern over the delay, pointing out that under the articles of the pact it became effective when Foreign Ministers Molotoff and Joachim von Ribbentrop initialled the agreement. Ratification, said the Germans, was only an unimportant formality.

The Telegraph said the government could be assured of the full support of parliament in the measures it has taken and added that "it may be confidently taken for granted that the government, in leaving the way open to any such pacific solution of the Danzig question as President Roosevelt has urged in his message to Herr Hitler, have not abated one jot in their determination to resist any attempted solution by force."

The Daily Express (Independent) asserted the "democracies are prepared for negotiations before war but not for negotiations after surrender." It urged that people must adjust their lives to war conditions.

The Daily Herald (Labor) said the "German government and German people have still time to think and weigh the consequences. They have everything to lose by war. They have nothing to lose by peace. For whatever grievances, for whatever just claims they believe they have, the way to a fair and reasonable settlement is permanently open."

The Daily Mail (Ind.) said "the door is still ajar though the aperture is perilously narrow." It rested with Hitler to declare for peace or war the paper added "and if he says 'peace' the British people will be the first to welcome a settlement by negotiation. If he says 'war' the empire is ready."

The Daily Telegraph said that "in the Dominions nothing is more applauded than the determination of Britain and France to refuse to be turned from their appointed course."

Blow at Japan

The Telegraph and the Daily Express (Independent) joined in regarding the German-Soviet pact as a blow at Japan from which Britain has already benefited.

The Moscow-Berlin treaty, said The Express, "astounded the world for a day but it has left the democracies entirely calm. So far the only victim has been the Japanese cabinet, its policy kicked from beneath its feet by unfaithful friends. The Japanese withdrew from their position at Hong Kong. The British people, therefore, look on Ribbentrop's masterpiece without dismay.

"Hitler's message to Daladier may not be his last word. The way is still open for him to withdraw the threat of violence and take the opportunities for a just settlement."

Referring to the latest Anglo-German negotiations, The Daily Telegraph said:

"What the precise terms of these exchanges were we have yet to learn. But they have at least had the effect of imposing a pause on the march of events.

"What is certain is that this latest message of the British cabinet is one that cannot be denied an answer, although it is realized that that answer may bolt or bar the door which still stands on latch."

"The good faith of German policy never sustained a more damaging blow," the newspaper said in comment of the Russian pact.

TODAY DECISIVE ITALY BELIEVES

People, However, Retain Serenity Shown Throughout the Crisis

Rome, Aug. 29—(AP)—Italy felt that today would be a decisive one in Europe's history, but retained the serenity she has shown throughout this crisis.

Watching Berlin for the answer to the great question—peace or war—Italians also looked to Premier Mussolini to step in at the last moment and save peace, in the event the negotiations between the British government and Fuehrer Hitler broke down.

As reports of pessimism and war preparation came in from other countries, life went on normally here in almost every respect. The people displayed optimism which astounded the few remaining foreigners.

Other countries closed frontiers and cut off communications, but Italy maintained open frontiers and normal telephone and telegraph service, except with those countries which cut them off.

Railways operated normally. Food shops had their normal supplies. Theatres were open. Cafes were as busy as ever.

Dim blue anti-air-raid lights were on in a few Rome streets, but most of the city was illuminated brightly.

GERMANS BLAMED

Herbert Frendel, Breslau University student, was arrested at Katowice after allegedly confessing he left three bags containing bombs in a room in Biala, Silesia, which later exploded.

A time bomb was found on the railroad track between Ktaj and Kranow before it exploded.

Warsaw's morning newspapers devoted their front pages to statements and editorial comments charging Germany's allegations of mistreatment of Germans in Poland were merely attempts to stir up hatred of Poland among the German people and an attempt to justify German aggression.

The semi-official Gazetta Polska, discussing the minority question, suggested the working out of a plan for the systematic and gradual exchange of minority populations.

With sea traffic out of Gdynia, Poland's only seaport, imperiled and communication with other ports cut off by a German blockade of railways linking Poland with the outside world, through transportation was at a virtual standstill.

CANADA GUARDS

There was quiet confidence in the capital today that the security of the Canadian people and their property would be protected. The central government has exercised its power to place merchant shipping of Canadian registry under control of an organization of former naval officers, as announced by Defence Minister Mackenzie yesterday.

The Dominion has about 17,000 men of its defence forces of the sea, the air and the land on duty to guard the seacoasts, all lines of communication and transportation and the heavy industries.

Guards Are Placed

The cabinet ministers hourly await a call to cabinet council and the government is ready to exercise the extraordinary powers of action vested in it by the War Measures Act of 1914. By this measure, the government could take decisive steps to meet any contingency until parliament could be called together.

Dr. Arthur Beauchesne, Clerk of the House of Commons, has advised the sessional staff of temporary employees to be ready to report for duty and Major Milton Gregg, V. C., Sergeant-at-arms, hurried home from a vacation to be on hand should parliament be brought together.

Small detachments of soldiers with fixed bayonets mounted guard over vital factories, airports, radio stations, bridges, canals, harbors and armories throughout the Dominion. Halifax and other Maritime Provinces ports were beehives of military activity.

Air Units in Nova Scotia

The government has kept secret just how many service airplanes, anti-aircraft and other artillery units have been concentrated in Nova Scotia, but out-of-town units have been arriving for several days to swell the permanent force and volunteer militia normally in the area. Naval authorities have also made adequate preparations to defend Canada's coasts from invasions.

Premier Mitchell Hepburn of Ontario was expected to arrive here today by airplane from Toronto to confer with Defence Minister Mackenzie on co-ordination of efforts to guard public and government property from sabotage attempts. Premier Duplessis of Quebec was reported ready to join the conference, but there was no confirmation from his office at Quebec.

Offers of military and special guard duty deluged militia headquarters across the country. The Canadian legion is willing to help and 600 of their clubrooms have been placed at disposal of men on active service for their rest and recreation.

Major-General L. R. LaFleche, Deputy Minister of National Defence, returned yesterday to offer his services against advice of his physicians. The Deputy has been absent on sick leave due to a breakdown.

A New Method of Examination For Cancer of the Breast

I have spoken before of three cases in a row where the patient thought she had cancer of the breast and, after much mental anguish, finally went to this surgeon only to find that the lump was an enlarged milk gland, not a cancer.

It might be considered most discouraging that after all the search for the cause of cancer, it has not yet been found, but the greatly encouraging fact is how much known now about what is not cancer, so that needless operations, and radium and Xray treatment may be avoided.

At the meeting of the French Association for the Study of Cancer, a report in the value of trans illumination (putting the suspected growth between a light and the examiner) was presented by several physicians. Dr. Rene Huguenin of the Paris Cancer Institute reported his findings in 800 cases using this method.

Dr. Huguenin pointed out that the old idea that cancer of the breast was not nodular (more than one lump) was wrong, as was also the idea that cancer of the breast was not moveable with the skin. Another idea that was mistaken was that if the lump was large enough to occupy one-fourth of the breast, it was cancer. As a matter of fact, "recent observations show that the extensive and irregular growths are frequently innocent (not cancer) whereas small regular nodes or lumps are often cancer".

Still another mistake that has been made for years is in thinking that when there was a lump in the breast and a lump in the armpit, the lump in the breast was cancer. It is now known that inflammation of the lymph glands can cause these lumps in the armpit and that in some cases of early cancer there are no lumps in the armpit.

What about this new method — putting a light behind the cancer? Will this method show up cancer always?

No. At the Paris Cancer Institute this light method was found to be correct (by later tissue tests) in about 80 percent of cases. The other 20 per cent of cases that appeared to be cancer were tuberculosis, and cysts containing blood.

The chief value of this light method of examination is that it shows all the growths that may be cancer and, by taking a small piece of tissue for examination, growths that are really cancer can be removed by operation. Also, by means of this light, the exact position of the growth is discovered.

Even while Prime Minister Chamberlain was introducing an emergency bill at the emergency session of the British parliament, crews were manning anti-aircraft defences around London and other big cities in England. This gun in London's Hyde Park is one of the weapons that will menace enemy air raiders.

3rd Sidney

3rd Sidney—The Sunday morning service was conducted at Aiken's Church, by the pastor, Rev. L. W. Scott, his subject being "Ships and Men," as taken from Proverbs, 30, verse 19.

Rev. Scott compared the ships in the midst of the sea, with the ships of the human soul, many of which, he said, were laden with cargo that will not be acceptable at its port of destination.

Ships of the soul, laden with joy, peace, truth, integrity, purity and honour, need the love and Grace of God in the heart, to create power necessary for the human soul.

With the Bible for a chart, the conscience as a compass, strong will for good, as a rudder, faith in Jesus as an anchor, prayer as a wireless connection with God, and Jesus as Pilot and Captain, the ships of humanity need not fear. During the service the choir sang, "Sunshine and Shadows."

Chiang Kai-Shek Says China Will Continue To Fight

Chungking, China, Aug. 29—(AP)—General Chiang Kai-Shek declared today China would fight on, regardless of the turn of events in Europe.

"China, not relaxing her resistance to Japanese aggression despite the turn in the international situation, will cope with the rapidly changing world developments in accordance with established policy" said the General's message to the nation and the world.

Meanwhile, reports from Chungking by way of Hong Kong told of the first encounter last night between the Chinese capital's Soviet Russian-equipped air defence squadron and Japanese bombing planes.

(The Chinese defenders were said to have scattered three groups of Japanese bombing planes in a moonlight battle over Chungking.)

Chiang said he was convinced that Chinese resistance to Japan constitutes a main factor in the international trend of opposition to aggressive wars. In the General's opinion, European war could be averted and only Japanese military authorities "would hope for the outbreak of such a war."

Rev. and Mrs. McRae and Joyce of Hilton who are holidaying in Wellington attended the service at Melville church Sunday evening conducted by the M. B. B. Comrades.

Michael B. Auger, Marmora, Feted By Auger - O'Connor Families

Marmora—The largest family reunion to be held in the Marmora district since reunions have been in vogue, took place on the grounds of Tipperary Hotel, Crowe Lake, on Wednesday evening. Supper was served on the lawn at the lakeshore end at seven o'clock for an attendance of one hundred and six relatives and friends of a popular former Marmora boy, Michael B. Auger, of New Liskeard.

It was the third annual reunion of the Auger and O'Connor families and while Michael B. Auger has played the role of host on the two former occasions, this year his position was reversed to that of honored guest, with relatives doing the catering. The tables were described by one of the guests as truly groaning under the heavy weight of the choice viands provided.

Following the report, the guests took up their positions near the verandah, where ample seating accommodation had been furnished. Ray Underwood proved an ideal leader for community singing, and the round and square dancing with Bert Kouri and Eugene Reynolds furnishing music, interspersed with miscellaneous numbers, whiled away the evening hours. Harold Auger and Mrs. J. P McGrath sang "Let Me Call You, Sweetheart" in voices which blended well, and the latter was also heard to good effect in "Girl of My Dreams." Miss Peggy Raven of Buffalo delighted the company with her rendition of "Did Your Mother Come From Ireland." Dan Shannon added to the enlivenment of the party in singing two of his comic songs, in his inimitable style. Mrs. James Black further enhanced a splendid programme as she recited "Ould Times" and "Mrs. Casey at the Euchre", and James Black did well with his recital of "Pat's Dilemma", and an encore number. Step dances were executed by the following—Mrs. C. Dunlay, Dan Shannon, Frank Mcinnon, James Shannon and Charles Murphy. Before the party broke up all sang "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow", in honor of Michael B. Auger. Those attending from a distance were Mrs. E. Keating, and Miss Margaret Price, Toronto Miss Florence Auger and Ernest Auger, Campbellford; Misses Rose Auger, and Anna Crawford and Bernard McAuley, Trenton, Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Auger, New Liskeard and Miss Peggy Raven, Buffalo.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Immunization by Use of Serums is Fine—Within Reason

The other day a woman came in to tell me about her three children. She announced very proudly that she had had them vaccinated and inoculated against almost every disease imaginable, and she was rather taken back when she found out that the Dionne Quintuplets have been immunized only against diphtheria and smallpox.

Of course I think giving serums to children is fine—within reason. When they are being given, one should consider susceptibility and remember that age exercises a lot of influence on this susceptibility.

For instance smallpox and several other infectious diseases often occur within the first few weeks of life, whereas diphtheria and other diseases rarely occur before the child is at last six months old. The diseases that most commonly occur shortly after birth are smallpox, erysipelas, whooping cough, and chicken pox. Various forms of meningitis also sometimes strike a very young baby.

Diphtheria and scarlet fever aren't often seen in a child under a year, although they do occasionally appear at six months. Measles and infantile paralysis are also rare in the first six months of life.

Because it is dangerous and because it appears almost any time after birth, smallpox is the first disease a child should be immunized against. In the ordinary healthy child, vaccinating for smallpox should be done as early as the third or fourth month.

Sometimes you find people who tell you that there is no need to vaccinate their child, because he was exposed to the disease and never contracted it. Well, that isn't the reason for not vaccinating at all, for the child may have had a temporary immunity that will disappear within a few weeks.

The Quintuplets were a year old before we vaccinated them against smallpox. You see, they weren't very strong and we didn't want to upset them more than we absolutely had to. Besides, their case was different than most children, for we were keeping them segregated all the time. There wasn't any chance of infection getting to them. Anyway, at that time we didn't know of a single case of smallpox in the whole countryside, so we took a chance.

Actually we were more afraid of diphtheria than of smallpox, so we inoculated them against this disease before we gave them the smallpox vaccination. We did this because diphtheria is sometimes prevalent in a community without being recognized, and what was more the children had very bad tonsils, which made them more susceptible to diphtheria.

I find it wise to wait for cool weather for inoculating children. For one thing, there is less danger of a secondary infection.

In the old days, when we vaccinated we used to scarify the arm quite a bit before rubbing the vaccine in, and this led to a secondary infection very, very often. But today the method is to make a very light scratch that just goes down to the true skin, and then rub the vaccine in. It isn't necessary to draw blood as we used to. It works just as well too, for I know it worked on the Quints. It "took" on every one of the five.

Colleagues Honor Max Porritt At Farewell Party

Mr. Max Porritt was guest of honour at a corn and wiener roast arranged at Mohawk Beach last evening as a farewell party by the directors and staff of J. and J. Cash, Inc., of which he has been a popular employee for several years. Mr. Porritt is leaving Belleville shortly. Dancing added to the evening's enjoyment.

On behalf of those present Mr. A. P. Wesley, manager, read the following address:

"Dear Mr. Porritt,

"We, the directors, staff and employees regret that you have decided to sever your connection with the Company after so many years of faithful service. We are all sorry that you have found it necessary to leave us and wish you the very best of health and success in your future career.

"We have much pleasure in presenting you with this gift as a small token of our esteem. We hope that this will help to keep us all in your memory and remind you of the many happy times we have spent together."

Mr. Wesley then made the presentation of a Pakaway travelling bag and a Waterman Fountain pen and pencil set. Mr. Porritt sincerely thanked his associates for their gifts and for the sentiments so graciously expressed.

Mr. P. C. Cope of the Montreal office also spoke of the high esteem in which Mr. Porritt was held by his colleagues and extended good wishes for his success.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

A "Ham Driver" is Not a Courteous Driver!

Labor Day is almost here. Millions of cars on all the highways and byways of our country. And on Tuesday, September fifth, the newspapers will inevitably publish the toll of motor accidents.

What can you . . . and you . . . contribute to making these figures as low as it is humanly possible to make them?

Remember the three C's. Caution, Commonsense. Courtesy.

I believe that it was Mr. J. Stannard Baker, traffic safety consultant who first used the term "ham driver". And what an inspiration that was or ninety-nine times out of a hundred on acid term like that will make us take stock of ourselves when honeyed words will have no effect at all.

Of course, if you're the smug kind of driver who always accuses the driver-in-the-other-car of being the "ham driver", no appeal will dent your ego. Your driving is always perfect . . . The other fellow is always in the wrong. Your driving is always skillful . . . the other fellow is always careless. Your driving is always considerate . . . it is the other fellow who is discourteous.

Well, perhaps. And perhaps not.

The really skillful driver is the one who makes every effort, and constant effort, to master the niceties of driving, which make the best safeguards. Are you that kind of driver? When you are driving, do you have the same high standards of behaviour as you do in your social and business relationships? Or are you a fretful driver, impatient, unreasonable?

Every word of advice that comes from the National Safety Council is wise, authoritative and, if we will but have the grace to listen with an open mind, helpful. The "ham driver", the Council admits in its latest publication, usually isn't a vicious driver . . .he's merely careless.

The Council, in describing a "ham driver", gives these eight important details of his driving—

1—He can't make up his mind as to what he wants to do soon enough and depends on his ability to do it only when he has to.

3—He waits too long to get into the proper lane for turning. He's even likely to do his slowing down after he gets into the intersection on the turn, rather than before.

3—He is oblivious to other traffic. He straddles lane lines as though he were the only driver on the road. In extreme cases he can be found completely over on the left side of the highway. He is not intentionally a road hog. He simply drifts over unconsciously.

4—He zooms out of a parking position at the curb with no regard for traffic that may be coming from behind. Again, he is just thoughtless, rather than vicious.

5—He makes a "good enough" turn signal. He lets his hand dangle or flutter aimlessly from the window, and following traffic doesn't know whether he's signalling a turn, flicking ashes from a cigaret or waving at someone on the sidewalk.

6—He turns around and talks to others in the car as he drives, instead of keeping his eyes on the road.

7—He is guilty of bad posture. He slouches behind the wheel, sticks his left elbow out the window.

8—He is a one-hand wheeler. This is different from one-armed driving in which a girl usually occupies the other arm. In one-hand wheeling the driver keeps only one hand on the wheel; the other rests in his lap, hangs out the window or holds a cigar, pipe or cigarette. He has nowhere the control or leverage he needs in an emergency.

Caution. Commonsense. Courtesy. The "ham driver" is intolerant, impatient about these. And, most important of all he does not realize that "The greatest preventive of automobile accidents is courtesy".

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Famous Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage.

Flashing Wad—Paying Bills

Dear Miss Fairfax

My husband is dominated by the silliest sort of pride. He seems to think if he pulls a roll of bills out of his pocket that people will bow down before him, that he'll have influence and be taken more seriously than he is at present. He has lost two jobs, one through his own fault and the other because he did not think the job was good enough for him.

He went after a third job, and his way of getting it was to go to certain drinking places frequented by the bosses of the plant, pull out his wad and pay for a drink. This wouldn't have been so awful if he hadn't borrowed the money from his brother. Meanwhile, it was impossible for me to get any money to pay the milkman or the grocer.

He took too many drinks one night, and was either robbed or lost his money. I don't even know how much he had. And this sordid story is sent to you to ask if you have any suggestions as to how I may obtain employment, pay the family bills and feed my children.

Sorry

It's amazing how many letters I've had from wives who tell me their husbands have this infantile form of vanity—flashing a wad around a drinking place, or anywhere else where they can see eyes goggle. The best thing for a wife to do, when confronteid with a situation of this sort, is to try and get work, which is terribly difficult at the moment through the laying off of so many people from Government projects. The skilled always have a better chance at employment than the unskilled.

Even if a woman has had little chance of development outside of her home, she can, if she has time and energy, learn to do something at home. One correspondent has learned to make slipcovers and gets a fair price for doing this type of work.

Vacation Money Wisely Spent

Dear Miss Fairfax

We were to have been married next month. My trousseau is completed, the linens bought, and I had been engaged for three wears. My fiance went to one of the Western States to take a job. It offered more money, and his going was to hurry up plans for our wedding.

He wrote devoted letters for a while, then he began to complain about his health and said he did not think the climate would suit me. Still I had faith in him, because I loved him so much. I had a nice little nest egg saved for things I hoped to buy for the new home. I also had some life insurance. Against the wishes of my mother I took my savings and my life insurance and went to a nearby town. He was working in the oil fields.

When I saw him he looked perfectly well, seemed glad to see me, but terribly embarrassed. I was staying at the hotel. A day or two later, a strange girl called on me and told me she and my fiance were engaged. She was already to pick a quarrel, but I was amiable and disappointed her. When she had gone away, I phoned to the company's office and asked if my fiance could see me. He came and admitted he had got tangled up with this girl. She really was a wild-looking creature, but I said nothing nasty about her.

My fiance seemed anxious to be engaged to us both, and I knew him then for what he was, weak, cowardly.

No, I didn't cry my eyes out. I packed up, went to the Grand Canyon and visited several other places, and came back to my family broke. They were of course disgusted, but I'm satisfied. I cut an utterly unworthy man out of my life, and I went traveling.

I've cried a good bit since then and the lonesomeness is awful at times, but I'm glad I knew these things before I married. And yes, I burned my wedding dress

Thankful

To my way of thinking, this girl was sensible. Instead of putting in more months of worry over her fiance's supposed ill health and excuses, she cut the red tape and found the cause of his changed lettrs. And she traveled, the best cure imaginable for a broken heart. She didn't want the wedding dress as a reminder, and had too much sentiment to sell it, so she did the logical thing. I'm sorry for the man, he's lost a nice girl. What do you think about this?

LISTLESS CHILDREN

(By McKEOWN'S Drug Store)

Children are never listless without cause. When their bright energy flags, there is a reason, usually a serious one. A dull child is a sick child, whether he complains or not.

The reason for listlessness may be simple, or it may be obscure. Only a trained physician can tell. Accept no home remedies, or the advice of friends. See your doctor when your child droops with seeming fatigue or weariness. Remember that really healthy children are tireless.

Take all prescriptions to a trained and conscientious druggist.

MELROSE WOMEN'S INSTITUTE

More than one hundred ladies were in attendance at the meeting of the Melrose Institute held on Thursday last at the home of Mrs. Frank Doxtator, when they had as their guests the members of the Quinte Institute.

With the president of the Melrose Institute in the chair, the meeting was called to order and all joined in singing the opening ode followed by the Lord's prayer in unison. After a hearty welcome was extended the visitors ,the secretary read the minutes of the previous meeting. Following their adoption, items of business were presented. Local leaders for both senior and junior Institute projects were appointed, the former having Mrs. Russel MacFarlane as leader with Mrs. Fred Jeffrey as assistant, the latter with Mrs. Young as leader and Mrs. Bruce McKinney as assistant. A letter of thanks from the Girls' Club for the $5 donation was read by the secretary.

Some merriment was caused when responses came in answer to the roll call—"My Ambition as a Girl."

The Quinte Institute president then took charge of the program and called on Miss Mitchell for a reading. Costumed as an old-fashioned grandmother, she told how the modern girl should dress.

Mrs. Bunnett entertained with a solo, accompanying herself with guitar music. Miss Mitchell gave an accordian selection after which Mrs. Sprackett gave a humorous reading.

Each entertainer gave an encore.

To complete this part of the program 2 teams of girls put on a skit demonstrating "good" and "bad" table manners.

In the crowd was an Institute member from West Hastings, Mrs. Clarence Holmes, so the president asked her to speak to the gathering. She expressed her pleasure at being present at an Institute gathering where so many of her former friends had assembled. Mrs. Holmes had lived as a girl at Melrose and had taught school for 3 years on the Second Line. She concluded her remarks with a humorous story.

The girls of the Melrose Club put on a skit in which they displayed old-fashioned and present-day styles and showed a part of what they had learned in the sewing project taken last winter.

Following this the National Anthem was sung. Collection amounting to $7.83 was received. Afternoon tea was served the ladies on the shaded lawn by the hostess and members of the Melrose Institute. In honour of the guests, ice-cream was added to the usual refreshments of sandwiches and cake.

The thanks of the Institute are due the hostess for opening her home and providing accommodation for so large a gathering.

All enjoyed the social time and left for home feeling "The more we get together, the happier we'll be". (the community song used to introduce the visitors' program).

SALEM W. M. S.

The August meeting of Salem W. M. S. was held in the church with a good attendance. The President, Mrs. L. McLaren opened the meeting with a hymn, Mrs. J. Sills read the Scripture and led in prayer. After the business part of the meeting, Mrs. E. Hanna, group leader, took charge of the program. Hymn 81 was sung. Readings were contributed by Mrs. J. Cole, Mrs. Leslie, Miss B. Robinson and Mrs. Haight. A pleasing vocal solo was also given by Miss Robinson. After the closing hymn all repeated the Lord's Prayer in unison.

'Oilers' Snatch Win in Ninth Over Kingston Tanners by 7-6 In First Game of Playdowns

Both Teams Score Once in Last Frame to Thrill Large Crowd

O'NEILL DELIVERS

Bawden Outhurled Both Law and Gowsell of the Losing Team

In true storybook fashion the Belleville Shell "Oilers" staged the most thrilling rally, seen in local softball circles in Belleville in many years, to snatch victory from what appeared certain defeat at the hands of the Kingston Tanners in the first game of the intermediate O.A.S.A. playdowns here last evening as the "Oilers" triumphed 7-6 over Kingston. As the visiting Limestone City nine rallied in the top half of the last stanza and scored three runs, the Belleville "Oilers" faced a mammoth task in coming from behind to win.

It remained to have Stan Amo, Nick Sero and Frank O'Neill come through with the much-needed clutch hits to knot the count, while Kingston's third sacker bobbled Whalen's roller to allow O'Neill to romp home with the winning run.

Lashed to Mast

Prior to the hectic ninth inning, that saw each team score three runs, Johnnie Bawden had completely lashed the Tanners to the mast with a four-hit pitching effort going into the ninth. Kingston scored two in the initial frame on a walk, followed by hits by Banks and Scrutton. Belleville knotted the tally in the second after two walks and hits from the bats of Moon and Rowbotham and the homesters took a commanding lead with two more runs in the fourth as Whalen opened with a double with Ronsky and Moon following with one base blows, as Ronsky showed some classy base running and speed on the paths.

Held Off The Sacks

Kingston had not placed a player safely on base from the time the fourth batter singled in the initial frame until the sixth when Banks was safe on O'Neill's error and scored on Scrutton's hit. With the count standing 4-3 for Belleville in the top half of the ninth Jordan and Scrutton singled in succession, Bonsham popped to second and all were safe as Ronsky bobbled Harrison's infield hit. Bawden then proceeded to strike out pinch hitter Bill Gowsell and the tension relieved as McGlade hit a high fly into left-centre field with both Whalen and Amo racing after the ball. Amo made a fine catch, but at the same moment Whalen crashed him and the ball fell to allow three runs to score on the play as Martin later rolled out.

Banks Bobbles Roller

Down two runs Belleville stepped to bat and Dickey was tossed out by Gowsell. Amo singled, but Bawden flew to left for a second out and it looked all over, when Sero cracked out a double scoring Amo and later scored the tying run on O'Neill's mighty triple to left centre. Whalen stepped up and hit to third with Banks bobbling the ball and O'Neill sliding home with the winning run. Scrutton with three hits paced the Kingston nine at bat, while Moon and Ronsky each counted two singles for Belleville as well as McGlade's triple and the other hits accounted for in the scoring.

Bawden struck out ten of the Kingston batters and walked but two, while Law whiffed four and walked five. Bawden retired the Tanners in order in six of the nine innings, as Kingston left three stranded on the runways and Belleville had nine left on base.

GRIDIRON SEASON WELL UNDERWAY

Argonauts Had 40 Hopefuls Out to First Full Practice of the Year

(By The Canadian Press)

Eastern Canada's 1939 football season, subjected to more than the usual run of conjecture and promises in pre-workout gossip, became an accepted fact today with candidates from four clubs of the two major loops nursing the muscle aches and stiffness of the first time out.

Dominion champions twice running, the Argonauts of Toronto drew 40 of the hopeful for their initial full-length workout last night. On other fronts meanwhile practiced two of their opponents in the Provincial Football Union — Ottawa's Rough Riders and the Royals of Montreal.

A turnout of 23 gridmen raced through the motions for the Royals while 31, including most of last year's squad, threw in their bids for berths on the Rough Riders. Hamilton Tigers was scheduled for preliminary action later in the week.

In the rival Ontario Rugby Football Union, only one of the four entrants took the field. The Westmounts of Montreal, known as the Nationals in their first year out last season, had two dozen aspirants turning up the turf of their new home grounds.

Coach Lew Hayman handled the first full-length practice of the Argonauts, assisted by Lenny Staughton, line coach, Teddy Morris, flying wing, and lineman Clary Burt. In uniform were Bud Lewis, 1937 snap who was forced out of action by a bad knee last year and George Willis, Frank Sirdevan and Charlie Peck, promising newcomers with senior experience.

Ottawa Rough Riders had all regulars but quarterback Arnie Morrison and halfback Joe Zelikovitz either in uniform or accounted for. Newcomers included Arnie McWatters and Tony Golab, both of Sarnia Imperials last year, and Sammy Sward, ex-Balmy Beach halfback.

SPEEDBOAT RACE ALREADY COSTS LIFE OF PILOT

Joe Schaeffer, Detroit, Fatally Injured when Boat Upsets

CRAFT SINKS

Only Six Boats Left in Race for Gold Cup at Detroit, Labor Day

Detroit Aug. 29 (AP)—The Gold Cup speedboat race, test of the nerves of men and the power of motors, is still a week distant, but it really has cost the life of one driver and sent a boat to the river bottom.

Joe Schaeffer, 49-year-old Detroit pilot of the Delphine IX in the Labor Day classic, was fatally injured last night when the craft overturned and sank during a trial run on the Detroit River.

Roaring over the course at a speed estimated at 90 miles an hour the Delphine IX suddenly leaped high into the air, hurling Schaeffer and his mechanic, Ed Mackenzie into the water. Schaeffer, his chest crushed, was taken unconscious from the river, and died several hours later. Mackenzie, also of Detroit, was stunned but escaped with bruises.

The Delphine IX, built by Horace Dodge in 1933 and leased by Schaeffer for the race, has been dogged by ill luck. She has never finished a Gold Cup race in several years of competition.

The boat sank in 26 feet of water. Loss of the Delphine from the Labor Day classic reduced the entry list to six. Only two days ago Count Theo Rossi of Italy, who won the cup last year in his Alagi, said he would be unable to come to America and defend the trophy because of the International situation.

The remaining six Gold Cup entries are Miss Canada, entered by E. A. Wilson of Ingersoll, Ont.; the Notre Dame, Herb Mendelson's 1937 winner; My Sin, Zalmon Simmons, Rye, N.Y.; So Long, Louis J. Fageol, Los Angeles; Art Eff V, Dr. A. L. Harbarger, Akron, O., and Mercury, M. J. Cooper, of Louisville.

Flen W. Naughton, an Attorney, filed suit here yesterday charging a race horse he bought was "of unsound eye and refused to run a straight course on any track"..... But it was a pretty good hoss for the shape it was in.

The guys who've been carrying the torch for Ted Williams as the best American League rookie are beginning to wonder if they can prove same, what with Charlie Keller going like blue blazes....The referee in Henry Armstrong's forthcoming fight picture will be named "Donovan"....Pie Traynor and Coach Jewel Ens always walk to the ball park, even in New York the distance from their hotel to the Polo grounds is 84 blocks.

Gabby Hartnett of Chicago Near Record For Receiving Most Games In Major Loops

On Monday Gabby Catches 1721st Game of His Major Career

HIS TEAM WINS

Williams of Red Sox and Kellar of Yankees Show Read Prowess

(By Sid Feder Associated Press Sports Writer).

The youngsters are on the prowl in the Major Baseball Leagues these days—and while sometimes they may look down condescendingly on the old guys, Gabby Hartnett is one they have a long way to go to catch.

He is the perennial laughing boy of baseball. Garrulous Gabby hasn't much longer to go in harness. He's staring 40 in the eye, and has been doing his chore behind the plate for Chicago Cubs these last 17 years. But yesterday, he passed another milestone, that put his name in the record books again.

The game, itself, didn't amount to much. It was just a Monday outing against the Phillies, which the Cubs figured to win. And they did, 5-3. But Gabby had on the mask and the pads and the big mitt, and was shaking that ham-like fist for his boys to show fight. And that was the 1,721st or 1,722nd game Gabby has been out there with his harness draped around that portly frame of his.

May Have Broken Record

Ray Schalk, the old White Sox workhorse, was always regarded as being "untouchable" in that respect. He was back there in the tough spot for an all-time record 1,721 games from 1912 through 1928. Until official figures are checked it won't be decided whether Gabby equalled Ray's record or broke it yesterday, but since the Cubs have 31 more games to play this season, the Gabby guy is a cinch to be out in front all by himself before long.

Ted Williams, the Boston Red Sox socker, who leads both leagues in driving in runs, won another ball game yesterday with an eighth-inning homer that beat Cleveland Indians 6-5.

Charley Keller collected himself a homer and a brace of singles as the Yankees slaughtered Detroit Tigers 18-2. Charley wasn't the biggest noise, however, since Joe DiMaggio whacked a homer with the bases loaded and another with two aboard.

Giants Defeat Reds

The Giants defeated Cincinnati Reds 3-1 with Mel Ott driving in all the New York runs. This setback didn't take anything away from the Reds' five-game National League lead, however, for the second place Cardinals were stymied by the rawest of the rookies, Al Moan, who made his debut with the Boston Bees a 10-5 pitching triumph.

Bill Trotter tossed a four-hitter which paced St. Louis Browns to a 12-2 decision over Washington Senators, and Chicago White Sox shoved over a ninth inning run to nip the Athletics 5-4 under the arc-lights. The Dodgers and Pirates took the day off.

BUFFALO BISONS ONLY GAME BEHIND SYRACUSE CHIEFS

Have Fourth Place Cinched But Can Move up by Steady Play

TORONTO WINS

Five Run Blast in Sixth Helps Leafs Defeat Rochester Red Wings

(By The Associated Press)

Buffalo Bisons' chances of winning the International Baseball League pennant this year are more in the realm of mathematical possibility than probability, but the Bisons aren't forgetting the playoffs. All they have to do is hold onto fourth place.

Buffalo actually has an excellent opportunity to move up to third or even second and a 4-3 victory over the last-place Montreal Royals last night left the Herd only a game behind the idle Syracuse Chiefs and three behind Rochester Red Wings, who took a 7-3 beating from Toronto Leafs.

Only those two games were on the schedule last night, but they produced enough exciting baseball for a full card.

Spotting the Royals a two-run lead in the first inning then getting back into the game when Ollie Carnegie belted his 29th homer of the year in the sixth, the Bisons finally won out in a wild ninth inning. George Saxino's pinch single with two out and two on base in the ninth produced the winning run.

Before that there was a dispute which caused umpire Chester Swanson to chase Bill Crouch, the Montreal hurler, and Manager "Boiling Boily" Grimes off the field. Lee Rogers took the mound just in time to give Savino his hit.

Rochester went down before Toronto's five-run sixth-inning blast then almost pulled the game out of the fire with three tallies in the same frame.

LOCAL PITCHER PROVES HERO SECOND TIME

Ralph McCabe's Great Relief Pitching Wins for Coniston

A REPEATER

Sudbury, Aug. 29—Ralph (High Pockets) McCabe, lanky ex-Oshawa junior, stepped into the breach for the second time in less than a week and pitched Copper Cliff to victory over Coniston here last night, 8-5 in Nickel Belt senior baseball playoffs. McCabe, rated as one of Ontario's outstanding professional baseball prospects, covered himself with glory when he was called on to relieve Collier after the Buzzers had hammered the left-hander for five runs in two and one-third innings. He limited the hard-hitting Coniston crew to a lone bingle for the rest of the game. Johnson, who started for Coniston, was touched for seven runs before giving way to Strom with two out in the fifth, including a homer by George Collins, Copper Cliff left-fielder. The win gives the Cliffites a 2-1 lead in the series, with the fourth game to be played here Wednesday.

WINNER OF WOMEN'S OPEN

Miss Betty Jameson of Texas makes a pretty picture as she stands with the trophy and roses she received after winning the U.S. women's open golf crown. She easily defeated Miss Dorothy Kirby in the match play final three up. It was a day for youth when two finalists teed off. Miss Jameson being 20 and her oponent one year younger.

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

with

Ken J. Colling

Last night's softball game at the Flats between those two arch enemies of softball, Kingston and Belleville, left nothing for the hometown fans to desire or even hope for. However, the facts are that the fans never should have been treated to the sterling story-book ninth inning finish, that saw Belleville have to score three runs to snatch a close margin 7-6 win. Had centre-fielder Bill Whalen left McGlade's high fly, which was in Amo's left field territory alone and not crashed Amo, who had caught the ball, Kingston would not have scored three in their half of the ninth and forced the locals into a tough position. Whoever calls plays in the Shell field should have seen that Amo had McGlade's fly well under control from the time it left his bat and should have called the play accordingly. However, as it was the fans were treated to a thrilling Merriwell-finish game, the home team won in the ninth and that's about the picture until the teams resume hostilities at Kingston Wednesday.

Last night's score book revealed the fact that Johnnie Bawden retired the Tanners in order in six of the nine frames, when they got men aboard, however, they scored, which is the main idea in the game, we presume. With the exception of shortstop Scrutton, who counted three of the Tanner's seven hits, Bawden had little trouble in disposing of the Kingston batters. However, John Law (no references to Chief Kidd's hirelings), hurling for Kingston, wasn't too far behind Bawden, as he blanked the locals for six innings, but Belleville left nine runners stranded and oly went hitless in the first, third and seventh. Then again Bawden whiffed ten to Law's four, while the latter walked five to Bawden's two for fair comparison. Then again the Tanners had some hard luck running the bases, Harrison over ran second once, while others were unaccustomed to the loose footing. Actually what seemed to get the Tanners in trouble, however, was Bawden's fine change of pace. If the Oilers will give Bawden a few early-game runs in order that he does not have to bear down on every pitch, the Oilers should repeat tomorrow.

Coe Hill won the North Hastings League and will now meet the Belleville "Orfuns" in the first round intermediate O.B.A. playdowns, commencing tomorrow in Coe Hill. The venue of the second game was not arrived at but will likely be in Coe Hill or Belleville on Labor Day. We have little or no knowledge of the strength of the Coe Hill club, with the exception of information given us by league secretary J. M. Joynt, of Bancroft. "Don't sell these boys short down there in Belleville. They're all huskies and swing from the heels and fear no pitcher," Mr. Joynt assured us when making arrangements for the series. Incidentally this year marks the second season the North Hastings League has been represented in the O.B.A., 1937 seeing Coe Hill winning the league, but last year the clubs remained aloof from the parent association. With no other attraction in Belleville on Labor Day, except the lawn bowlers' tournament, the locals would be well advised to play here.

The race horses commenced to arrive at the Belleville Fair grounds yesterday and we expect filled classes in all four classes commencing Wednesday. The Inglis stable from Norwood with Richard Hal and Roscoe Earle, "Chappie" Chapman and we expect Wilmer Hillock with his good string will be rolling in from Ottawa, where he enjoyed a good week's racing with Lastic Grattan, Widow Grattan and his colt. The Belleville Parks Board cleaerd off all of the track from noxious weeds and with nearly $850.00 to shoot at for four races, the horsemen will doubtless be after the 'grain money' at the Belleville Fair. There's a 2.27 and 2.15 class Wednesday with a free-for-all and 2.20 class slated for Thursday. Secretary Dick Ketcheson says new entries for the races are increasing, thus assuring Starter George O. Tice of good fields for all classes. All that is needed to complete the picture is to have the weatherman smile prettily over the 1939 edition of the Belleville Fair.

It was DiMaggio and Russo versus the Tigers as the Yankees walloped Detroit 18-2 yesterday, DiMaggio hitting for the circuit on two occasions, once with the bases loaded while Russo hurled a four-hitter. The Yankees are now 12 1-2 games afront of the Red Sox, who won a single game versus the Indians. Over in the National League the Cardinals have become very accommodating of late, because every time the Reds are toppled, the Cards lose also, thus assuring the Redlegs of their good intentions, perhaps. However, Bill Terry's New York Giants made their hits count to beat Cincinnati 3-1 yesterday, while at the same time the Boston Bees doubled the score on the Cardinals at 10 to 5, making no difference in the National League standing, with the exception of the Cubs advancing a full game.

For the second time within a week, Ralph McCabe, former Belleville pitcher, proved the hero in the Nickel Belt finals as a relief hurler. Playing against Coniston, McCabe's Copper Cliff nine were trailing in the third when he was rushed in to stop the Coniston batsmen. McCabe allowed one hit for the remainder of the game as his team mates came back to win 8-5. Last week McCabe turned in the identical same trick to pull the Cliffies chestnuts from the fire. Reports from the north country are glowing in McCabe's favour, some calling him a better professional prospect than Babe Marchildon, now with the Leafs, who was in the Nickel Belt League last season.

Sport Spice — The Brooklyn Dodgers recalled Goody Rosen from Montreal to take effect immediately ....Four members of the Montreal Canadiens will officially represent the club at Babe Siebert's funeral tomorrow....Strange as it may seem, Queen's University honorary football coaches, Batstone, Leadley, and Breen, are going to take an active part in the Queen's rugby picture this fall....Perhaps they'd be of more use inside of a uniform, especially with so many former players of 1938 reported missing..... Hartnett caught his 1,772th game with the Chicago Cubs yesterday for a new major league record.

PLEA IS MADE FOR DACHSHUNDS

London, Aug. 29 (CP Cable) — The Times published a letter from D. L. Murray of Brighton today, asking caricaturists and humorous writers to stop making the dachshund the symbol of the German nation.

"Absurd as it may seem," he said, "the prevalence of this idea in the popular imagination has produced real risk of thoughtless acts of cruelty being committed against harmless little animals which are English by birth and often by generations of breeding."

Toronto, Aug. 29 (CP)—Iver Thomas, 25-year-old "fire-eater" from Phoenix, Ariz., suffered second-degree facial burns last night in a tent at the Canadian National Exhibition when a bucket of gasoline at his side burst into flames during his act.

A piece of the cotton torch with which Thomas lights a quantity of gasoline in his mouth fell in a bucket at his side. The gasoline spread over the floor of the tent but was extinguished before spectators were injured.

CADI UPHOLDS MARKET BY-LAW

Trucker from St. Catharines Fined for Selling Imported Fruit on Market

Following many years of complaints as received by the City Police Department regarding the wholesale offering of fruits, more particularly peaches, on the Belleville market, two charges of the violation of the city bylaw, pertaining to the regulation of the sale of fruits on the Belleville market, were presented before Magistrate A. Shea in local police court today.

Abe Horvitz, St. Catharines, Ont., trucker, was convicted of the violation of the city bylaw, regulating the sale of fruit on the market and Horvitz was assessed two dollars and costs. A second charge preferred against Edward Kellaway, Belleville fruit merchant, was enlarged for one week upon the request of the defendant.

Horvitz, who produced evidence that he was the official agent for a fruit grower named Gallinger in the Niagara Peninsula and therefore was permitted under Provincial law to sell peaches on the Belleville market. However, Acting City Solicitor Frank Cushing proved, that Horvitz had trucked other growers' peaches, when not their agent and had displayed them for sale in Belleville. Horvitz admitted this fact after it had been introduced by P.C. Arnott and Market Clerk Wm. Harden.

Guilty on Admission

"Upon your own admission, I find you guilty," concluded His Worship. Both Horvitz and Kellaway were charged that they did unlawfully offer or display for sale fruit, contrary to the city bylaw.

"I would like to have an enlargement for a week in order to prepare my defence," asked Mr. Kellaway.

"We are trying to stop this practice of selling fruit by truckers and if it is unlawful this man will continue to sell fruit for the next week," objected Chief Kidd.

"If you will stay off the market during the period of remand, I will grant you your enlargement," Magistrate Shea stated in addressing Kellaway.

"I'll agree to stay off the market if the police will stop outsiders from selling fruit too," replied Kellaway.

Several cases of violations to the city traffic laws were also heard, including those of speeding, but more particularly for the failure of drivers to observe the city stop street signs and adhere to them.

Several teen-aged juveniles appeared on charges of theft, two youngsters being convicted of the theft of bicycles and yet three others for shoplifting at McCurdy's and Dolan's. These latter cases were heard in a subsequent Juvenile Court that was held in camera.

Sir Nevile later conferred with King George and Premier Chamberlain

Why the Weather!

By Mayor A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Dew! This phenomenon of early morning, especially common at this time of the year, may be forecast the same as any other weather condition, since scientists know how it is formed and the conditions favorable and unfavorable for its formation. Favorable conditions for the formation of dew are: (1) moist air, because obviously must be some moisture present to be deposited; (2) clear skies, because then radiation is best and objects cool off quickly; and (3) no wind, because a wind mixes the air and brings new air next to the cooling objects, which delays their cooling. Dew in some places is an important agricultural factor.

Dumb Belle

By ALICE D. KELLY

Ernest Leighton singled her out after his popular lecture on psychology before the Women's Clubs of Denby because she was so absolutely lovely, and because she apparently hadn't assimilated a single word that he'd said.

He'd had enough and to spare of intellectual women:

"Dear Professor Leighton, do you subscribe to the Gestalt theory?"

"Professor, I've been simply enthralled by your last book. I was a little in doubt about the primitive emotions."

Because he was comparatively young and very bronzed and big and comely they pursued him chastely, with coolings born of much book learning.

He'd come to Denby and his new position on the university well on the defensive. One glance at the girls in his advanced classes and he knew he'd better stick to books. He liked his women little and helpless and as dumb as they could be without actually having an I.Q. below eighty.

That's why he fell so hard for Jennie-Lou Truesdale that very first moment he saw her. She couldn't have been prettier and she couldn't have looked more gaily and unshamedly dumb. He got himself introduced directly after the lecture and looked raptly down at her five feet one inch of curves, satiny skin, ultra clothes and general sweetness and said:

"What were you doing at my lecture?"

She dimpled at him and answered with a darling little gurgle of laughter: "Oh, I had to come. My aunt's on the committee. Aren't you tired saying all those long words?"

He could have kissed her with the greatest of ease and, indeed, made his plans to do so as speedily as it could be arranged.

When she suggested with a provocative sweep of black, curly lashes against an apple blossom cheek, "I know a place where you can dance and get tea with awfully good rum in it." He said "Let's go" without ever thinking of the reception committee whom he was mortally insulting.

He kissed her going home in the car, and she said, "Oh, you shouldn't! Should you?" And he said masterfully, "I should and I intend to go on doing so."

After that he spent every waking instant with her for days. She thought he was wonderful and told him so, frequently. The simplest things had to be explained to her in words of one syllable. "No, dear precious, it's no use blowing up the tire, it has a great big cut in it. You remember you drove over all that glass?" "Yes dear, I do have to study." "No, I don't know all the psychology there is . . ." etc., etc.

They were engaged two weeks after they met and events progressed smoothly toward a speedy and elaborate wedding.

Then the blow fell. It was at a reception. A plain woman came up to the happy pair. She beamed up at Ernest.

"You're getting a real little treasure," she told him. "I had Jennie-Lou in all my courses in the university, and she passed with honors. She may not know much about your subject but she's at the top in her own."

It was shattering! All Jennie-Lou's adorable dumbness had been a line, then! Ernest couldn't take it. The thing he loved was dead. He took advantage of a convention in the Middle West and went away.

He couldn't bear even to write to Jennie-Lou. For the first few days a sense of escape from a lifetime of companionship and mental equality sustained him. But after that he realized that he wanted Jennie-Lou. He wanted to hear her gurgling little laugh and her delightfully, idiotic questions and wipe away her facile tears. He decided to sacrifice everything for love.

She greeted him ecstatically. "Bad boy, not to write," she chided him gently. "I should scold you for that. Darling, we've had thirty-six new wedding presents. And my wedding dress is done," she gurgled infectiously.

It was on the boat that Ernest summoned up his courage. He had loved Jennie-Lou enough to give up the dream of a lifetime and marry her complete with honors. He had given up years of comfortable evenings of dancing and lovemaking and foraging in the ice box for the horrors of discussing each other's work.

He held Jennie-Lou close, as he asked tensely, "Sweetheart, what was your subject in school?"

"School?" she asked vaguely. "School? Oh yes! Oh, I never stayed in college dear. I think it would have been too awfully boring, don't you?" she gurgled. "I always forget you keep on and on going to college." She laid a bright head against his shoulder. "I took domestic science," she told him. "Of course not the chemistry part and all that silly stuff about what foods are which.

Everybody eats the same things anyhow, and it was so dull. But I learned to make the loveliest layer cake and lobster Newburg and everything. I got a 100 per cent in cooking.! But what I got my honorable mention for was a chocolate souffle with vanilla sauce that I made up all my own self!"

Ernest drew a slow breath on entire relief. He smiled. He kissed her passionately.

"Dearest," he begged her fatuously. (And he loathed sweets) "Make me one of those the very first minute we're in our own little home, won't you?"

Little Benny's Note Book

Me and Leroy Shooster and Sid Hunt were around in the back street climbing up and looking over different people's fences just for something to do, and Leroy Shooster climbed up Sam Cross's fence and looked over, saying, G, fellows, look who's digging a hole in their back yard with a shovel.

Meaning Sam Cross, and we all climbed up and sat on the top of the fence, saying, What's you doing, Sam, what's the idea, Sam, where you digging to, Sam, China?

You wish you knew, dont you? Sam said. Believe me a lot of people wish they knew he said.

And he kept on digging with a busy expression, me saying, Go ahead and tell us, Sam, we wont tell anybody.

Will you promise and cross your harts? Sam said.

Us 3 saying we would, and Sam said, Well a old miser used to live in our house before we did, and the reason I know is because I found a map he drew, and it was a map showing where he berried his treasure, and this is the spot.

Aw go on, you're the first people ever lived in that house, Leroy said, and Sam said, Sure, in the house part, maybe, but how about the cellar? There must of been another house bilt over the celler one time, because the celler is where I found the map. Good night you dont think my mother would leave me dig a hole in our yard for nothing, do you, and there she is watching me from the back living room window, he said.

Wich she was, and us fellows thought, G, good night, berried treasure.

And just then his mother leened out saying, That's deep enough, Sammy, it's just going to be a little tank for gold-fish, not a big tank for whales.

Proving what's a use of believing a famous liar, and we climbed down off the fence all claiming it would take more than Sam Cross to fool us.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

New York, Aug. 29—(AP)— Wall Street put a few modest bets on European peace today and the stock market stepped up fractions to around 2 points. Dealings, orderly at the start, subsequently dwindled to a trickle and, near the fourth hour, top marks were chipped down in most cases.

Prominent stock gainers included U.S. Steel, Bethlehem, Chrysler, General Motors, U.S. Rubber, Montgomery Ward, United Aircraft, American Telephone, Western Union, Santa Fe, Great Northern, Anaconda, Westinghouse, Du Pont, Celanese and Union Carbide.

International Nickel gained more than a point in the Canadian group while C.P.R. added a small fraction. In the bond market Dominion 4s shot up around 1 1-2.

The slightly brighter picture brought an upward reversal in recently weak sterling exchange at London and a mark-down in gold bars at that centre.

TORONTO STOCK MARKET

Toronto, Aug. 29—(CP)— The brighter outlook in Europe gave the Toronto stock market another upturn in the early hours of the session today and the market was holding the bulk of the gains at early afternoon. At noon the indices for the industrial and mining groups were up 1 1-4 to 2 points and the western oils had a gain of nearly a half point in the index. Trading was on a small scale however and only 187,000 shares changed hands in three hours.

Gains of 1 to 2 points were held by the big base metal issues, Nickel, Noranda, Smelters and Hudson Bay and in the golds gains of 10 to 15 cents were scattered through the secondary list. Senior golds were slightly stronger.

The active steel, food, utility and liquor stocks moved ahead. Walkers Common stood out with a gain of 1 3-4. Calgary-Edmonton and Home, up 10 to 15 cents were the heaviest traders of the western oil group. Okalta firmed a few cents.

'FANTASTIC' SAYS OFFICIAL OF STORY

No Truth in Report British Note Agrees with Hitler

London, Aug. 29—(AP)—A British foreign office official described as "fantastic" and "a 100 per cent lie" reports from sources in Berlin that the British note to Germany represented virtual agreement with all of Adolf Hitler's demands.

At the same time Prime Minister Chamberlain started a speech in parliament by urging the press to exercise the utmost restraint at this time, and declared there had been no change in the policy of the government.

Previously the foreign office made a "most solemn appeal" to all newspapers and news agencies to refrain from printing "rumors which are not substantiated in official quarters."

An official spokesman said the appeal had "the full assent" of Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax.

The spokesman particularly condemned a news story yesterday (not carried by The Canadian Press or its allied agencies) purporting to quote from the text of the British communication to Hitler. This story, the spokesman said, was "devoid of all foundation" and "particularly mischievous."

News of the Produce Markets

Toronto, Aug. 29—Eggs and butter eased slightly in quiet trading on the Toronto open produce market yesterday, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported. Cheese was quietly firm.

Although offerings of Ontario butter were light, buyers displayed almost a complete lack of interest, and sales were few. With trading at a virual standstill, first-grade creamery solids moved downward in price to 21 3-4c a pound, and undergrades took a corresponding drop. A few sales of Western butter were made at 22c.

The egg market developed a slightly easier undertone as prices declined moderately at Montreal. Receipts were on the light side, but were still ample for buyers' requirements. Trading was light, with a better inquiry for Grade B eggs in evidence. A large eggs drifted to 27 1-2c a dozen, and A medium to 26 1-2c. Retailers' prices, as well as prices paid to producers for ungraded eggs, were unchanged.

Montreal Eggs Easier

Montreal, Aug 29 (CP) — Eggs and Quebec No. 1 potatoes were slightly easier on produce markets here yesterday, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported. Butter, cheese and Quebec No. 2 potatoes remained unchanged.

Job price of first grade creamery butter prints was 22 1-2c-23c a pound, and of first grade solids 22c-22 1-2c. Western butter delivered in Montreal was unquoted. Price to creamery of Quebec No. 1 pasteurized butter delivered in Montreal for current make was 21 1-2c, and the price of Quebec No. 2 pasteurized butter was 20 1-2c. Receipts: Nil.

Price to factory of Ontario white and colored cheese, delivered in Montreal for current make was 10 13-16c-11 3-16c. Quebec white and colored cheese were both unquoted. Receipts: 830 boxes.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases, inspected, were offered at 29 1-2c a dozen for A-large; 27 1-2c, for A-medium; 22c-22 1-2c for A-pullets; 21c for B-large; 14 1-2c 15c for C. Uninspected lots were offered at 1-2c less. Shipments of lower grades only were offered at 19c-19 1-2c for B, and 13 1-2c-14c for C. Receipts: 291 cases.

GREAT BRITAIN

The Prime Minister referred to the calmness of the British people in face of imminent peril and suggested this was due to the unanimity of thought and the fact that "none of us have any doubt as to where our duty lies" and in confidence the country is ready for any eventuality.

CHOICE OF WAR OR PEACE PUT BEFORE HITLER

Mr. Chamberlain spoke for only sixteen minutes but there can be no doubt he put the choice of peace or war directly and absolutely up to Hitler. All through his speech was an underlying current of his invincible determination to stand by Britain's commitments in eastern Europe and either fight Hitler or negotiate with him if the Chancellor exhibits some measure of conciliation and mutual trust and drops his use of armed force.

After the Premier sat down Arthur Greenwood, Acting Leader of the Opposition, and Sir Archibald Sinclair, Liberal leader, gave the world a demonstration of the unanimity of the British people by pledging their parties to support the firm stand taken by the government. Then the House adjourned, the sitting lasting fifty minutes.

Mr. Chamberlain said some measures which have been taken, such as those in connection with requisitioning, necessarily must cause some degree of inconvenience to the public, but he was confident the people of the country generally recognized the nation's needs must now be paramount.

STATE OF INDUSTRIAL READINESS

"At any rate," he said, "we have not had to begin here by issuing rationing cards."

The air defence of Britain has been placed in a state of instant readiness. The whole warning system is ready for operation. Coast defences are ready and manned by the territorial army.

Arrangements also have been made for the protection of the largest number of important points. As a result of the reserve fleet being called up early in August the navy was in an advanced state of preparedness when the present crisis arose and the whole of the British fighting fleet is now ready at a moment's notice to take up war dispositions.

A considerable number of movements also have been carried out by units of the armed land forces, both at home and overseas, and were part of the re-arrangements planned to ensure a greater state of readiness.

A complete and continuous survey has been carried out over the whole range of defence preparations, he said.

London, Aug. 29 (CP)—Prime Minister Chamberlain told a tense but cheering House of Commons today that Great Britain again had made plain to Adolf Hitler her determination to fulfil her obligations to Poland and that "the issue of peace or war is still undecided".

"We shall hold fast the line which we have laid down," he declared as the House echoed with tremendous cheering. "We still will hope and still work for peace," he went on solemnly in a speech of only sixteen minutes' duration.

"We will abate no jot of our resolution to hold fast to the lines we have laid down for ourselves."

BRITISH FLEET READY

He also announced the whole of the British fleet is now ready to take up its position in the event of war.

Without disclosing the details of the exchange, Mr. Chamberlain declared Great Britain had delivered "our final answer" to a communication from Hitler; that "we have made plain that our obligations to Poland will be carried out," and that "at this moment the position is that we are awaiting Herr Hitler's reply."

The Prime Minister spoke in a firm and assured voice. At times it was almost buoyant such as when he said "at any rate we have not had to begin here by issuing ration cards"—an ironic reference to Germany.

The cheering coming from all sides of the House evidenced the political unity behind his policy of firmness.

London, Aug. 29 (CP)—Prime Minister Chamberlain told the House of Commons today, that "I cannot say that the danger of war has receded since the House met last Thursday".

Cheers greeted his declaration that "there has been no change in the policy of the government", which has been to stand firmly by Poland in the event of aggression.

"It is more than necessary to urge the press to exercise the utmost restraint," Mr. Chamberlain said.

An alleged verbatim quotation of the British note to Adolf Hitler published today, Mr. Chamberlain said, "is an invention from beginning to end."

HANDED TO HITLER

"Our final answer," Mr. Chamberlain said, was handed to Hitler last night by Ambassador Sir Nevile Henderson.

He indicated there would be no immediate publication of the momentous diplomatic exchange on which the peace of Europe apparently depends.

"We have made it plain that our obligations to Poland will be carried out," he said in measured tones. A roar of approval rose from the House.

"At this moment the position is that we are awaiting Herr Hitler's reply," he continued.

Relating briefly a part of the diplomatic moves on which the eyes of the world have been anxiously centred, Mr. Chamberlain said:

"On (Friday) the day after the House adjourned we received information that Herr Hitler had asked the British Ambassador in Berlin to call on him that day. In the course of the afternoon, we were told that Herr Hitler had suggested that it would be a good thing if the Ambassador flew home to give an extended account of his conversation with Herr Hitler.

ARRIVED SATURDAY

"On Saturday, Sir Nevile Henderson arrived by plane from Berlin and we understood from him that in Berlin it was not considered to be necessary that he should go back the same day as the German Government were anxious that we should give careful study to the communication he had to make to us."

"The cabinet devoted the whole of Saturday and Sunday to very careful, exhaustive and thorough consideration of the document brought by Sir Nevile and of the reply they proposed to send back."

The Prime Minister said Hitler left the British Government in "no doubt as to his views of the urgency of settling the German-Polish question."

He added he would be glad if he could disclose the fullest information as to the contents of the communications exchanged with Hitler but said in a situation of such extreme delicacy, when issues so grave hang precariously in the balance, it is not in the public interest to publish them."

READY FOR DISCUSSION

Britain, he said, would "naturally welcome" an opportunity of discussing with Germany the issues of a settlement that would find a place in a lasting agreement.

But, he made clear, the outcome hinges entirely upon the manner in which the immediate differences between Poland and Germany could be handled.

These differences, he declared, the government "more than once" had said "should be capable of solution by peaceful means."

"The first requisite, if there is to be any chance of useful discussion, is that tension created by frontier clashes and reports of incidents on both sides of the border should be diminished," he said.

"The whole of our fighting fleet is ready at a moment's notice to take war dispositions," he said. "Air defence has been placed in a state of instant readiness," but he added:

"The British government would hope that if an equitable settlement of Polish-German differences could be reached by free negotiation, that this might lead on to a wider agreement which would accrue to the lasting benefit of Europe and the world at large."

WAITING FOR REPLY

Britain now is waiting for Hitler's reply, he said, and "on the nature of that reply depends whether further time should be given for exploration of the situation and for the operation of the many forces which are working for peace."

Lauding "the remarkable calm" of the British people, Mr. Chamberlain noted that a period of waiting often is very trying.

The explanation of British calm, he said, was "first, that none has any doubt as to where our duty lies," and "secondly, we are ready for any eventuality".

Viscount Halifax, addressing the House of Lords, expressed similar convictions, saying "the position remains one of great anxiety and danger but hope must not be finally abandoned; there is still hope that reason may prevail."

"Some of the measures which we have had to take," Mr. Chamberlain said in the Lower House, "such as those in connection with requisitioning necessarily must cause some degree of inconvenience to the public but I am confident that the people of the country generally recognize that the nation's needs must now be paramount.

NO RATION CARDS

"At any rate we have not had to begin here by issuing ration cards."

Recounting Britain's preparedness in broad outline, Mr. Chamberlain asserted the nation is ready on every front—for war, if war should come.

"The issues of peace or war are still undecided," he said. "We still will hope and work for peace."

"We will abate no jot of our resolution to hold fast to the line we have laid down for ourselves," he concluded amid cheers.

OPPOSITION LEADER HEARD

Arthur Greenwood, Acting Leader of the Labor Opposition, said: "On these issues, we are adamant and immovable. The door is still ajar. I hope it will remain ajar until it closes against the Angel of Death and the menace of aggression. No nation in Europe would make war except one."

Mr. Greenwood urged immediate evacuation of London and other populous centres, saying:

"Suppose the storm broke on Saturday? It might be two, three, or four days before evacuation could take place to the extent visualized.

"Unless we evacuate now, the responsibility for the deaths which are caused will lie on that side of the House (the government) and not upon us."

REHEARSALS NOT ENOUGH

"Rehearsals are not enough," he declared.

Sir Archibald Sinclair, speaking for the Liberal opposition, said:

"At this moment, I agree with His Majesty's Government that they should have the solid support of all peace loving people in this country.

"The last word rests with Herr Hitler."

"Poland will not have to follow to the grave those nations that were the victims of aggressors," Mr. Greenwood declared.

Mr. Greenwood said the choice of war or peace was Hitler's, asserting:

"I quote as an illustration of that President Roosevelt's appeal to Poland and Germany. To that appeal there was a magnificent response by Poland, showing every sincerity in their desire to avoid the worst and to come to a solution of their difficulties by peaceful means. Herr Hitler has not replied. On his shoulders lies the responsibility for the making of war."

AT THE McCARTHY

"FIVE CAME BACK"

Bringing together one of the strongest groups of players ever assembled for a single picture—the romantic drama that is most exciting screen adventure ever made by any movie camera "Five Came Back" already spoken of as one of the year's ten best, is now playing at the McCarthy Theatre, with the following stars in the most important roles, Chester Morris, Lucille Ball, Wendy Barrie, John Carradine, Allen Jenkins, Joseph Calleia, C. Aubrey Smith, Kent Taylor, Patric Knowles and Elisabeth Risdon.

"Five Came Back" is a film that deals with the plight of a group of aeroplane travellers forced down in a jungle. While head-hunting natives threaten to wipe out the whole party, romance and adventure and jealousy and heroism flourish among them, as the two pilots labor to repair the craft and fly it out to civilization. And when the survivors are ready to go, they discover that the crippled plane can carry only five of them—the others must stay behind and face certain death!

Around this stark situation the film's cast and technical staff have woven a brilliantly developed piece of screen-fare, grim, colorful, realistic, tender and memorable—a climax that is the greatest that the screen has ever known. Do not miss "Five Came Back".

On the same program, Tom Brown, AAndy Devine, Robert Wilcox, Constance Moore and Ernest Truex are presented in a co-feature attraction entitled "Swing that Cheer" the season's first football story which is the most interesting film offering of this grand type of entertainment to me presented in quite some time. "Marriage-Go-Round" an all star twenty minute comedy hit, is also presented in addition to the above feature attractions "Five Came Back" and "Swing That Cheer" now playing at the McCarthy Theatre.

AT THE BELLE

"Goodbye Mr. Chips"

One of the most popular actors of the screen and one of the most popular novels in recent literature are combined in "Goodbye Mr. Chips," James Hilton's haunting story in which Robert Donat, fresh from his triumph in "The Citadel" is now appearing at the Belle, third of the pictures filmed at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's English studio at Denham.

"Goodbye Mr. Chips" tells a story of ideals, romance, tragedy and deep understanding. Donat plays Mr. Chips, who starts as a young man, teaching in a great English school for boys, and passes his life at the work. He becomes the inspiration of boys who grow to manhood and in turn send their sons to him. He shapes the destinies of great men of the future. He meets and marries a beautiful girl. She dies, and from the tragedy a deep human understanding is born in his heart. Thrills of the World War ensue. The teacher, now grown old, becomes the very spirit of popular education.

"Goodbye Mr. Chips" brings to the screen Greer Garson, beautiful English actress, who plays the romance sequences with Donat with compelling charm. Donat plays ages ranging from youth to nearly ninety so convincingly that each fairly lives. Little Terry Kilburn appealing child actor who scored in "Lord Jeff" and as Tiny Tim in "A Christmas Carol" plays successive generations of boys, each growing up and sending his son to his wise teacher. The youngster is forcefully convincing.

Dramatic highlights include the rescue of the heroine in the Tyrolean Alps, a great ball in Vienna, a sensational air raid during the World War, football and cricket at famous old English schools, intermingled with gripping human interest sequences.

On a par with the fine acting in "Goodbye Mr. Chips" is the sensitive and brilliant direction of Sam Wood who has blended together the various phases of the story with a fine perception and skilful knowledge of camera dramatics. The producer is Victor Saville, who produced the successful "Citadel."

STRANGE GULL PECKS NEAR FATAL MEAL

An ocean gull believed to have strayed into this section from the Atlantic or Pacific coast, smaller and darker than the usual gulls found locally chose an unlucky meal this week when it attempted to gulp down a three inch mudcat.

The strange bird carrying an aluminum identification band on its leg placed by the United States Biological Survey was rescued by members of the Wharf Street Debating Club after near suffocation by the mudcat whose horny spines had penetrated the bird's throat.

The band was removed after the capture of the bird by Arthur Potts and sent the United States department at Washington by Russell Dunlop.

That the gull was a strange one was evident by its choice of the mudcat for food. No local gull had ever attempted such a risky meal, it was stated.

STRIDES MADE IN EDUCATION APTLY DESCRIBED

Dr. MacGregor Easson of Ottawa, Special Speaker at Rotary Club

FILMS SHOWN

The remarkable strides made by public school education as exemplified in the curricula of the public schools of Ottawa were aptly described by Dr. MacGregor Easson, public school inspector of the city of Ottawa in a highly informative illustrated address at the weekly Rotary Club luncheon yesterday.

Through the motion of colored motion picture films the activities of the pupils were brought home to the clubmen in a vivid manner. Every phase of physical training was shown on the screen with a grand finale of a field day given at Lansdowne Park, showing the cleverness and adaptability of the Ottawa pupils under the direction of instructors.

Prior to the showing of the film, Dr. Easson, in a clear concise manner, told his listeners of the great differences in public school education of now and that of twenty years ago.

"It has broadened out in the last quarter-century and its activities now include besides research and stories of local conditions, an intense study of systems in educational centres of many prominent countries of the world", he said.

Music Quite Prominent

Music is now playing a prominent part of the education of the children of Ottawa, the speaker pointed out, adding that in four of the city's chief schools, school choirs numbering between 40-140 are now in evidence. Violin, piano and the use of band instruments are now being taught with large numbers of pupils taking advantage of the instructions given by experts. All music lessons are taught after the regular school hours, he said.

There are three junior boys bands now in Ottawa, Dr. Easson said. The best band we have is now known as the Capital City Boys Band, an organization, that had the honour of playing during the laying of the cornerstone of the new Supreme Court Building by Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth.

Art Being Taught

Art is being taught in all its phases by specialists, the speaker declared, with particular attention being placed on the making of pottery by the children.

Reading, he asserted plays an important part in the lives of the children at school. First year pupils of more than average intelligence now read from 16-20 books a year, while the average pupil reads about 6. Pupils must read eighty minutes per week from a library of 1,000 books supplied to them.

Due to the fact that there is a large percentage of French-speaking residents living in Ottawa, the language is now being taught in the public schools. Little French grammar is taught, while oral lessons are given the three highest grades only. Manual training and home science are also being taught.

Progress in school subjects is not proportionate to the time spent—the most important thing is to keep the pupils interested in their work. Dr. Easson pointed out, "The work is considerably more interesting than it was twenty years ago". Special classes, he said, were formed for those mentally retarded (this constitutes roughly 2 1-2 per cent. of the school registration), crippled children, those with heart trouble, deaf, sight-saving and those with T. B. weakness at present in sanitoria.

All Have Opportunity

"This constitutes an attempt to give every child an opportunity to develop his or her talents", the speaker concluded.

The speaker was introduced by H. B. Fetterly while club appreciation was expressed by Rotarian Ross Neal and forwarded to Dr. Easson by President Howard Clarke. Guests included Mac Gordon, Felix Garffer, San Juan, Porto Rico; Ralph Graham, Stan Hagerman, both of Belleville; H. B. Fetterly, of this city; E. W. Reynolds, Toronto; C. A. Clark, Moorestown, N.J.; and W. A. Baker, Toledo, O.

LATE GRAIN CROPS SHOW BETTER YIELD

"You can make a note of this," declared a district farmer this morning, "that those of us who were blamed for being lazy in the spring because we were the last to get in our crop of oats are not feeling so badly about it now. We are getting much longer straw than the early birds and one load to the acre, whereas they merely got one to every two acres."

MAY KEEP EXCHANGE OPEN IN TIME OF WAR

New York, Aug. 29—(CP)— The protective action that might be taken by the New York Stock Exchange in the event of war is a prime topic on Wall Street these troublous days but market officials maintain silence.

While there have been no positive statements that the market would be kept open at the outbreak of hostilities, a firm belief that such would be the case exists in high financial circles.

"The GLASS SLIPPER"

by MIGNON G. EBERHART

Coffee came at last; and the things they must talk of could no longer be pushed aside. Andy began it:

"I talked to Brule this morning. Have they found your nursing kit, Rue?"

He didn't need to say who.

She shook her head. "We looked for it this morning, Rachel and I. And I asked Rachel about the charts; I think she knows where they are; the charts for Crystal's illness, I mean."

They talked of it; and of the inquest; and of Rue's trip to the hospital.

"Alicia is still at the house?" asked Andy at last.

She looked at her small coffee cup.

"Yes."

"Oh, Rue—Rue, how much longer—"

"No, Andy. Don't talk of it."

"But I must, Rue. It's so unfair to you. Doesn't Brule even offer to —to explain? To give her up? To —"

Brule. He'd asked her not to see much of Andy. But lunch with Andy was so small a thing; and she'd needed the bolstering that Andy supplied. The friendly reassurance he gave her.

Or was that all? Had she really, deep in her heart, come to a decision of some kind? A decision that was like a fire laid in the hearth, ready for a flame to light it.

There was something obscurely inept about the simile. Fire? Flame?

Her hand lay on the cloth, beside the lamp. No one could see, and Andy again put his own hand over it. He leaned forward, and there was something urgent in his blue eyes, something urgent on his tongue and about to be spoken.

But she never knew what he'd been about to say. For a man stopped beside their table and said, "Well, hello there," and it was Brule.

Speaking with the utmost coolness and nonchalance, except that his eyes were so bright and his face so masklike.

"Do you mind if I join you?" he said.

Andy relinquished Rue's hand. Brule had seen it, of course. A waiter, hovering, brought an extra chair, and Andy had got to his feet. Then both men were seated again. and there was a menu card in Brule's hands. Menu cards, reflected Rue, are such a help; be nonchalant, look at a menu card.

He ordered quickly.

"Have you been at the hospital?" he asked Andy.

"Yes," said Andy, "that's where I picked up Rue. Were you operating this morning? I didn't see you."

Brule shook his head.

"No. I was at the office. Just happened to come in here for lunch and saw you both."

That, thought Rue, is not the truth. Yet there was no way for Brule to know that they were there; they hadn't known themselves that they'd be lunching together or that they would be at this restaurant. How could he have known it, then?

Andy apparently believed it.

"That Sims woman from downstate is going to make a go of it", he said. "I'm going to feel pretty good about that case. I followed your advice to the letter, Brule, and she's improving."

Rue listened idly while they talked of it, of another case or two, of the cloakroom thefts at the club, of the morning's political news; with a start she remembered the police car that had followed her to the hospital. She'd forgotten it altogether. Had it followed Andy's car from the hospital to the hotel? Then had Brule happened past and recognized the car or the policemen in it? That didn't sound right somehow either; Brule was the kind of person it was difficult to reconcile with coincidence of any kind.

Brule was as always quietly hurried. He ate with dispatch and a good appetite and ordered brandy afterward.

"I'll take Rue home," he said briskly, while the brandy made a bright hot little lane down Rue's throat. "I'm going that way."

CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX

Brule's coupe was at the curb. Their ride along Michigan Boulevard homeward was silent. Brule didn't say, I told you not to see much of Andy. He didn't say anything to Rue.

The seriousness of the present European crisis can be read in the faces of these two youthful members of the Danzig Nazi Heimwehr as they load a bomb thrower on the Polish border. This picture was radioed from London.

Gross opened the door for them and took Brule's coat and hat. "The police are here again, sir. Waiting to see Madam."

After a moment Brule said: "About anything in particular, do you think, Gross?"

"I don't know, sir. The little one they call Funk is there too."

"I see." He turned. "Well, Rue. I'll go with you."

But they wanted to see Rue alone it developed—politely, for Oliver Miller did the talking, and he was always oily with politeness. Brule went away, and Rue, wondering if she would ever grow accustomed to those frequent, unpredictable bouts of questioning, sat down and, as usual, tried to hold herself steady, tried not to show fright and above all, as Guy had coached them all, to think twice before answering anything.

The difficult thing about those interviews was the unexpected way in which the detectives thrust new evidence into them, pouncing at her in the middle of familiar and worn paths of inquiry to ask something totally new and unexpected. Today it was keys.

Keys to the Hatterick house.

Through what long and tedious avenues of inquiry Rue could only guess, they had discovered the locksmith who had made Alicia's key. He had made it at Crystal's order. They knew the date, over a year ago, now, and they knew that it had been given to Alicia promptly on the day the locksmith had delivered it.

But he had made two keys.

Did Rue know anything of an extra key?

Rue didn't.

"Gross would know," she told them.

The little Funk, standing in the shadow of a window curtain, darted forward, looking very grimy and scared, and said Gross didn't know.

"All the members of the household except Miss Madge have keys, and Gross himself has a key. He says that's all there are."

"Perhaps someone lost a key, and the extra one was to replace it," said Rue. It seemed an extraordinary tenuous kind of clue—if clue they considered it.

She thought there was a kind of doubt on their faces, as if they agreed with her.

"Perhaps," said Miller a little heavily. "But Gross says there's been no key missing."

"But—but there are so many possibilities; an extra key...."

"I know," said Miller. "But the maids and the cook insist they have none; that Gross does all the locking and unlocking. He thought you might have had it, Mrs. Hatterick. Or know something about it."

"Well, I don't," said Rue a little crisply. "I have—" She searched in her enormous flat bag, and drew out a smoothly worn key. "I have this one. That's all."

They let her go after a few more questions, again about the time and manner of Julie's arrival. They said nothing, that time, of Crystal's death.

Madge and Alicia were in the studio with Steven, and he was playing the piano. Alicia sat looking like an extremely beautiful portrait in her green gown watching the fire broodingly, with its soft light putting a pale gold flush on her beautiful face. Madge sat in the deep bay window near the piano, her chin on her hand, staring out at the dreary gray sky, her scarlet sweater in bright contrast to the heavy brown curtains, which were open, in daytime, for light.

Rue hesitated on the threshold. There was no place for her there. She went upstairs and, forgetting that her own room—Crystal's room—had now been opened and cleaned, went to the little guest room beside Brule's study.

She had dropped her soft fur coat and sat down, thinking of that businesslike interview just past, when she realized that someone—a woman—was in Brule's study. And she was crying and Brule was talking to her.

Afterward she sought back into her memory for other and preceding words—words she might have heard through that closed, concealed door, as she entered the room, as she flung down her coat, as she sat lost in thought of that recent bout with the police. But she never could remember anything preceding the thing she did hear.

The woman sobbed again, wretchedly. And a man's voice said: "Give them to me. You're a fool. Bring them at once—and stop that shouting."

"I can't .... I'm afraid....Murder...."

"Oh, you fool—"

It was Brule. And he was angry, his voice at its very white heat of anger. She'd seen him that way once, when a surgical nurse forgot a tube and the patient, a boy of fifteen, choked and died before they could do anything.

Brule's voice now brought the tragic, dreadful scene back to Rue.

Yet when he spoke again his voice had changed. It was almost coaxing. He said: "Come now, my dear. You run along and do as I tell you. Nothing's going to hurt you. Nothing at all....nothing..."

After a moment a door opened and closed, and there was silence in the study. Whoever had been there had gone. One of the maids? Cook? Who? Alicia and Madge were in the studio. Somehow the voice, sobbing though it was, had suggested Rachel. Brule must have gone with her.

But he hadn't. For the telephone rang in the study, and Brule's voice answered it.

"Yes, this is Doctor Hatterick." Brule's voice came hard and clear through the closed door. "All right. I'll come right away." The telephone clicked, and the door to the study slammed. Rue reached her own door as Brule started down the stairs.

"Brule—"

He jerked back toward her.

"Emergency," he said. "Let you know...." He was running downstairs. She heard him in the hall below. "Get my coat quick. Is my car still outside? No, I'll drive myself. Quicker."

He was gone.

She went back to the guest room, perceived its slick emptiness, remembered that her own things had been removed to her room again and went, trailing her coat, into the laced, silk-draped bedroom with its French mirror and great bed.

She was there when Rachel came.

It had been Rachel in Brule's study. Rue was sure of it. The girl's eyes were red and swollen. She said in a subdued way that Gross had said the doctor had left.

"Yes, Rachel. There was an emergency at the hospital. What of it?"

But Rachel wouldn't say. She looked at Rue with dark, haunted eyes and asked when the doctor would be back.

"I don't know. Rachel, what is wrong? What—what is it you are hiding under your apron?"

"Nothing, madam. Nothing—"

"Nonsense. There's something. What?"

"Really there's nothing, madam. It's nothing at all...."

"Let me see your hands. Rachel —"

Improve Fairgrounds

A number of improvements have been made at Marmora Fairgrounds. Nearly all of the old stumps have been taken out, the loose stones gathered up and removed and the ground levelled in places. The old sheep and swine pens have been torn out and the cattle sheds extended to the north end of the grounds, providing more than double the space for cattle. Portable pens will be constructed for sheep and swine and this year no prizes will be awarded for stock which is not unloaded as a result of recommendations from the superintendent of Agricultural Societies. A meeting was held in the Council Chamber on Thursday evening to plan for the Fair and revise the prize list.

Warsaw, Aug. 30—(AP)—Poland issued orders today calling an additional half million reservists to the colors.

The first mobilization posters appeared with the heading, "the President has ordered general mobilization," but it was authoritatively emphasized that the order, calling up about 500,000 men, was not actually general mobilization since a large number of exceptions were understood to have been made.

It is estimated that Poland could put 4,000,000 men into the field under general mobilization.

No official figures of men now under arms have been issued, but the total is estimated at between 1,300,000 and 1,500,000.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen

Temperature ranges! Everyone has noticed how the temperature has a large range on one day and a small one on another. The controls of daily temperature ranges are the sun and cyclones, and to a less extrent the condition of the sky. At this time of the year the sun is the most important, and the daily ranges are greatest. The yearly range is controlled by the station's nearness to or remoteness from the great oceans. In North America, the greatest annual range is in the interior of northern Canada, where it is 80 degrees or more; there, the oceans have least effect. The least range is in Central America and along the western coasts of the continents where the ocean has most effect; there, the annual range is only 5 degrees.

British Cabinet Considers Der Fuehrer's Latest Communication — Need Arises for British Government to Consult With Other Governments Regarding Germany's Reply to British Note — Official Circles Quiet As to Future Meetings

Hitler Reply Is Not Made Public

Negotiations with Poles by Germany Would be Radical Change in Hitler's Policy for on Sunday He Refused Such Suggestion from Daladier — Hitler Seeks Understanding with Britain and France — Midnight Conversations Follow Reception of German Reply

London, Aug. 30 (CP)—The King today received Prime Minister Chamberlain at Buckingham Palace at 5:30 p.m. (12:30 p.m. E.D.T.).

By J. F. SANDERSON

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Aug. 30 (CP Cable)—Adolf Hitler has agreed to direct negotiations with Poland, it was reported in diplomatic circles in London today while the British cabinet was meeting to consider the Reichsfuehrer's latest message to Great Britain.

In diplomatic quarters there was a suggestion that Hitler is still insisting on the return of Danzig and the Polish Corridor but there was absolutely no confirmation for these reports in official circles.

The British government met for an hour and a half at 10 Downing Street to consider Hitler's terms but no communique was issued immediately after the meeting. Official circles indicated Britain probably will send a communication to Berlin later in the day.

The terms of Hitler's message, handed to Sir Nevile Henderson in Berlin last night, were telegraphed to London at a late hour and were divulged to Vincent Massey, the Canadian High Commissioner, and representatives of the other Dominions at a meeting at the Dominions Office this morning.

COMMUNICATION WITH OTHER GOVERNMENTS

Reuters News Agency explained the lack of arrangements for a further meeting of the cabinet as "due to the need having arisen for communicating with other governments regarding the German reply." This probably referred to the Polish and French governments.

When the cabinet meeting concluded reports flew about Downing Street and Whitehall that parliament would be assembled tomorrow but once again official circles maintained silence.

EVACUATION OF 50,000 CHILDREN IN PARIS STARTS

Three Important Parliamentary Committees Called By Daladier

PAPERS CUT DOWN

Paris, Aug. 30—(AP)— Evacuation of nearly 50,000 Paris school children began today as the threat of war still hung over Europe.

Premier Daladier, who declared "we will know where we stand today," summoned members of three important parliamentary committees ,the army, air and finance groups, for a mid-afternoon session.

By that time, France expected to know whether Adolf Hitler had made a bid for peace or war in his dispute with Poland. French leaders awaited news of the German leader's note dispatched to London late last night.

Scrap Last of Versailles Treatv Demand is Made in Il Duce's Paper

Rome, Aug. 30—(AP)—Scrapping of what is left of the Treaty of Versailles as the first step toward banishing Europe's war fear was demanded today by Premier Mussolini's Milan newspaper, Il Popolo D'Italia.

The paper's editorial, widely republished in the Italian press, was reported reliably to have been directed if not actually written by Mussolini.

The paper said 11th hour appeals to the Duce to save the peace were coming through "the international press". It indicated the price of Mussolini's affirmative response would be a far-reaching formula on both "European and non-European" complaints which Il Duce has favored for years.

Observers generally interpreted the adjective "non-European" to mean re-distribution in some manner of colonial raw materials.

Likening Europe's crisis to toothaches, the article said:

"Now that the pain has reached the stage of spasms the tooth must come out. To remove the cause of the evils which afflict Europe the Treaty of Versailles must be eliminated. Out with Versailles. Out with all European and non-European ills."

Thousands of Italians abandoned the cities for the countryside today on government advice. The total number to leave, however, was only a small part of metropolitan populations and the exodus was orderly. Those living in the islands of Sicily and Sardinia also were warned.

The departures were most pronounced in the industrial cities of northern Italy which are expected to be the first targets of air raids in the event of war.

BERLIN, Aug. 30—(AP)— The German news agency reported today that the Marienburg (East Prussia)-Danzig - Berlin train had failed to cross Pomorze (The Polish Corridor) because Polish railway officials refused to furnish a locomotive and personnel. The agency charged this was a violation of the Treaty of Paris of April, 1921, which fixed certain German communication rights across the Corridor, connecting Germany proper with East Prussia.

Takes Very Serious View of German Troop Concentrations in Slovakia

NOTE FINDS FAVOR

Poland Replies to Offer of King Leopold and Queen Wilhelmina to Mediate

Warsaw, Aug. 30—(AP)—Poland issued orders today calling an undisclosed number of reservists to the colors.

The increase in the number of men under arms was ordered as government officials took an increasingly serious view of the concentration of German troops in Slovakia on Poland's southern border.

It was emphasized the action did not constitute general mobilization through which it is estimated Poland could put 4,000,000 men in the field.

Brilliant Weather Provides Harvest Setting For Opening Day of Bigger, Better Fair

Crossroads of District View with Pride, Splendid Exhibits Both Rural and Urban

MIDWAY POPULAR

C. V. Exchange Artists present Acts Never Before Seen in City, in Spectacular Grandstand Show

Beneath the blazing rays of a typical August sun and the silvery radiance of a full moon that shone down from cloudless skies, the 1939 edition of the Belleville Fair, conceded by the large crowd that attended both afternoon and evening to be one of the largest and finest of its kind seen here in years, opened auspiciously in an appropriate harvest setting, here yesterday.

Long before the exhibition was officially opened at noon at the Fair Directors' luncheon by Warden Geo. E. Thompson of Hastings County, a large representative crowd from the far-flung sections of the county and district thronged the midways, cattle and livestock pens, exhibition buildings and other colorful attractions that are part and parcel of this kind of exhibition.

Although the opening day was, as is the custom, designated as "Children's Day" and in spite of the fact that the youth of the city and district thronged the grounds during the afternoon attractions, Mr. and Mrs. John Public by no means, let their offspring take full charge of the proceedings.

Crossroads of Community

The Fair Grounds yesterday afternoon and evening buzzed and hummed with laudatory comments of a crossroad of the agricultural, business and industrial life of the community.

It viewed with justifiable pride the cream of cattledom that this year fills the pens. They lauded haughty Holstein, demure Jersey and Proud Ayrshire while in urban and rural eyes shone the pride of achievement in one and the pride of community in the other.

Swine and sheep, blue-blooded aristocrats in their own right, vied for popular favor with equine royalty. Proud, gaily plumaged poultry, from the haughty gobbler to the diminutive bantam were given their rightful share of commendatory remarks.

International Briefs

Tokyo, Aug. 30—(AP)—General Nobuyuki Abe, called from retirement to guide Japan's altered foreign policy, was installed as Premier today by Emperor Hirohito. The installation of his cabinet followed an hour later. The new government was expected to follow an isolation policy now that Germany, Japan's partner in the anti-comintern pact, has signed a non-aggression pact with Soviet Russia, Japan's rival in east Asia.

Balboa, C. Z., Aug. 30—(AP)—Military guards were ordered aboard every vessel passing through the Panama Canal in precautionary measures in force today. The measures were ordered yesterday by Brig.-General Clarence Ridley, Canal Governor, who explained they were prompted by the "impending possibility of war and in view of the international character of the canal." He added there was no apparent threat to the safety of the canal, or ships using it.

Brussels, Aug. 30—(AP)— The Belgian press has been advised by the government to abstain from any comment on the European crisis which might prejudice the nation's neutrality or impair the availability of King Leopold as a mediator. Silence was maintained officially today on details of the offer by the Belgian King and Queen Wilhelmina.

Shanghai, Aug. 30—(AP)— Chu Hsin-Kung, editor of the newspaper Hwa Mei Wan Pao and a close friend of General Chiang Kai-Shek was shot to death today as he crossed a bridge over Soochow Creek near the centre of the international settlement. The assassin fired one shot which entered the editor's head.

New Roads, La., Aug. 30—(AP)—A retired naval commander, turned sugar planter, today came forward with a plan and $5,000 to start a contribution to buy the Polish Corridor and Danzig as a gift for Adolf Hitler to avert war. "This offer may sound screwball," Lieut. Commander Allan Wurtele, retired, said, "but it isn't half as screwball as a general European war into which the United States would be dragged."

BERLIN, Aug. 30 —(CP)— Informed persons today continued to warn correspondents that the international situation was serious, but their own attitude was that things were going Germany's way. In the Wilhelmstrasse there was a constant coming and going of diplomatic limousines. The Belgian Ambassador's car was seen parked directly before the office of Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop.

CABINET SESSION TO MAKE PLANS FOR EMERGENCIES

Additional Militia and R.C. A. F. Units on Way to Halifax

SENTRIES ON BEATS

Ottawa, Aug. 30—(CP)— The Dominion cabinet planned a regular weekly meeting around the council table today amid widespread preparations to meet any emergency the country might face in view of the international situation.

Defence measures are still in progress. Additional militia and Royal Canadian Air Force units are on the way to Halifax to complete manning of Atlantic coast defences against attack from the sea if war should come.

There is some small increase in personnel of the permanent militia in progress, the Defence Department has said, because of the emergency situation. Men are being recruited for the permanent force, but their number and units remain secret. Coastal defence batteries in particular are being strengthened, it was learned.

Sentries still walk their beats guarding bridges, canals, government buildings, power plants, factories, airports, and ports as a precaution against sabotage attempts. The temporary guards increase daily as further non-permanent units of the milita are canvassed for volunteers.

Co-ordination of Provinces

Quebec and Ontario sent representatives to the capital yesterday to confer with Defence Minister Mackenzie on co-ordination in those provinces of measures for safeguarding internal security. Ontario sent Premier Mitchell Hepburn and Attorney-General Conant, while Quebec was represented by George Leveille, Private Secretary to Premier Duplessis. Premier Hepburn and Mr. Conant flew here for the conference and returned to Toronto the same way.

Offer of Mediation Not Extended To German Gov't

Official Sources Say Offer Made to Great Britain, France and Poland—London Sends Favorable Reply

DEMANDS STAND

Germany's Demand for Return of Danzig and Polish Corridor Still Stands Despite Any Negotiations That May Follow

Berlin, Aug. 30—(AP)—Members of the German cabinet assembled unexpectedly in Adolf Hitler's Chancellery at 4:30 p.m. (11:30 a.m. E. D. T.) All were in Berlin, available for the meeting.

Members of the Reichstag, many of whom left the capital after their meeting with Hitler Sunday, have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness to return for a meeting at any moment.

Authoritative quarters said the German government "welcomes with extraordinary sympathy the offer of mediation by Queen Wilhelmina and King Leopold."

These persons said the offer of mediation was not extended to the German government but to Great Britain, France and Poland.

Britain, in the opinion of these persons, is the only nation really in a position to press upon Poland to accept.

(London and Paris have sent favorable replies to the Netherlands and Belgian sovereigns. Poland reiterated her reply to President Roosevelt on the desirability of mediation, but indicated further progress depended on the German attitude.)

Point to Discussions

As evidence of Germany's willingness to have the issues with Poland negotiated, German informed quarters pointed to the discussions now going on with the British government.

Authoritative quarters were emphatic in stating that "the efforts of the two sovereigns for the maintenance of peace and the European consciousness of responsibility which is reflected by this offer receive general appreciative recognition."

"This exchange of thoughts proves that German efforts are proceeding in the same direction as those of the two sovereigns," they said.

Germany Remains Adamant

Germany's demand for the return of Danzig and the Polish Corridor, however, they declared, remained adamant.

Informed quarters remarked that nobody should be surprised if in the next hours and days there is considerable airplane flying back and forth between Berlin and London.

The German answer was in London this morning—dispatched there by Sir Nevile Henderson, British Ambassador to Berlin, who had another conference with Hitler last night. Contents of the note were not disclosed here.

Hitler was said to be standing pat on his demands, outlined in his correspondence with Premier Daladier of France, for annexation of Danzig and Pomorze, the Polish Corridor.

Must Be Ceded

The press, echoing views of officials, declared Hitler's manoeuvres placed responsibility for preventing war on Britain and France. The Corridor and Danzig, in any event, must be ceded to Germany, if insisted.

Anti-Nazi Film Is Withdrawn

New York, Aug. 30—(CP)— The Anti-Nazi film "Professor Mamlock" has been withdrawn from the Soviet Pavilion at the World's Fair, after running continuously since early in August, it was learned yesterday and "Lenin in 1917" has been substituted on the Pavilion's motion picture program. Produced in the Soviet Union "Professor Mamlock" has been described at the time by critics as a "screen indictment of Hitler's regime" and a "gripping and terrifying Soviet photoplay."

At the Soviet Pavilion it was said that "Professor Mamlock" had been withdrawn in accordance with the policy of periodically changing the motion-picture fare, and it was only a coincidence that its removal two days ago came shortly after the announcement of the Nazi-Soviet non-aggression pact and commercial treaty.

BRITISH VESSELS ORDERED TO PORT

Short-wave Station Intercepts British Admiralty Orders

New York, Aug. 30—(AP)— The New York Herald Tribune shortwave radio station last night intercepted British Admiralty orders instructing all British merchant vessels to proceed to British ports and leave Italian, German and other waters.

The Admiralty instructed merchantmen bound for Germany, Danish or Dutch ports, whether in the North Sea or beyond, to return to United Kingdom ports. The same orders were given British ships in German, Danish or Dutch ports north of latitude 50 degrees north.

The broadcast advised ships bound into the Mediterranean from the Atlantic to call at Gibraltar and await orders, and for ships in or bound for the Red Sea to proceed to Suez or Aden.

Ships were warned not to visit Italian ports, and those in Italy were told to leave. Ships plying the Black Sea were ordered to the Sea of Marmora.

A late order instructed vessels on the high seas to open sealed orders.

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 30—(CP)—Mrs. John E. Kuizenga, 61, wife of a Princeton University professor, died in hospital today as a result of injuries received in an automobile accident at a highway intersection three miles south of Hamilton last night.

Mrs. Kuizenga was a passenger in a car driven by her nephew, Henry Kuizenga, when it collided with a transport truck. The party was en route to the university after spending several weeks at their summer home in Michigan.

Mrs. Marion Stekette, daughter of Mrs. Kuizenga and her four-year-old son, Jan, escaped with minor injuries. Driver of the truck, George Rainey of Toronto, suffered bruises and a shaking up.

GAOL INMATES LOWEST IN YEARS

It may be the weather and it may be the tension of the European situation, but the fact remains that the gaols of the district are at present occupied with the lowest number of inmates for this time of the year, experienced for some time, officials of the Hastings County institution stated today.

Housed in the local gaol are twenty-two persons, the lowest number for the end of August in some years.

ROSE BLOOMS SECOND TIME

Rawdon Aug. 30 (Special)— A beautiful "Captain Hayward rose in all its fragrance and petal beauty, perfectly formed and normal in every respect, has appeared on a rosebush in the garden of Mrs. Percy MacMullen, Mount Pleasant, Rawdon Township.

The bush bloomed profusely in June, and since the recent heavy rains has been productive of an abundance of new shoots. The "second" bloom of the season appeared in the centre of the bush practically overnight.

BATA SHOE CO. ERECTS FIRST HOUSE

Said to be the first excavation project operated by company officials since their location in Frankford, local village workmen yesterday started digging operations on the basement of the first Bata Shoe Company house to be erected on the Canadian site.

While nothing definite was given out by company officials, a highly authoritative source stated that the erection of the new building will be an experiment to discover whether costs would or would not be greater by company construction or by private tender.

FORMER RESIDENT DIES AT MONTREAL

Funeral services were held in Montreal yesterday for Charles Scott Ogilvie, 52, a civil engineer for the Canadian National Railways who began his career as railroader as assistant engineer in the Belleville division in 1913. SUFFERS BROKEN ARM IN TRUCK UPSET

Victim of a heavy spill on Front Street near the upper bridge when a truck owned by the midway company now playing at the Belleville Fair overturned, Lorne Sandford, 89 Front Street, received a broken arm. The truck in negotiating the turn at the bridge apparently overbalanced tipping load and occupants to the roadway.

BEAUTIFUL HORSES ATTRACT ATTENTION

Two perfectly proportioned chestnut Belgian draught mares being led by a man and a boy through the downtown section of the city this morning brought the livestock exhibit of the Belleville Fair a little closer to local residents.

The beautiful animals which trod with springy step and questioning glances of high spirited horses, attracted the attention and comments of scores of pedestrians who lined sidewalk curbs to watch the animals go by.

The perfect specimens of horse flesh were taken to the city weight scales where it was revealed one of the mares tipped the scales at pounds.

AMERICANS GET GOOD HAUL

Phillip Wolx, Stewart Lyon and son Edward of Rochester, have good reason to think West Lake is one of the best fishing grounds in the district. For on their very first trip there to lure the finny beauties they succeeded in hauling into their boat, eight pike, five pickerel and a dozen bass. Later in the day they topped off this fine haul with a twenty pound maskinonge.

Included in the guests that attended the directors luncheon at the Canadian National Exhibition yesterday was Ex-Alderman F. A. Pinkston of this city.

The occasion was Automotive Day and Mr. Pinkston heard a highly informative address given on the automotive trade and its allied businesses by W. J. Cameron of the Ford Motor Company's Chicago plant. About two hundred including directors and guests enjoyed the luncheon and address.

WHY A WAR? THERE'S HAYFEVER!

Hay Fever victims are still in the throes of the disease that is the bane of all those allergic to the pollen of the golden-rod.

One sneezing gentleman seen on Front Street this morning, gazing through bleary eyes, with nose red from constant contact with his handkerchief, when asked what his opinion of the European situation was, answered,

"I'be dot worried ober der war. I'he dot drubble enough ob ode. But if dere's pollen M Poland, I'de fide for Hitler".

Which translated into healthy, unhayfevered English, means. "I'm not worried over the war. I've got trouble enough of my own. But if there is pollen in Poland, I'll fight for Hitler".

CITY'S STRANGE GULL SECOND ONE FOUND

Ornithologists of the country are speculating over the appearance recently in widely separated districts of the province of a new variety of gull, believed to be of the ocean variety hundreds of miles from their home grounds.

Last week one of the dark-colored birds, smaller than the usual gull found in this section was found near the Debating Club slip on South Front Street, a small mudcat securely wedged in its throat. Yesterday a fishing guide at Penetanguishene picked up a second exhausted gull of the same variety. Both birds bore aluminum identification bands on the leg which have been removed and sent to the United States Biological Survey department at Washington.

CHOCOLATE "POM" AT CITY POUND

A handsome chocolate-colored female Pomeranian dog is now awaiting its owner at the City Pound. The dog is said to have followed a group of children from the Fair Grounds yesterday afternoon and was picked up by City Poundkeeper Thomas Thorne. FIRE DAMAGES FRONT ST. CAFE

Flames breaking out in the kitchen when overheated floorboards caught fire in the New Service Restaurant, Lower Front Street shortly before ten o'clock last night, caused damage estimated by fire-department officials at $100.00.

Firemen reduced the blaze that was confined for the most part beneath the flooring near the stove. The most of the damage was caused by heavy smoke that filtered through the restaurant to apartments upstairs.

TWO FINE 'LUNGE CAUGHT at MOIRA LAKE

The thrill of a lifetime was afforded Mayor H. Turkington, of Manchester Pa., and his friend J Miller, also of Pa. yesterday when they caught two fine specimens of maskinonge in Moira Lake. Mr. Miller's 'lunge measured 5 foot 4 1-2 inches in length and weighed exactly 42 pounds, while Mayor Turkington's maskinonge weighed 27 pounds when hauled from the water. The anglers, from Pennsylvania are guests at Casa Loma on Moira Lake and immediately upon their fine catch were photographed while proudly holding their catch. "They wouldn't believe us unless we took back either these fish or a picture," remarked Mayor Turkington.

NO CHANGE SEEN IN LOCAL PORT ROUTINE

If the situation creates the condition, the Dominion Government will take over control of all exports and also harbors, ports and territorial waters, it has been announced. This will include the active port of Belleville, it is presumed by the Belleville Harbor Commission, though no word has been received regarding this from Ottawa. No change in the usual routine at the dock has been noted recently, and no extra guards have been posted along the harbor front. The usual shipping which has admittedly been slow and light this season is being registered by Harbormaster Waddell.

O.S.D. EXHIBIT SHOWN AT TORONTO "EX"

Made in the shops of the Ontario School for the Deaf by the pupil craftsmen, woodwork of all kinds, displays of needle craft and exhibits of art leather work and other vocational subjects feature an excellent display of exhibits arranged by the local pupils in the National Industries building of the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto.

The exhibit, the second staged by pupils of the school since its formation in Belleville in 1870 is under the directon of R. H. Vaughan. Last year was the first year such a display was presented.

Eight pupils of the school give daily exhibitions of their work, all of them are from Toronto.

Four of the boys are engaged in woodworking, making book racks, coat trees and other articles, while the girls give demonstrations in typing, needlework and other arts.

NEW BOMBERS ARE STATIONED LOCALLY

Twelve orange-colored Royal Canadian Air Force bombers which passed over the city late yesterday morning ostensibly headed for the R.C.A.F. base at Trenton were brand new machines purchased by Canada for delivery to the Trenton base, according to reports received yesterday by Mr. R. D. Arnott, K.C., M.P.P., for West Hastings.

Some of the machines reportedly were manned by R.A.F. flyers on loan from England to the Canadian Air Force.

TRENTON and DISTRICT

Trenton, Aug. 30 (Special)—Few people in Ontario and indeed in all of Canada see more of the actual startling devtlopments that accompany a war scare than local citizens, owing of course to the close proximify of the nation's largest air base; and to the many people whose friends and neighbors are in many cases R.C.A.F. families, that threat is all the more intensified. When the first phase of the current critical European situation developed on Thursday of last week members of one squadron were summoned hurriedly from picture shows, homes, picnics, and various spots to which they had gone following their return from work in the afternoon. It was almost like war times as movies were invaded and members of the squadron were called out with instructions to report for duty and transfer to the east coast immediately. Wives bade farewell to husbands with no certainty that they would be seeing each other soon again if at all; and streets of the town seem strangely quiet and deserted even now as members of the force are confined almost without exception to the camp, ready for the first call.

Information Restricted

Instructions from the National Defence headquarters in Ottawa forbid any definite information regarding movement of troops but it can safely be said that several squadrons and a number of trained pilots have left the local station and are supposedly located at the Dartmouth station at Halifax.

Meanwhile the weekend saw the arrival of quite a considerable number of British Royal Air Force members, many of them with wives, children, dogs, and baggage, apparently arriving for an extended stay in Canada; and these have already taken over certain departments at the station.

Residents of Trenton paused on Tuesday forenoon to gaze with interest at the various formations flying overhead, conscious all the while of the tension in Europe. Flights of bombers and pursuit planes, all in battle formation, roared one after another across the town, and while Trentonians have seen plenty of individual training, this is almost the first look at the type of flying which is seen in real war.

Down at the Air Station nonpermanent militiamen of the Midland Regiment guard gates and patrol all avenues of approach; and all comers are requested to sign in at the main gate. A sentry paces off the hours outside his sentry box there, and other guards are posted on the outlying portions of the aerodrome. It is all deadly serious this time, and there is little of the rather lenient attitude taken on the occasion of the last war scare almost a year ago.

Wig-wags at both the King Street and the Dundas Street C.N.R. crossings are working efficiently and well, and local motorists are quickly getting accustomed to the new equipment installed only a week ago. Watchmen are still employed at these crossings but will soon leave their posts.

A permanent guard of militiamen has been set to watch the Trenton armoury, and no visitors are allowed. This move is in pursuance of the national policy, and instructions for the posting of this guard were contained in a wire reaching Col. H. J. Smith, O.C. Armoury, Saturday evening last. Other guards, mostly chosen from the ranks of returned men, are on duty at power houses along the Trent River, at the water tank, and at various vital and strategic points in the town.

Police Blotter

An automobile, said by police to have been driven by Bruce Jones, of this city, crashed into a telephone pole on Albion St., breaking it off at the base and carrying the pole atop the vehicle for a distance of 25 feet, shortly after 1.30 a.m. today. The top of the vehicle was badly damaged.

Constables Wright and Taylor investigated the accident, but upon their arrival at the scene of the accident no sign of a driver was in evidence. Later Jones was arrested on a nearby street and lodged in the police cells on a charge of leaving the scene of an accident. An L. C. A. charge is also to be preferred, Chief Kidd intimated this morning as Jones was remanded in custody.

Plainclothes Constable Fred Isard arrested Charles A. Dean, Trenton, on a charge of theft yesterday. Dean was apprehended on Front St., on a warrant issued by Trenton police charging him with the theft of a diamond ring. Today Dean was handed over to the Trenton authorities.

Today Mrs. M. McCabe, 46 Moira St., reported the theft of her son's bicycle to police authorities. The bike, which was the property of her son, was a green colored bike with a carrier in front.

Two transients shared the cell block along with two inebriates, arrested last night.

Long Delay Seen in Waterway

Washington, Aug. 30—(AP)—Convinced that negotiation of a new St. Lawrence seaway treaty faced long delay, the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association announced today it was removing its executive offices to Lucerne, Minn., "until such time as it appears possible to secure united action by the governments of the United States and Canada.

ON TO OTTAWA KIWANIS SLOGAN

Great Preparations Being Made for Annual District Convention

"On To Ottawa" will be the rallying cry from Halifax to the Soo as Kiwanians of Eastern Canada converge on the Nation's capital for the 21st annual convention of the Ontario-Quebec-Maritimes District of International Kiwanis.

From the opening sessions on Sunday, September 24th to the final banquet and ball, delegates from five Canadian provinces will participate in three great days of business deliberations, inspirational addresses, election of officers and entertainment and recreation.

Beautifully situated where three rivers meet, with parks, golf clubs and miles of scenic drives, heart of the Nation's government and centre of historical associations, Ottawa promises manifold attractions for over 600 Kiwanians, their wives and lady friends who will attend. Among the eminent Kiwanians present will be President Bennett O. Knudson of Albert Lea, Minn., and District Governor R. V. Harris of Halifax. Delegates will be welcomed to Ottawa by the Mayor, Stanley Lewis, and C. G. Watt, president of the Kiwanis Club of Ottawa.

WRAPS BLANKET ABOUT SELF AS CLOTHES CATCH FIRE

Mitchell, Ont., Aug. 30—(CP) — Thomas Gaffney of Logan Township wrapped a blanket around himself when his clothes caught fire while he was cleaning his truck last night. He was using gasoline and a spark from a live wire jumped to the gasoline container he was holding. As Gaffney wrapped the blanket about his body, companions beat it, extinguishing the flames. He suffered severe burns about the arms and legs.

Brockville, Ont., Aug. 30—(CP)— S. S. Rurrant, manager of The Mecca Oil Company, Prescott, today was committed for trial by a higher court, and released on bail of $2,000 on a charge of issuing false statements of the company's receipts and expenditures to a member of the company.

HAMILTON BLAST INJURES FOUR

Explosion Believed Caused By Accumulation of Gas in Store Basement

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 30—(CP)— Three men and one woman were hurt early today when a series of blasts, believed to have been caused by an accumulation of gas in the basement, ripped an office building apart at the city yards, Elgin Street.

The injured: William Nichols, broken arm, bruises and lacerations; Orville Lukes, lacerations and shock; Gordon McGillivray, bruises and shock; Miss Betty Chilman, lacerations and shock.

Fire apparatus and police squad cars speeded through the city streets with sirens shrieking as police radio gave the alarm of the blast.

The force of the explosion was terrific. A huge gas tank near the spot did not catch fire.

William Nicholls was working in [illegible]

ing with Mr. McGillivray and Miss Chilman in the office above. It is thought that gas must have permeated the air of the cellar and that when Nicholls either lighted a match or struck a spark, the series of explosions followed.

James McLean and William Nixon, in an adjoining building, were hurled to the floor and showered with glass by the force of the outbreak. They knew that Nicholls was in the basement and ran to the scene to see flames spouting from the windows. They made their way into the basement and dragged Nicholls to safety.

Firemen arrived promptly and checked the flames. The injured were rushed to hospital.

Fair Is Largest In District Annals, Exhibits Praised

Warden Thompson Has Honor of Officially Declaring Fair Open

President Bonter High in Praise of Factors Behind Exhibition

BEHIND THE SCENES

C. A. Cameron M. P.; R. D. Arnott M. P. P; G. Tustin M. P., Compliment Officers and Directors

Belleville Fair official opening yesterday afternoon was marked by simple ceremony, with a Warden of Hastings County for the first time in the long and successful history of the fair acting as official guest of honor.

It lacked but a few moments until three o'clock when the words: "I pronounce this Belleville Fair open. May it prosper and succeed to the extent of my fullest wish" were voiced by Warden of Hastings, Geo. E. Thompson, at the annual dinner tendered on the grounds to officials of the city, county and surrounding municipalities by directors of the Belleville Agricultural Society.

With the words, the time-honored ceremony of the hoisting of the flag on the staff of the front grounds was completed and the strains of martial music of the Belleville Municipal Band rang out in the afternoon air. For the first time in many years the usual boom of cannon signalling the official opening was not heard. This ceremony had been dispensed with this year.

The official opening had been delayed through last minute work on the part of directors, but in the big tent on the Midway officials and guests gathered where they were given formal welcome by President of the Fair Board, E. E. Bonter.

Fair Largest Ever Seen

"This fair" said Mr. Bonter in his opening remarks "is the largest we perhaps have ever had. This year we have many more exhibits than ever before. We have more cattle and horses and other stock. We appear to have more of everything, and everything shown on the grounds seems to be of better quality. All our buildings are packed to capacity, and we have been hard put to find room for the entries."

Mr. Bonter paid his respects to the work of his efficient committees, and his appreciation for the assistance that has been given to make such success as this year's fair possible.

"We are confident," he added, "that we are on our way to better things."

R. H. Ketcheson, perennial secretary of the Board confirmed the statement of the president that this year's entry list was the largest ever by the Society. 'Never since I have been connected with the Fair, and that goes back a good many years, have we had as many exhibits of as good a quality," he stated.

To lovers of horseflesh Mr. Ketcheson commended Tuesday's races the first races to be held during the Fair.

Best Horse Races Await

"This year the Belleville Fair will see perhaps the best horse races on record. In the 2:15 class we have never before had a class of the type we have this year. We have here seven of the best horses in the Province, and all are qualified to start in this class. It may not be the fastest race ever held here, because fast races are not always necessarily the best, but it will be one of the best races ever put on the Belleville track."

Secretary Ketcheson explained this year nearly all judges were being brought in from outside Belleville and expressed the hope that all exhibitors would feel they were getting a "fair deal" when judged.

Mr. C. A. Cameron, M.P., for South Hastings in a brief address paid tribute to the work and organization of the Board of Directors of the Fair. As a visitor he explained he had been attending the fair regularly for the past nineteen years and each year new scenes, new experiences were presented.

Visitor Sees Only Surface

"But we who attend the fair see only the surface of things, the front window display. Were we to look behind the scenes we would see the weeks and even months of work that are necessary to prepare this annual event," Mr. Cameron reminded.

"Officers and members of this Society give of their time freely and willingly to assist in this great work and this year we have as president Earl Bonter who exemplifies all these helpful traits so displayed by the members and officers of your society. The president is a successful farmer; he lends also to the social life of his community. He is representative of that great body of good citizens who by their efforts distinguish themselves in the betterment of their community.

"To Dick Ketcheson," continued Mr. Cameron, "the fair is the crowning achievement of his year's work. Without Dick the fair would not be the fair. Presidents and directors may come and go, but Dick goes on forever.

"Work in the interests of your community and your fair," advised Mr. Cameron in his parting remarks, "and when the end of the year comes, you will have the satisfaction of knowing that you have at least helped to make the community just that much more successful."

Contribution to Better Living

R. D. Arnott, M.P.P. for West Hastings hastened to endorse Mr. Cameron's remarks upon the ability and progressiveness of directors and members of the Fair Board. To R. D. Ketcheson, fair secretary, he also paid tribute and to the ordinary exhibitors and the citizens who make up the vast contribution to better welfare of the community he expressed the firm conviction that as long as Canada had such men and women, the Empire need fear no crisis which it could not meet.

"We are with the Old Country and we can be depended upon to take our active part in the defence of our country when the time comes. And as long as this country has citizens such as are represented here today we may have no fear of the outcome," declared Mr. Arnott.

No Greater Asset Seen

Mr. Geo. Tustin, M.P. for Prince Edward Lennox, introduced by past president James Barber, declared an organization such as the Belleville Fair Board which could arrange such a successful event as was evident this year deserved the cincere congratulations of all. It was, he admitted, his first visit to the Belleville Fair, but he assured again it would not be the last. "I just wondered as I looked around here which was better represented, Hastings County or Prince Edward County" he observed. "But both counties have contributed and this shows the close unity which has long been evident."

"There is no greater asset to any community than a fall fair, and Hastings and Prince Edward Counties are particularly well suited in this respect" declared Mr. Tustin.

Warden Roy Ketcheson of Prince Edward County responded to his introduction by James Barber with the expressed hope for a successful fair throughout. "You have the happy augury right now of good weather and that appears to be all that will be necessary to make this fair one of the most outstanding in the Province," he added. Warden Ketcheson explained that the Belleville Fair was the first one he had ever attended, one so long ago it was almost lost in memory. But he had since continued to attend to observe the growth of the Belleville Fair year by year.

Fair Makes Better Feeling

Introduction of Warden of Hastings County who announced the fair open was made by County Clerk Erle Denyes who declared the Warden came from the "best township of the County, Rawdon." "Though", added Mr. Denyes "he doesn't like to admit that when the equalization business comes up."

Warden Thompson expressed the signal honor conferred upon him in being the first Warden in the history of the fair to be given the privilege of opening the annual exhibition. He congratulated officials and members of the Society upon the excellent arrangements made and expressed his gratification upon the largest entry list yet registered by the Board.

"The annual fair," pointed out the speaker, "offers the farmers of the district the chance to get together and discuss mutual problems, discussions which always result in better ways of doing things. The fair draws both the urban and rural populations together, resulting in better feeling and greater friendliness between them. It provides the chance of friendly competition between growers and producers, competition which has always resulted in betterment of conditions within the county."

Warden Thompson referred to the recent visit of Their Majesties the King and Queen as one which had resulted in closer cementing of the friendship between provinces, and a better feeling which has been evident through the country down even to the individual counties. "We of Canada are proud to belong to this great Empire which has always acted as peacemaker of Europe, and proud of our heritage of citizenship under this great flag.

At this point Warden Thompson declared the fair officially open, with his best wishes for future success.

Products of Home and Garden

With the largest entry list in the history of the Belleville Fair, the Ladies' Work department was a remarkably successful feature of the 1939 edition of the Belleville Fair, over six hundred entries being received. The building in which the display was contained was one of the most popular centres of interest, the exhibits of domestic science, fine arts, horticulture, vegetables, and children's work sharing honors, and all showing a splendid growth of interest since last year.

Over half the building is devoted to the interests of the home maker and the needlecraft display alone was of such outstanding merit that it claimed admiring and critical attention at first glance. Those in charge of this department were most enthused about the response this year and were especially delighted with the many new and original versions of needlework which made up the various classes.

For the home beautiful there were countless decorative articles of fancy work, crocheting and knitting. Lace table cloths, fragile to the point of cob web texture, crocheted mats for luncheon use, cutwork in exquisite design for pillow cases, table cloths, colorful cross stitch bridge sets some in Chinese pagoda design, others in more conventional style were in great variety. For the bedroom, quilts of pastel tones had a refreshing daintiness, while bedspreads, a beauty in pink and ivory, and natural tones, rivalled the quilts in charm. Afghans not merely knitted or crocheted but finished with panels of cross stitching were very beautiful. A chenille bath mat in mauve and purple was completed in thick, professional style. The daintiest articles were the filet crochet centres and lacey tatted articles.

To mention only a few of the many hand made wearable articles whose beauty of finish gave the judges a trying session, there were bed jackets in knitted design, some in the the popular angora which were very lovely.

A striking model was a rose quilted satin jacket lined with pale ivory. House coats in practical prints and smart house frocks were greatly admired. Skill in crochetting was displayed in the collection of lace gloves, while sweaters and knitted dresses showed the latest trends in such wear for fall. The crochetted purses favored the shell pattern, some pretty versions being in two tone effect.

For the small tots there was an excellent collection of dainty garments. Smocked dresses with unusually deep yokes, one lovely model in flowered silk, knitted baby's wear, one outfit of pink having amusing buttoned bootees and print dresses were well represented. The men's wear was not neglected and the perfectly finished fine shirts and work shirts were a special feature. The variety of men's sox showed that this knitting art has not been forgotten.

Flower Show

Impressive in color and form the entries in the Flower Show met with special praise from the judges. Entering the south door, the vivid tints of gladioli in large baskets, giant zinnias in the same profuse arrangement, and orange marigolds made an exotic splash of colour against the green of large house plants. Daintily arranged table bouquets offered interesting studies making the table more attractive. Single specimens of many autumn flowers were entered in the competition, even a few roses still offering their fragrance and beauty to those who paused to admire. All manner of cut flowers and bright healthy flowering plants made their appearance and variety was introduced in the hanging baskets which were cleverly placed to add to the general decorative scheme of the building.

Vegetable Display

Vieing with the flowers in attraction the more useful products of the garden formed an interesting display and this section of the fair also boasted a large entry list. Fruit and grains occupied prominent parts of this display, and the competition here, too, was very keen. A unique exhibit and one which each year commands the attention of the visitor was that of T. W. Bamford, market gardener. The arrangement of vegetables was done in artistic style and the grouping and color effects made the scene a striking picture. Centred in the display was a tiny green house before which was garden plot bright with miniature flowers, tiny evergreens outlining the walk.

Cookery as a high art was demonstrated by the collection of edibles in the domestic science section, crowded with entries. Everything to tempt the appetite was there; delectable pies, cakes, delicious home made bread and buns, honey and preserved fruits and vegetables, candies and cookies seemed endless in variety.

Fine Arts

A section of this building which commanded much appreciative attention was the fine arts display where artists gifted with brush and other media exhibited the splendid results of their work. Portraits in oils, strongly executed water color flower studies of delicate beauty, lovely garden scenes, seascapes of peaceful moonlit scenes or of the sea in tempestuous moods were some of the canvases depicted.

Other handiwork stressed china painting of useful and lovely pieces, beaded bags, stencil work, wicker work and hand carved trays.

School Children's Display

The work of school children astonished the visitors with its finish and the talent it revealed. There were examples of writing, collections of various kinds. Needlework and knitting showed feminine diligence. One thirteen year old girl brought in a display that included a beautifully made dress, a smart sweater, a table scarf in Mexican embroidery, all her own work and of a quality that compared favorably with that in the senior competition. This little girl was waiting when the convener opened the door of the building.

GENERAL QUALITY OF EXHIBITS HIGH

Horticulturists of District Produce Best Display in Years at Fair

A horn of plenty has spread its manifold, colorful gifts of agricultural produce in the Horticultural Building in the Fair Ground this year, presenting an exhibit which ranks well with those of better years of grain and vegetable growing. This year despite the fact growers and agriculturists faced a difficult time earlier in the season due to lack of rain the general quality of exhibits is high, and some perfectly arranged entries are on exhibit for Belleville and district residents to visit.

A trip through this building reveals one of the most colorful and interesting sights on the fair grounds. From the earliest conception of the fair flowers have annually played an important part in the arrangements within the building, and this year the exhibits are beautiful in the extreme. One side of the building is devoted to this display of flowers grown within the city and through the district and this year again all the better known exhibitors have placed their own favorites on view, tastefully arranged, and with the cards placed showing the winners of the respective groups. Judging of tis class was completed on Tuesday.

Dominates Entire Scene

At one end of the building the annual exhibit by Mr. T. W. Bamford again dominates the entire scene. Weeks and even months of preparation and selection have gone into this famed display of flowers, fruits and vegetables which annually attracts hundreds of visitors. The present season has not been an unusually productive one nor even a good growing season, but in spite of this fact the high quality of products has been maintained, it was reported by this experienced exhibitor and gardener.

"We needed rain during the early part of the season, rain which we did not get", stated Mr. Bamford. "But the weather lately has rather made up for the early omission."

The grain and seed displays shown on one side of the building have been tastefully arranged this year, and here again the quality is reportedly very good. Sheaves of wheat, barley and oats form attractive settings for the plainly marked bags holding the various entries of grains.

Through the centre aisles long tables are given over to the display of apples, plums, grapes and other fruit from district orchards. Huge cabbage, cauliflower and other roots and vegetables occupy as prominent positions on other tables. By the time late afternoon and evening visitors had arrived all had been judged and classified with tags appended showing the scoring position.

Baking Section Good

The baking section is particularly good. Nut brown loaves of bread reposing in inviting array under glass cases, trays of tarts and cakes, pies and buns in glistening order revealed that the art of old fashioned home kitchen baking had not disappeared from the district. Here again the names of many well known older exhibitors were revealed on the classifying cards.

In the Fine Arts section and Ladies' section new and more original ideas are displayed. Rugs, hook rugs, mats and needle specialities are on show with new colors this year predominating. At one end of the building the Public and High School pupils' department occupied prominent space and attracted considerable interest. Here were displayed drawings, carvings, maps and other handicrafts of the pupils. One of the most interesting displays was a Nature collection of insects, with a case of large moths the centrepiece.

Lovely Greer Garson and Robert Donat in the charming romantic film "Goodbye Mr. Chips", at the Belle.

BIRDS DISPLAYED OF HIGH QUALITY

More than 500 of all Classes Housed on Fairgrounds

Stately poultry of all varieties greet the eye of visitors at the Belleville Fair upon entering the newly decorated poultry building. Poultry officials in charge contend the quality of birds displayed in chickens, ducks, geese and turkeys is of the finest quality ever on display for judging at the Fair.

It is estimated that over 500 birds in all classes are on display to the general public ranging in size from the mammoth Golden Bronze Turkeys to the petit Bantam cocks as a comparison in size to present an inviting picture to persons interested in poultry.

The poultry building is gayly decorated with palms floating easily in the breeze, but it remains to have the exhibits of gayly plumed birds present a kaleidoscopic coloring which adds beauty and grace to the beautifying picture. All types of poultry are on display and should prove one of the Fair's attraction, especially to the urban clientele. There is, however an absence of pets and small animals, such as rabbits, cats and dogs.

Greeting the eye as one enters the Poultry Building is a large pen of Golden Bronze Turkeys, while in the matter of water fowl, the stately Toulouse and Chinese geese prove two of the best attractions in the building. Pens of Rouen, Pekin and Aylesbury ducks and one pen of wild ducks complete the display of water fowl, however.

Every class of poultry is on display, with the heavy Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Rhode Island Reds taking the eye, but the pure white Leghorns and the proud and stately Orpingtons and Jersey Black Giants add coloring to the poultry display, as do the smaller game birds and Bantams. Director J. W. Holley, who is in charge of the poultry exhibit at the Belleville Fair added today that the finest quality birds in the history of the Fair were exhibited today.

BREMEN IS HELD AT NEW YORK

Special Examination of German Liver Holds up Clearance Papers

New York, Aug. 29—(AP)— The giant German liner Bremen, under orders to return immediately to Germany, was held at her pier by command of the UnUited States Treasury Department pending a thorough inspection.

The government's action, inaugurating a policy of minute search before issuance of clearance papers to ships of nations directly involved in the European crisis, surprised maritime circles. Clearing papers usually are granted after a perfunctory examination.

Asked what type of search now was contemplated, Gregory O'Keefe Assistant Collector of the port, said "a special examination covered by the law" seeking "armament and spies" as wel las contraband merchandise.

FAIR NOTES

It was Children's Day at the Belleville Fair Tuesday and a regiment of eager-eyed, freshly scrubbed juveniles of the city took possession of grounds and buildings on this their own particular day alletted to the youngsters from fair time immemorial. It was a surging, jostling throng which eddied and swirled in and out of the various exhibits, sample laden and happy, nickels and dimes burning in tiny fists crying to be spent on the oddments and fancies so dear to childish hearts. How many youngsters were entertained by the Fair Board during the day not even the most statistical minded member could hazard a guess. All they do know is that it was an accident, incident-free day of happy fun. A day replete with pleasant fatigue and tired little feet. A day which ended shortly after darkness for the majority who straggled home leaving behind t proverbial scatter of paper and empty cartons and bare lunch boxes strewn over the green grounds as if tossed by a playful cyclone. But not a flower in the beds was touched, caretakers of the Board were happy to relate.

It was a slightly different fair opening on Tuesday afternoon. Residents of the neighborhood of the grounds, and veterans who attend faithfully year after year remarked upon the absence of the time-honored boom of the miniature cannon which for many years has marked the official opening of the annual event. This year the cannon, loaned annually from the lawn of Hope McGinnis, West Bridge Street, was missing. Missing also was cannoneer Sergeant Jack Richens, who for many years has been entrusted task of filling the cannon with tightly packed gun powder and saluting the official opening with a sturdy roar. Perhaps even this incident can be attributed to present overseas tension.

"It was pitiful to see it" remarked the music-loving citizen extending his theme to explain the difficulty Belleville's own premier Municipal Band has had since fair opening to make its excellent concert music heard from the band stand above the competition of midway barkers, the rattle and swing of the carrousel and the bang of miniature automobiles, the grind of the Ferris wheel and the thump of drums from the sideshows, plus the quaking voices and polkas of the sound amplifying systems from building and adjacent grounds. "It must be discouraging to the musicians", sympathized the music-loving citizens as an after thought.

A small Scottie dog grumbling through his beard at the temporary annoyance of being lost meandered through the door of the poultry house last evening. He was spotted first by the white gander who snaked its neck toward the ground to strike the first note of a high tenor, then gradually extended its head in tune to a rattling crescendo of noise. Two Pekin ducks took up the cry and passed the word along to the pen of turkeys. With a shrill gobble the lordly turkeys discussed the presence of the enemy with shivering vehemence. By the time the common hens and roosters had joined the poultry house had become a pleasant bedlum of noise, pleasant that is to the critical ears of the fowl lover and those who understand birds. To the common visitor it was a noise best shut out by the common expedient of clapping hands over ears. "We don't like to have dogs in the poultry building", explained one attendant. "It upsets the routine".

"There are more and better birds exhibited at the Fair this year, more than have been put on show for the past several years." You can take the word of first vice-president, Jack Holley for that, or the word of Chas. Tebworth, who annually takes over the task of seeing to the welfore of the valuable fowl. But to even the most casual visitor, the need of more accommodation for the heavier fowl, the geese and turkeys and ducks is immediately apparent in the poultry building. This year accommodation is cramped. Many of the prize heavy fowl are caged in hen coops and cages, barely sufficient room to turn around, let alone show themselves to the best advantage.

It was Charles Tebworth who rescued the pliers from the corner of the grain box in the building, slid them back into a handy hip pocket. Then audibly informed of the work that had been performed by the nippers during the day. "Some of the hens got toothache. We had to pull some of their teeth before they got relief", he explained with a sly wink. "But that isn't the oddest question some of the visitors ask. Many really believe the hens have teeth, and wonder how they can eat the hard grain with the small teeth they must have", he added.

In a straw packed stall of the livestock pens Hank the bull, surveyed the changing scenes and the steady stream of visitors with a jaundiced eye. It was a weary, misanthropic look he gave the casual callers who hesitated at his pen, a look that conveyed a world of weariness at conditions as they appeared. Hank whose step was as springy as a kitten's in spite of his ton bulk and whose motions were almost gentle as he moved to the command of the trainer was in the sulks. It was explained. "He always gets the sulks the first day of the show, but after he is given a chance to go through his paces in the judging ring, he'll become almost amiable again", added the attendant.

"It was", confided the attendant of yet another stall further down, a stall occupied by sleek cattle of the Holstein breed "a racket, until we nipped it in the bud". The racket included one small boy with a pail, a new pail borrowed or filched from the home kitchen, a pail which made the rounds of the stalls at evening milking time on the arm of the boy who with quavering vice requested the gift of the rich foamy milk so plentifully evident. Milk it was suggested which would be taken home to help out a hungry family and thirsty babies. "But we found out the kid had visions of getting rich selling the milk to the concessionaires at cut rate prices", added the attendant, fully alive to the many tricks with which exhibitors must be acquainted.

It was hot during the afternoon Tuesday and in the sheep pens, the swine pens and through the lower section of the livestock buildings the animals were feeling the heavy discomfort. Sheep with heavy fleece panted and swayed with the exertion of keeping cool. Not even the northwest breeze which eddied around the corner of the building brought the needed relief while the sun beat down on the side of the pens. The swine, veterans possibly of the fall fair business accepted the discomfort with true fortitude. Burrowing deep under the loose straw, they covered themselves with only the tips of snouts protruding. "They insulate themselves for both heat and cold that way", declared the well known exhibitor. "Maybe that's a tip for humans".

A small combination harvester and thresher stood on the grounds. Around it a well tracked path had been beaten in the dusty grass. Farmers bent over this new acquisition to Ontario farm machinery speculating in the use of this complicated machine for the small farm. "They may be all right, but they can be improved", was the cautious utterance of one of their number. But to the farm wife the advent of the new combine means less work in the farm kitchen. The days of heavy meals at threshing time, and the weeks af baking preparation necessary to feed the extra hands may soon disappear. Small combines have appeared with their coming, the extra hands needed for the year's threshing may also have to find new work.

JAPAN IS SLAPPED TOO

Japan feels snubbed today, when Germany, her great arch-type, thought so little of her as to line up with Russia in a pact of non-aggression. No thoughts of anti-Comintern are in Germany's mind. Germany needed Russia.

Japan started the game, was the first to begin meddling with the League of Nations. She has been the cat's paw to engage the mind of the world while Germany armed for bluff or war. Japan gaily went into the Manchoukuo affair and did some typical German snatching. Then she went into the Chinese war and it drags along.

Japan has rebuffed her old friend Britain, as well as France and United States, and particularly scoffed at and reviled Britain, insulted private citizens and officials, all seemingly under the feeling that she stood alongside Germany and Italy, but particularly Germany. How could the Axis fail? But Japan did not realize one part of the axis could be obliterated, that Germany would have no use for her one day.

Now Japan stands as an outcast. She has cast herself out of the company of the law-abiding nations, and taken a membership in the dictatorship kind. One at least of these has shoved Nippon aside. Japan has done what she could to weaken Britain and France in the Orient. Now Germany needed some gesture, some power near at hand, far closer than Japan, to create a crisis which she possibly hoped would pry Britain and France away from Poland.

Japan must be feeling the smart of the diplomatic blow Germany gave her, more than British citizens felt the slap in the face by Japanese soldiers.

Japan isolated herself from the worthwhile nations, who could have led her into a world of progress along with China; she acted the little tyrant with United States, France and England, the only nations with enough wealth to spend any of it on her in bringing forward the culture and civilization of Japan.

But it is the same old story . The militarists have up to this week run Japan and they are the class who must take the snub Germany gave them. This is rough treatment of a nation which talked of heading all Asiatic civilization and running this largest part of the world. Now she must feel almost as degraded as the Germans have shown they thought her. Militarists are proud. What will the Japanese militarists do to avenge the insult?

Germany squeezed the sponge of Japan dry, got her to do work in China, by starting the iniquitous mess of conquering by force. Japan fell a willing dupe into the plan and when a new crisis looms, Japan is left far away with a gigantic war on her hands and not a friend on earth. She has no part in any contemplated world conquest, and she is out of the good graces of the democracies.

FAITH IN GREAT DEMOCRACIES

Democratic nations put their hope in the two great Allies, France and Britain. Perhaps it is best in the interests of democracy that Russia which is not yet a democracy and which really is a dictatorship like Germany should not be linked with democracies. Chamberlain and Daladier really would not look natural beside Joseph Stalin, who really is more in Hitler's line. So the democracies are really such as can stand out to the world and justly claim democratic principles are their guiding hopes.

Other democracies would count little or nothing if Britain and France should fail to preserve the world for equity and justice. The little democratic nations would be a poor match for an engulfing stream of dictatorship and suppression. These little democracies may in time if war should come, be in a position to aid France and Britain. If they today were able to lend all the aid possible, and democracy stood as a united force against Nazism, the fight if it should come would be briefer. The Nazis evidently plan taking nation after nation, one by one into their camp.

But democracy with all its weaknesses, its lack of united leadership through the world, its absence of united outlook towards some great event, is strong. Hitler scorns the democracies because they won't be dragooned, or because there is lack of regimentation and because democracy permits a liberty of expression of opinion. Democracy could never have a Hitler.

When a spot of neutral ground is found in heaven, or earth, or hell, then let neuters take their stand; real neuters are nothing and professed neuters on religious subjects, are always false and ruthless in reality.—Thomas Williams.

BELLEVILLE FAIR IS IN FULL SWING, 1939 Model, and Belleville folks and all who have to do with Belleville, have reason to be proud of the setting for this proud survival of the district fair. Opening of the Belleville Fair recalls to memory the genii of the Bigger and Better Belleville Fair, the man with the vision that could see bigger and better things for Belleville if the natural advantages of this city were handled in a big way, the late lamented but ever beloved Tom (T.P.J.) Power, the type of citizen typified with the verse: It's all very well to look pleasant when life flows by like a song, but the man worth while is the man with a smile when everything goes dead wrong —and Tom Power was never without that famous heart warming smile whether life flowed by like a song or everything was inclined to go dead wrong. Tom Power, a pleasant memory, and an influence for good which will never die.

LEPKE, PUBLIC ENEMY NO. ONE, with a price of fifty thousand dollars on his head, surrendered to a newspaperman, Walter Winchell, of radio, screen, and column, who turned him over to J. Edgar Hoover, head G.Man of the United States. Why the wherefore is still puzzling the press and politicians, although it is known that there was a rivalry as to who should capture the No. 1 Bad Man worth $50,000 to the Law. How and why Winchell got into the picture is one of those mysteries which only Winchell can explain. In the meantime the New York press is not commenting on the matter, except to reiterate that the reward of $50,000 will not have to be paid. Perhaps W. W. will have something to say about that. Perhaps Lepke wants the reward himself for cigarette money while in the Tombs. Tom Dewey, who convicted Jimmy Hines, big Tammany sachem, was anxious to capture Lepke to add to his ammunition as a presidential candidate next year, and the Federal authorities thought it would be a good idea to deprive him of that privilege by taking charge of Lepke themselves—and so politics enters largely into even the capture of him who has been labelled "Public Enemy No. 1" with $50,000 public money on his head, the subject of a nation-wide search while he was hiding in little old New York all the time.

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF. Napoleon, came from nowhere, climbed high, and fell far and heavily. Napoleon was revered as a god and lived to be reviled as a bum and a devil. Napoleon sat in the Seats of the Mighty, but died in a drafty, dirty prison barrack in the loneliest spot in the world, perhaps, the isle of St. Helena.

KIPLING'S "LADY OF THE SNOWS" STILL CONTINUES TO PLAGUE CANADA, a figment of the poet's brain which expanded into a wraith that branded Canada as a land of eternal snows. Those who imagined that the Kipling ghost had been laid will be shocked to learn that a lady who flew from Brazil to Ontario recently expected to find Canada covered with snow. A press despatch from Kingston relates that the wife of the President of Brazil, Mrs. Getulto Vargas, alighted from a plane there expecting to find a blanket of snow, and was surprised to find a climate as agreeable as that of Brazil and every evidence of a civilization equal, at least, to that of her homeland. Mrs. Vargas came 5,000 miles in 4½ days, leaving Brazil on receipt of the news that her daughter, on her honeymoon, had been injured in an automobile accident and taken to Kingston hospital. She brought her warm clothing, fur coat and everything, another case of being Kiplinized with "Our Lady of the Snows."

TIME WILL TELL

A fine old veteran well on in his eighties was told that a friend of his, aged seventy-five, had said that a man was at his best in the seventies; quite a respectable sentiment, too, one would have thought.

But the octogenarian would have none of it.

"He'll know better when he grows up," was his comment.

A remembrance of other days is recalled by the announcement that the steamer Caspian, which for three years has been lying on the mud in Picton harbor, has been pumped out, raised and towed to Montreal, where it is said that the hull will be reconstructed and utilized in some way. Should Insulin or Metrazol Shock Be Given to Mental Patients?

One of the encouraging signs amid the nervousness and unrest of our times is to see the increasing number of patients entering mental hospitals of their own free will. The usual method by which a patient enters is upon the certificate of two physicians who have examined him independently. And usually it was greatly against the will or desire of the patient himself. But, just as we go to a heart specialist or to a throat specialist for heart or throat conditions, now it is becoming almost natural for many with fears, obsessions, delusions, depressions or other nervous symptoms to go first to the psychiatrist (behaviour specialist) or to the mental institution where these symptoms are investigated, their cause found and very often corrected.

However, just as patients with rheumatism, heart disease, asthma, or other ailment sometimes fail to get relief in hospital, so also are there mental patients who do not get rid of their symptoms—fears, timidity, obsessions, delusions—despite careful investigation and treatment in these mental hospitals. It is in these slow or chronic cases that the insulin shock and metrazol treatment often gives good results, although it is in the short or more recent cases that brilliant results are obtained. Recently the use of metrazol in the treatment of cases of deep depression and melancholy has given excellent results.

Perhaps you have a loved one, who recognizing his "peculiarities", has willingly entered a mental hospital to obtain relief. You may wonder whether or not you should allow this loved one to undergo the convulsions or fits caused by the insulin or metrazol treatment.

You should talk it over with your family physician who, in consultation with the mental hospital physicians, will tell you what is best to do.

It must be admitted that a great many patients entering mental hospials have been cured before the use of insulin and metrazol was known. That is, a number are bound to get better anyway. But when the symptoms remain stationary or are becoming worse, the patient is entitled to this chance of recovery as provided by this new treatment.

2 TORONTONIANS

Motorcycle Patrolmen Sam Ervine, Belleville and H. Jillings, Napanee and Coroner Dr. G. H. Galbraith, Napanee, investigated the accident and found that a motor car containing the five persons mentioned above was proceeding easterly, when it is believed the left front tire blew out. The vehicle swerved suddenly to the left and sideswiped a west bound motor car driven by William Onderwood, of Oscawana, N.Y., who subsequently proved the hero in saving three persons from a burning death.

After sideswiping Mr. Onderwood's car the Toronto vehicle proceeded 300 yards along the north shoulder before it toppled into the ditch and crashed headon into a large tree, where it immediately burst into flames.

Mr. Keeler and Mr. McMillan were apparently riding in the front seat and were thrown completely clear of the wreckage and instantly killed. Mr. Onderwood succeeded in stopping his car quickly and ran to assist. Although the Toronto owned car was nothing short of a burning inferno, Mr. Onderwood was successful in extricating the two women and Major McDonald from the burning vehicle at the risk of his own life. Later another passing motorist hastened into Deseronto for medical aid and Mr. Onderwood rendered what assistance he could with light of the burning car to assist him.

A small Sky Terrier in the Toronto-owned vehicle was burned to death. The motor car to crash the tree was completely wrecked, while Mr. Onderwood's car was not seriously damaged after being sideswiped. "It was the worst wreck we've had in this district along Highway No. 2 in some years," added Motorcycle Patrolman Sam Ervine today. The matter of an inquest lies in the hands of Crown Attorney K. Ham of Napanee.

The Toronto car loaded with five was enroute to Prescott where the occupants were to visit relatives.

SCIENCE COMBATS FOES OF FORESTS

Entomological Exhibit Shows Progress of War Against Insects

Deadly enemies of Canada's forests and farms, their ravages in the timberlands, orchards and grainfields of the country, and results of scientific study of parasites and possible means of checking or eliminating them entirely are shown in a highly informative exhibit given in the Manufacturers' Building at the Fair Grounds by the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa and its Entomological Branch, situated here in Belleville.

The display is exhibited in a handsome setting. Behind the Entomological display are a series of large pictures that illustrate the many activities of this important branch of the department. Included are Maple trees being defoliated by the cankerworm; orchard spraying; a handsome photograph of the Entomological Laboratory; potato Dusting and trees being stripped by tent caterpillars.

Highly interesting to children and grownups alike yesterday were the actual demonstrations under glass of a number of parasites and crop enemies at their work. Here can be seen the tent caterpillar feeding on leaves, potato worms, white grubs, wire-worms and garden slugs feeding on tubers and June bugs feeding on Elm leaves.

In a small glass container can be seen the dreaded European sprucesawfly at its nefarious work. Various kinds of grasshoppers and mealy bugs, the latter the pest of greenhouse owners are also shown.

Codling moths, tussock moths, redbugs, rosy apple aphids are exhibited under glass eating their way through choice apples while nearby are shown pea-weevils, asparagus beetles and other insects that annually ruin agricultural crops.

An appeal to farmers to use nothing but certified seed in all grains and roots is the theme of the Department display. Here the control measures for grains, against blight and other diseases, in which is advocated rotation, storage, sanitation and seed treatment, are shown.

Grains untreated and treated for rust and blight are on display. Bacterial blight in beans, peas and other crops is shown.

The ravages on potato crops are also shown. Diseased tubers are exhibited with remedial measures advocated. Recommended varieties for this district are the Irish Cobbler, Green Mountain and the Kalahdin.

The display is highly educational and attractive in its exhibit. It was visited by hundreds of farmers yesterday with courteous attendants explaining and answering any questions that arise from time to time.

YOUNG ROYALTY IN A CORNFIELD

Prince Edward and Princess Alexandra, children of the Duke and Duchess of Kent, are shown resting amid the newly-mown grain in a cornfield at St. Margaret's Bay, Kent, where they are vacationing.

POLAND

Well-informed circles said the number of new men called would be "smaller than the total already mobilized." Observers expressed belief today's call would bring up an additional 500,000 men.

Polish officials announced last night Poland had replied favorably to the offer of Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands and King Leopold of the Belgians to use their good offices toward mediation of the crisis growing out of German demands for Danzig and the Polish Corridor.

Text Not Public

The foreign office did not make public the text of the reply to the two sovereigns. But Polish officials said it pointed out the Polish government had agreed "in principle" to mediation as a means of settling disputes between nations in President Ignace Moscicki's reply to President Roosevelt's peace appeal.

Queen Wilhelmina and King Leopold were informed the Polish government cannot, however, enter into further discussions of details of any proposed mediation, because such proposals in the past have met with no response from Germany.

Tension Increased

Concentration of German troops in Slovakia against Poland's southern frontier was said here to have increased the tension between Poland and Germany.

Prime Minister Chamberlain's address to the British House of Commons yesterday was described by a foreign office spokesman as "proof that Britain, like Poland and France, is ready to settle all disputes peacefully, but that all these states are firmly decided to remove the danger of future acquisitions."

Million Under Arms

Poland was estimated to have more than 1,000,000 men under arms, ready to defend her independence against any "lightning" attack, but responsible officials denied immediate general mobilization was contemplated.

A general mobilization, because of Poland's tremendous reserve of young men, could place more than 4,000,000 in the field.

Exact extent of the present partial mobilization is not known, but the number of men under arms is estimated variously from 1,300,000 to 2,000,000.

It was announced officially the Polish government had protested to the Slovak government against alleged appeals of Slovak authorities to the Slovak public to greet the German army as one coming to defend Slovakia against the "Polish menace."

Can Have War

The newspaper Express Poranny said editorially: "Hitler should say 'let us come to an understanding in which all our interests would be respected," but instead he threatens the world with war. If he wants war, we can only assure him that he will find himself involved in a real war."

The Kupjer Poranny, Polish government mouthpiece, reminded its readers that "Poland herself will decide when, on account of direct or indirect aggression, her independence is threatened in a manner which would compel Poland to defend herself."

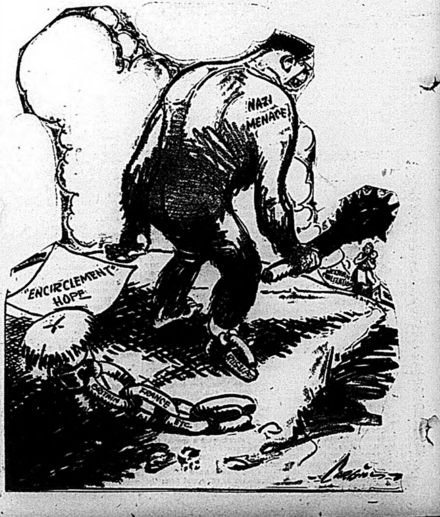
"Britain and France," continued this newspaper, "then automatically will assist Poland."

Confiscate All Timber

The newspaper Polska Zborjna, Polish army organ, charged that the Danzig Senate had confiscated all timber stored in Danzig by Poland. The timber is valued at 5,000,000 Zlotty (about $1,000,000).

Newspapers advocated that all civilians not needed in large Polish cities and possible military areas should evacuate. Women and children especially were urged to move to country places. Large quantities of gas masks, selling for about 80 cents apiece, are on the market.

THE MISSING LINK



BRILLIANT

Buildings

The Exhibition buildings, resplendant with the efforts of merchants, manufacturer, farmer and government expert, not to mention the ladies, both rural and urban, the city gardener and the rural speccialist, proved the mecca for a transient throng that beamed alternately with pleasure and pride.

But its activities were not confined to the exhibits alone. With the splendid music of the Belleville Municipal Band providing a tonic for tired mentalities when the frst thrills of the exhibition were over, in the afternoon, and with this musical organization paving the way for the performances at the grandstand, John Public, turned to entertainment to round out a perfect day at the Fair.

And there was plenty of divertisement for young and old. On the colorful dais in front of the grandstand, a performance that is the zenith of artistic entertainment and entertainers was provided both afternoon and evening.

The Midway

The pulsing, surging midway, without which no fair is complete, again teemed with crowds of the curious, the thrill-seekers and those who love mystery, chance and the nerve-tingling thrills of swiftly moving "rides."

There is a distinctly different variety in the Midway this year. There is satisfaction for the most yearning Fair appetite. Concessions, that cater to the hungry are at every hand. Rides, from the at times raucous music of the steam-organ of the ever-popular merry-go-round to the whirling, twirling, dashing fling of aerial machines. There are miniature auto rides for the kiddies and the grownups. There is a whip, and a what-not.

Barkers on every hand roar out the particular capabilities of their various performers who stage their acts behind the mystery of gaily-painted tents. You can get souvenirs of every description (for a nickle). In fact there is everything the colorful, the mysterious, the humorous, the sincere, that was born in the circus and which still, and will forever appeal to the human being no matter where he or she may be. It is a grand show, and fully lives up to the consensus of opinion passed by the majority of those who attended yesterday, that this year's Fair is bigger and better than ever.

Today Another Day

Today is another day and a gala one in the history of the exhibition. Tonight following the performance at the grandstand there will be given away an automobile. This afternoon, even as you read this, spirited standard-bred horses, the cream of pacing and trotting kings and queens of the turf, will be vieing for track honors.

In another tent, gurgling boys and girls, held in the arms of proud parents will be judged to find out Hastings County's best baby. There are new and different novelties each day, besides the standard attractions, ones that will warrant the large crowd that will, in all likelihood, attend this second day of the fair.

The Grandstand Show

Belleville Municipal Band under the direction of Lieut. Fred Jobson, in a brief program opened the grandstand performance and this smart musical unit received once more the sincere praise and appreciation of the citizens who are indeed proud of their attainments and reputation.

Presenting one of the finest programs visiting Belleville Fair in recent seasons, the performance before the grandstand yesterday afternoon and evening was a splendidly balanced entertainment that reached a high standard introducing as it did artists who have attained a wide reputation in their field. Planned to capture the interest of young and old the presentation included such diversified acts as aerial feats, balancing numbers, tight rope walkers, performing dogs, dancing revue, and a talented girl singer which with a musical background ,supplied by a smooth seven piece band combined to give the Belleville public a stage performance that was received with enthusiastic acclaim by the audience.

Receptive Audience

Naturally the afternoon visitor on Children's Day proved a most receptive audience and the gasps that greeted the sensational acts, the noisy applause and the genuine delight of the little ones as each number appeared was stimulating to the performers.

With Mr. Bill Garden of the Canadian Vaudeville Exchange as master of ceremonies the performance was finished and swift-moving without pauses.

The performance which took place before a beautifully arranged setting on which changing lights played to make a background of blending color tones opened in modern tempo with the Marquisettes in a swing dance number, followed by Rosaleen Dawn, the featured singer whose attractive voice contributed to the success of the revue program.

King of Swing Wire

Bernardo, king of the swing wire provided a sensational act on the Spanish wire that showed his title was well and truly earned. The Marquisettes were seen in another dance, an amusing "Esquire" drill. Adding variety throughout the evening these graceful talented dancers presented a French number in "partner" costumes, a Russian ballet and other well-rendered routines which brought to the microphone the delightful young singer.

Venetian Troubadors

The Venetian Troubadors introduced a musical novelty climaxed by a fine imitation of the bag pipes. Fifi the Clown and Pat McIntosh, the show's comedian, carried the comedy part of the presentation in fine style.

A troupe of performing dogs, the Hughes Show, revealed the artistry of highly intelligent, well trained dogs, the most outstanding number of which saw a dog walk the high wire blindfolded.

The Siegrist, aerial gymnastic family extraordinary, formerly featured with Ringling Bros., held the audience spell bound with their act. Blindfolded, with a sack over his head, one member dived from his perch to the hands of his catcher and back, a difficult feat, perfectly performed.

Tight Wire Artists

The Avalons, tight wire artists, danced, skipped and balanced atop each other, as easily as though they were on the ground, one member jumping in mid air over a series of camp chairs to alight again on the tight wire.

The Merrill Brothers and Sister, billed as the world's greatest equilibrists gave a wonderful performance. One man skipped a rope with his hands one of the most difficult feats known in this type of work.

Los Gitanos on the high perch performed incredible feats, one partner balancing the perch while the other accomplished seemingly impossible acrobatics, sometimes supported only by one hand.

Teeter Artists Applauded

The Romanoffs, Russian teeter artists brought the splendid performance to a close and Miss Olga, the thirteen year old marvel completed three somersaults in the air landing on the apparatus held on the shoulder of her partners.

Merchants and Manufacturers

Any doubt that may have lurked in the minds of sceptics that the merchants of this city and district are not abreast of the times insofar as the quality and ability to display to the fullest the merchandise for the quality of which they are justly famous, would have been rudely dispelled yesterday had they taken time to visit the Merchants and Manufacturers Buildings that are now displaying the offerings of those business men of the city in an exhibition that reflects the last word in offerings for the home, around the home and in the home.

In a decorative blaze of glory, these enterprising representatives of the shops, stores, factories and display salons, have brought out to the full the many splendid features and salient characteristics of their produce that even the most rabid sceptic must admit is a piece of colorful art.

Enhanced by Articles

The entire decorative scheme is enhanced by the beauty of the articles on display. Gleaming articles of furniture among which is the ever-present radio, washing machine and other members of the family home circle, together with many other boons to the housewife stand out in a display that is as interesting as it is beautiful.

And appreciation of the efforts of the merchants and manufacturers of the city in bringing to the public eye all the beauty and simplicity that is embodied in the various products on display, was exemplified in the laudatory comments heard on all sides yesterday afternoon and evening as a large appreciative throng took advantage of the opportunity to view first-hand the many handsome articles now being provided for them by their own business men.

Manufacturers' Building

Entering this building one is at once struck with a variable dash of color that greets one from three sides. The first thing that strikes the eye is the colorful demonstration of handiwork done by the children of Belleville's Playgrounds. Here a group of young people proudly exhibit some splendid specimens of fancy flower containers, woodwork, wood cuts of pet animals, trays, picture frames and many simple yet pretty pieces of bric-a-brac executed by the children under the eyes of competent instructors.

Not only do the Wensley Hatcheries display the many forms of feed and special mixtures for the successful raising of chickens but in a series of pens they display "Biddy" herself in various stages of growth. From the peeping chick you will see the various ages of the chicken and the effect good feeds have upon its development and growth.

Also are shown special feeds for the fox, mink, turkey, pigs and hogs, calves, horses and many other animals and birds.

Colorful in the extreme in a fancy decorative setting is the display of the Walker Hardware Store. Here are shown to the best advantage those paints and varnishes that are a boon to the housewife in the dreaded season of Spring-cleaning. All sorts of lacquers, paint-brushes and other clean-up utensils are on display while setting off the entire exhibit is a kitchen chair that has just passed through the hands of the decorators.

Gas ranges and the use of this cooking utility in the household is ably demonstrated in a tasteful exhibit of the Community Gas Company.

Up-to-date Equipment

With the colorful tints of yellow and blue decorations providing a perfect setting for an outstanding exhibit, the Stewart-Warner Alemite display is one of the most variable in the building. Gleaming refrigerators, pure white, vie for popularity with the up-to-date models of radio. Here one can see receivers from the attractive mantel model scarcely bigger than a small box to the stately chassis of the more expensive models. In other sections of the exhibit are to be seen the pulleys, wheels, with the new "Kid-Kar Model outstanding, the famous "Bassick" castors; and the various lubrication articles for which this firm is famous.

Just as colorful is the attractive display of J. B. Boyce, whose handsome exhibit brings out to the full the products of Sunoco, and General Motors accessories. Tires form a prominent part in this display, as does a fine exhibit of garage tools.

The Corbin Lock Company products are shown to fine advantage in a small but attractive exhibit. Here gleaming bronze and brass locks, door-handles, knobs in all models and practically every phase of hardware used in the home and factory are on display.

Merchants' Building

Equally as attractive as the exhibits in the Manufacturers' Building are those in the Merchants' Building where another colorful display is on exhibition.

A beautiful furniture exhibit is shown by the Farrar Furniture Company of Trenton in which is shown a completely furnished breakfast room. Softly shaded lights bring out to the full the beauty and uses of this fine exhibit.

Stoves, radios and other home accessories add to the general attractiveness.

The Hitchon Radio Service that feature the General Electric Radios is another bright display, with a number of models catching the eye of an admiring public. Next is the Singer Sewing Machine booth in which is featured many models of this boon of the housewife who likes to make her own clothes. Demonstration of what can be done is shown in a model dressed in apparel made on the machines shown.

The Home Appliance Store exhibit shows late models of radios, refrigerators and other home accessories in a pretty setting of orange and black.

Arthur Sills' exhibit of roofings, in various designs and colors, slating, insulation, house-siding in attractive patterns, and flooring in novel but pretty shades is one of the prettier exhibits on display.

Bishops' Seed Store shows many kinds of grain and flower seeds besides an attractive display of grains and feeds.

Refrigerators

Featuring the popular Westinghouse brand of refrigerators and radios is the attractive display of the John Lewis Hardware Company. Here, too are the gleaming models of modern washing machines, heaters, stoves and other useful home articles. In a corner gleams a fireplace red with the glow of electric flames.

The familiar black and white decorations of the Hydro Commission drew an enthusiastic crowd yesterday with one of the more outstanding displays of the building. Every electrical appliance made was on exhibit here, in a display that was enhanced by the colorful additions of beautiful gladioli. In a corner was a completely furnished room, with all electrical appliances that go to make the home comfortable. A chesterfield suite looked inviting under the soft lights of electric fixtures, while a radio and an electric fire place added to the general cosiness of the room.

Handsome Display

The Bowra Electric, too had a handsome display with all the features, that make this prominent firm one of the best known in this district, on display. Radios predominated, with other colorful attractive exhibits rounding out a display that was second to none in the building.

The Beatty Company lacked none of the attractiveness or beauty in their exhibit. "The name that made the washing-machine famous" is here in all its decorative glory with an exhibit that fully justifies the faith placed in the company by a large clientele. Gleaming white washing-machines and their appliances that have made this firm's name a household one are on display.

UNRUFFLED CALM

Here is the type of news that is filling the columns of British newspapers these days:

Announcement that 250,000 women have joined the voluntary wartime services since the beginning of 1939.

Report that theatres and movies would shut down in the event of war but would be likely to reopen later.

Home office order for partial manning of the air raid precautions report stations in danger zones to which information of bombing would be brought.

The classified advertising sections of newspapers under the heading A.R.P. (air raid precautions) are carrying scores of notices of country houses for rent.

The strength of Great Britain and the completeness of her preparations for any eventuality was the theme of several of today's editorials.

Preparations Complete

The Daily Herald (Labor) warned "our preparations for war — if we are forced by an attack upon Poland to go to war—are complete and they are of such a nature and backed up by such resources as make any nation to pause before challenging them."

The Daily Mail (Independent) spoke of "Britain's formidable power" asserting "we are as prepared as any nation can be for defence or attack—and behind the front lines are illimitable resources of a great nation and a world-wide empire."

The Daily Express (Ind.) listed Britain's assets thus: "The greatest navy in the world, a mighty air force and a powerful army," and declared "the forces which would be opposed to aggression are overwhelmingly strong. War is not yet inevitable. If it should come the final issue will not be in doubt."

The Daily Telegraph (Conservative) warned editorially that while Great Britain stood ready to support a peaceful settlement of the German-Polish dispute, it would not relax the pace of its preparations to aid its allies in a possible war."

LIVESTOCK BEST SEEN IN YEARS

Every Class Represented at Belleville Fair for Patrons of Same

It has often been said that the livestock exhibit at Belleville Fair was equal to any of the larger fairs about the Province and proof of this can be obtained if one will walk the length of the fair grounds and view the fine range of cattle, horses, sheep and swine on the grounds. The barns are full, the tents obtained to house the surplus exhibits are full and the Directors in a last minute rush t oaccommodate the exhibitors erected snow fences and the swine were placed in these pens. Due to warm weather sheep should have plenty of room but there are incidents, where there are eight and nine sheep in a pen, that ordinarily should hold four at the outside.

Not only are the exhibits of large proportions but the class of stock, especially in the horse classes is superior to anything shown in this city in years. This is not the opinion of the reporter, who visited the grounds on Tuesday but the opinion of experienced farmers and dairymen, who have made a round of the grounds. In the horse classes especially in the Belgians, there is a wonderful exhibit, including horses owned by Arthur Wright of Picton and W. J. Holsgrove of Collins Bay. A team of Belgian mares will certainly appeal to the lovers of good horseflesh, while stallions of various ages will compete in the prize ring. There are more than 20 0horses quartered on the grounds, including the light carriage type to the heaviest draft.

Many Swine at Show

Jim Grabutt, whose father was one of the founders of the Belleville Fair, and who specializes in pigs and sheep has a large exhibit on the grounds and one of his swine weighs 812 pounds, a really hefty figure. There are more than 150 sheep on the grounds and the same number of swine. Other exhibitors in these classes are Ralph Young of Castor Centre, D. M. Stewart of Osgoode, Wilfred Kitson of Little Britain and A. Ayre and Sons of Hampton.

In the cattle section there are fourteen herds on the grounds besides the colts and calves of the Junior Boys' Calf and Foal clubs. There are three Ayrshire herds owned by F. M. Rutherford of Bonarlaw, Elmer Wood of Ivanhoe and T. J. Creighton of Bath, two shorthorn herds owned by George Thompson and Ben Bleecker of Holloway, three Jersey herds, George Jarrell of Corbyville, Garnet Kerr of Campbellford and A. E. Hubble of Havelock.

There are two herds of Pole Angus owned by Arnold McKinnon and Son of Bobcaygeon, while there is a herd of Beef cattle exhibited by Charlton Craig. The Holsteins are the prominent breed of this district and a fine lot of cattle are exhibited, Earl Bonter of Carrying Place, Craig Nelson of Campbellford and others have large herds and the competition is expected to be very keen in this class. The judging in all classes will commence today.

Marie Wilson and Johnnie Davis, playing the leads in the turf comedy, "Sweepstakes Winner," now playing with a second feature, "Bulldog Drummond's Bride" starring Heather Angel at the Capitol Theatre.

Be careful with funds neither borrowing nor lending, and take precaution against fraud, trickery and duplicity.

Those whose birthday it is may anticipate a year of opportunity and new enterprise; there is a prospect of change, travel or removal. New matters are uppermost. Use extra precaution with money, which may be subject to fraud, scheming and treachery. Shun quarrels that might involve legal entanglements.

A child born on this day may be energetic, inventive, original and fond of change. It may have a unique talent in such directions gaining by the underhanded plots of others.

13th Annual Flower Show Held By Tweed Horticultural Society

Tweed—The thirteenth annual Flower Show of Tweed Horticultural Society was held on Friday, August 25th at Tweed Memorial Park Pavilion. The show was well up to the standard attained in previous years, both as to the quality of bloom and the number of entries.

Flower lovers of Tweed are rapidly becoming "gladiolus-conscious" and this "king of the floral kingdom" is rapidly establishing itself locally as the most admired and best loved of all the flowers. Three large tables were required to accommodate exhibits in this class. Once again Picardy proved its right to claim the place of distinction, being pronounced by the judge, Mr. C. W. Palliser of Campbellford as the best gladiolus in the show. Mrs. Harry Coulter was the exhibitor. Mrs. Charles R. Porritt was the winner of the highest honors with three fine spikes of Marmora and three of Picardy in the mauve and salmon classes.

Mrs. A. C. Blakely was once again declared sweepstakes winner with seventy-two points made up of sixteen firsts, seven seconds and eight thirds. Miss Cosey Meiklejohn was a very close second with fifteen first, eight seconds and five thirds for sixty-six points.

An interesting point in connection with the exhibition was the fact that every one of the sixteen exhibitors won at least one prize.

The judge, Mr. Pallises was assisted by Mrs. Palliser and Mr. T. E. Moffat as clerk. General satisfaction was expressed with his placings.

A most successful tea was held in conjunction with the Flower Show and the directors were greatly encouraged with the response of the general public. The receipts were approximately forty dollars.

EVACUATION

Daladier was reported ready to order general mobilization, depending on terms of Hitler's note to London.

General Maxime Weygand, former Chief of the Army General Staff, was en route to Syria, charged with an important diplomatic mission which aroused considerable curiosity.

It was Weygand, who as head of the French mission to Poland in 1920, aided that country to stave off the Russian offensive.

The general exercises much influence in Syria, where he was once French High Commissioner. He recently returned from Ankara, where he negotiated the military side of the Franco-Turkish mutual assistance pact.

Paul-Emile Naggiar, French Ambassador to Russia, following his return from Moscow, intended to report to Foreign Minister Georges Bonnet today. The Ambassador had several talks with Russian leaders after Germany and Russia signed a non-aggression pact.

Settle by Negotiation

Anglo-French acceptance of the joint mediation offer by King Leopold of the Belgians and Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands was hailed by leaders as another proof of willingness to settle all disputes by negotiation.

The Conservative newspaper Le Figaro declared: "What is not supportable in this situation is peace by blackmail."

French newspapers, operating under censorship, as were all communications, appeared with large white gaps of deleted type, all had only six pages each, to conserve newsprint.

Requisitioning of trucks and taxis left subways to carry most of the capital's traffic. Horse-drawn vehicles replaced trucks at many markets, but the handling of supplies was regular enough.

Cardinals Playing Poor Ball Since Starting Eastern Swing And Reds Appear To Be 'In'

Beaten Tuesday for Eighth Time in Ten Starts in East

YANKEES LOSE

Pick up Five-run Deficit but Tigers Come on to Take Contest

(By Sid Feder Associated Press Sports Writer).

It begins to look now as though the National League leading Cincinnati Reds, while playing less than .500 ball themselves, have little to worry over in St. Louis Cardinals team that shaped up as a hot pennant contender but 10 days ago.

The Cardinals were handed a 2-1 setback by Boston Bees yesterday, their second in three starts against Casey Stengel's stingers and their eighth in 10 outings in the east since they swept a series from the Reds. Richard Merriwell Errickson knocked the Cards off with eight hits in his first start since June 28.

This loss not only left the Cards 5 1-2 games back of the Reds, but pushed them to where they're only two games in front of the third place Cubs. The Reds and Cubs, and every other National League club, were given a day off by old man weather.

In the American League, New York Yankees lost and the Boston Red Sox won, leaving the Yanks only 12 games in front, but the cut in their lead wasn't the outstanding feature of the day. That was reserved for a daffy ninth inning which saw Detroit Tigers blow a five-run lead and come right back to take the game from the world champions 7-6.

Blew Five-Run Lead

Going into the ninth, Buck Newsom and the Detroits were riding along on a 6-1 edge. Then the roof fell in. Six hits, including Joe DiMaggio's game-tying three-run homer, wiped out the entire Tiger edge and left the boys just where they started. But, with Fireman Johnny Murphy doing the tossing in the last of the ninth, Charley Gehringer and Pinky Higgins each treated himself to a double to push the winner across.

The Red Sox had to call on Ted Williams to turn the trick for them against Cleveland Indians 7-4. Wilfrid Lefevbre and Harry Eisenstat were tied up in a scoreless flinging dual going into the fifth. Then Eisenstat loaded the bases. Ted promptly belted a homer with "standing room only" on the bags. There were no other games scheduled in the American League.

CORNWALL HOLDS LEAD

(By The Canadian Press)

With the playing dates flying off the Canadian-American Baseball League's waning schedule, it begins to appear certain that the fourth and final playoff berth will be decided on the second-to-last day of the regular season when Cornwall Bisons meet Ogdensburg Colts in a doubleheader.

Cornwall, with a game and a half lead today for the berth, has held much the same margin over Ogdensburg for the past two weeks. Both have won and lost fairly simultaneously and the twin-bill on Sept. 3 is their only scheduled meeting in the last three weeks of the season.

SEVEN CANADIANS IN U. S. AMATEUR

Phil Farley of Toronto Shoots Two Sub-par Rounds of 71

New York, Aug. 30 (CP)—Sectional qualifying rounds, the entering wedge for all except 10 players, left Canada today with a strong, seven-man challenge in the United States amateur golf championship at Chicago's North Shore Club, Sept. 11-16.

The original entry list of 831 was whittled down to 171 actual starters in yesterday's qualifying tests throughout the country that saw Phil Farley of Toronto take the medal honors at Buffalo.

Farley led the Canadian contingent by shooting two sub-par 71's at the Buffalo Country Club. Back of him, to gain qualifying spots, came Eddie Sams of Fort Erie, Ont., with 72-78—150; Merlin Luther of Fort Erie, Ont., 76-75—151; Bud Donovan of Toronto, 78-73—151; and Howard Jones of Burlington, Ont., with 77-76—153.

Little Joe Thompson of Hamilton, Ont., who has been a qualifier in other years, gained a spot with a score of 78-77—155 at Mamaroneck, N.Y.

C. Ross (Sandy) Somerville of London, winner of the 1932 tourney qualified automatically as did nine other former champions or champions in their own country.

While scores generally ran high—150 was good enough to qualify almost anywhere and 154 led in two districts.

JERSEY GIANTS' MANAGER GIVEN BOOST IN SALARY

Bert Niehoff Makes Good as First Year Pilot of Squad

LEAFS WIN AGAIN

Pezzullo Allows Only Nine Hits in Defeating Wings 4 to 1

(By The Associated Press)

Jersey City Giants may not win this year's International League pennant, but the club management realizes that if they fail to hold their lead, it won't be the fault of their manager Bert Niehoff.

In his first year as pilot, Niehoff has had the Little Giants who finished no better than seventh last season, at the top of the pack most of the campaign. At present, they boast a three-game advantage over the second-place Rochester Red Wings.

Last night, the Little Giants, al- offered Niehoff a 1940 contract at increased salary. The amount was not disclosed.

Last inght, the Little Giants, although idle, gained another half game on the pursuing Red Wings. Rain washed out the scheduled meeting with Newark Bears, while the Wings went down to a 4-1 defeat before Toronto Maple Leafs.

Only Nine Hits

Johnny Pezzullo went the distance for Toronto, giving up nine hits. He had a shutout until the ninth, when Marion's single, Narron's pinch double and Kurowski's long sacrifice pushed across Rochester's only tally.

The Leafs scored all their runs in the first two innings on four hits and a pair of errors at the expense of Johnny Grodzicki, Rochester starter. Preacher Roe took over in the third and held Leafs to one hit for five innings before being removed for a pinch hitter. Herschel Lyons finished and allowed three more safe blows.

The loss dropped the Wings to within one game of third-place Syracuse, which defeated Baltimore, 5-3, for a clean sweep of its three-game series.

Buffalo Bisons made it two straight over Montreal Royals with a 16-hit attack for a 13-4 victory. Earl Cook, who did the hurling for Buffalo, held the opposition to six hits for his seventh win of the year. Homers by Doc Richmond, Jimmy Webb and Joe Martin contributed to Montreal's downfall.

'DREAM' TEAMS MEET TONIGHT

College All-Stars and New York Giants Tee Off at Soldiers Field

Chicago, Aug. 30 (AP)—Two football "dream" teams meet in Soldier Field tonight before 82,000 spectators.

The lure for the sellout crowd in the massive lakefront stadium is the sixth annual charity battle between the college all-stars and New York Giants, professional champions.

The starting lineup for the all-stars, chosen by the fans in a 10,916,366-vote contest, will be introduced in a pre-game ceremony, but some of them will see little service in the game.

Marshall Goldberg, the Pitt star, and Earl Brown, Notre Dame's great end, are two who are in shape to play and are likely to be jerked immediately after the opening kickoff.

But many of college football's other "name" players of 1938 — Davey O'Brien, Sid Luckman of Columbia, Johnny Pingel of Michigan State, Bill Osma Ski, Holy Cross, Ki Aldrich, T.C.U.,—are in prime condition to match the pros.

BELLEVILLE DOG C. N. E. WINNER

Howard Welch's Chesapeake Wins Middleweight Class Handily

Howard Welch's Belleville-owned Chesapeake dog, Brownie, won the middleweight class of the annual dog swimming derby staged in connection with the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto yesterday and thereby qualified for the grand challenge championship of the entire C.N.E. dog derby. Brownie won the grand challenge championship in 1938.

Brownie had little trouble in winning the middleweight class yesterday. The golden-brown colored Chesapeake swam the course distance, a quarter-of-a-mile in 7 minutes, 13 4-5 seconds to beat a fast moving sponiel owned in Oshawa.

HORSE RACING TO BE SPIRITED

Wilmer Hillock of Picton Arrives on Scene with Lastic Gratton

Wilmer Hillock, of Picton, with his crack pacer Lastic Grattan, arrived at the Belleville Fair Grounds direct from the Ottawa Fair yesterday with his complete stable of harness horses to race both today and tomorrow. Hillock will doubtless start his crack pacer, Lastic Grattan in the free-for-all on Thursday while Al Grattan, a colt may be raced for the first time on a Belleville track in the 2.27 class.

Several other well known Ontario racing stables have taken up quarters at the Fair Grounds with their owners starting the cream of their horses in hopes of getting part of the $850.00 purses that are offered for the two days of racing.

James Lytle, of Beaverton, has entered Adrian Grattan in the 2.20 class, and Stella Grattan in the 2.27. These two horses won their respective classes during the Peterborough Fair race meet and are among the feared pacers to come down the stretch before starter George Tice.

The Inglis stable of Norwood with Infringer Grattan and Richard Hall certain starters, is also to be considered, while Jimmy Sutherland's crack 2.20 pacer Peter J. has to be reckoned with.

"Chappie" Chapman, Ontario's grand driver of harness racing arrived at the Belleville track yesterday to add to the racing prowess of the Belleville Fair. "We are certain to fill every class during the Fair and can assure the lovers of harness racing two days' spirited racing. However, our greatest problem is to find a horses that is going to make matters interesting for Hillock's Lastic Grattan, which may set out and lower the track record," predicted Secretary R. H. Ketcheson today.

With the war clouds hanging over Europe and partial mobilization in effect throughout the Dominion, sport sponsors throughout Eastern Ontario are not enjoying their present state of the continued jitters. At both the Trenton Air Force and Kingston several units have been dispatched to Halifax by the Department of Militia, merely as a precautionary move. However, if the present conditions continue to prevail "what is going to happen to our rugby football and hockey groups?" asks Air Force and Kingston Signals heads. Already negotiations to hold a rugby football meeting at Belleville on Sept. 5th had been made by O.R.F.U. convener Bill Fry and to include clubs from the Air Force, Kingston Signals, Kingston City, Cobourg Red Raiders and possibly Belleville. Every club mentioned has been affected by the war scare, as in the case of the civilian clubs, many of their numbers have already signified their intentions to join the colors in case of necessity, while still others have already joined the non-permanent forces to add to the sport complications.

Not only has the war talk directly affected the future of rugby and possibly hockey, but it has directly taken its toll on the attendance at various district play-offs. For instance the attendance at the Kingston-Belleville O.A.S.A. play-offs was far below that seen during the previous city league series played between the "Oilers" and Corbys A.C. and which is directly attributed to the access war talk. Already they are talking the possibilities of a third game between the Tanners and the Oilers, as it is a tough proposition to step into Kingston and beat the home team on the Cricket Field grounds. However, we feel that if the Oilers will put as much oomph into their attack in the early stages tonight, as they did into that hectic ninth inning rally Monday and give Bawden an early-game working margin the local moundsman will take care of the Kingston batters in due course. Incidentally the Kingston scribe says Stan Scrutton, the Tanners' pitching-shortstop, is plyaing in his eigth consecutive provincial play-off for Kingston in the O.A.S.A. and adds that it seems strange to have the old C.O.B.L. towns, Kingston, Belleville, Oshawa and Peterboro all in the intermediate O.A.S.A. playdowns simultaneously.

Kingston's old guard of baseball—Bob Elliott, Yammy Jamieson, Jimmy Arneill, Vinny McQuade, Joe Corkey, Abber Joyce, Stan Scrutton as well as Ken Chambers, who played for Belleville some years ago and other veterans, will have the 'grey-thatched' Joe Daly whipping sharp words at them once again as the old Ponies are playing an all-star team from the Kingston City League in an exhibition baseball game in Kingston this week. Incidentally Kingston sponsored a four-teamed junior and three-teamed juvenile leagues throughout the season, which met with success and which might prove equally as successful in Belleville, if the veterans of the game would become interested and climb out of their shell to assist the kids as coaches and managers.

We were surprised to read a news dispatch regarding our old friend Wm. "Scotty" McDougall, of professional wrestling fame. McDougall, a 45-year-old veteran wrestler, is charged at London, Ont., with assaulting one Harry Spencer on Aug. 18th. Apparently it must have been quite a scrap as both men are reported to have been badly treated, but we always found Scotty rather an amicable person, that is outside the wrestling ring.

Bud Wilkins' Belleville "Orfuns" have plenty of luck mut seemingly it's all bad. Last week their leading batsman, Russ Collins, pulled up stakes and left for an extended visit to Kentucky, which was bad enough despite the fact that Lorne Jarrell is doing a fine chore at plugging the second base hole, but now we hear that Jack (Doc) Empson, the locals' clubbing outfielder, and 1938 leading batter, has departed for the New York World's Fair and the locals will be minus his services for the next ten days. Belleville journeyed to Coe Hill today to meet the "backwoods boys," who we hear swing wicked cudgels when they step in the vicinity of home plate. Either Sammy Ellis, a lefthander, or Joe Kelleher will get today's Belleville pitching assignment, with Chuck Barriage being given a ful week's rest for the second game to be played here on Saturday afternoon.

Jack Singer writing in the New York Journal American, observes that the Boy Scout who was lost in the woods survived for nine days on berries and adds: That's nothing. Bill Terry has survived on razzberries for nine years."....Scouts all agree that Bill Nicholson, new Cub outfielder, is the real McCoy and will go on to stardom.... Pat Monahan tells this one on two young members of the Chattanooga Lookouts. The players approached Manager Kiki Cuyler and told him they were a little tired and needed a few days rest. Cuyler communicated the information to Joe Engel, head of the Lookouts...."Tell 'em it's okay," said Joe—"ten days without pay." The boys quickly forgot about that tired feeling.

They do tell us that Mark Storms, the local leather-pusher, accepted a challenge to box either three or five rounds at one of "take on all comers" boxing tents at the Fair Grounds last night and although out-weighed Mark had a lot of fun jabbing his left into his heavier opponent's face. However, it is seldom the local challenger has a chance against these "take on all comers" boxing arenas and we wouldn't advise Mark to take part in a return bout.

Howard Welch's good Chesapeake, Brownie, won the middleweight class of the dog derby at the Canadian National Exhibition yesterday with apparent ease. Last year Brownie was the grand challenge winner of the entire derby and Howard has visions of repeating again this year as Brownie swam the distance of a quarter-mile 7.13.8 to win yesterday's event.

An eight-day postponement in the Nova-Galento fight was announced yesterday to permit Nova time to recover from a severe cold he contracted. The new date was set at Sept. 15th, and was made at Nova's request.

AT THE BELLE

"Indianapolis Speedway"

With fast-talking Pat OBrien, Ann "Oomph Girl" Sheridan, the exotic Gale Page, heart-breaking John Payne and comical Frank McHugh in the leading roles, "Indianapolis Speedway", spine tingling drama of automobile racing produced by the Warner Bros. Studio, opens next at the Belle.

Hailed as one of the most exciting and romantic films ever brought to the screen, "Indianapolis Speedway", forcefully depicts all the lure of the great American sport of auto racing on world-famed tracks.

The story concerns the efforts of Pat O'Brien champion race driver to make John Payne, his younger brother, continue with college and not follow in his own footsteps.

But John is bitten by the racing bug and his added romantic interest in Ann Sheridan, whom Pat dislikes, causes the brothers to feud climaxing in a race in which Pat's best friend Frank McHugh is killed in a spectacular crash.

The accident breaks Pat. He gives up racing and vanishes. Gale Page, Pat's loyal girl friend, knowing if she is ever to locate Pat it would be at the annual Memorial Day speed classic at Indianapolis, goes there. She finds him at the track, a seedy, broken figure.

As they watch Payne compete with another driver for the number one spot during the last laps of the race, there is a minor accident. John needs a relief driver and before Pat realizes what is happening, Gale has rushed him to the pits.

In a dramatic, sensational scene, Pat again comes into his own and is reconciled to his brother.

The cast in support of the principals includes such favorites as Granville Bates, Regis Toomey, William Davidson, John Ridgely and many others.

Of special interest to racing fans is the fact that eight well-known racing drivers appear in the film driving famed racers.

"The Spellbinder"

Dark-haired Barbara Read, popular Canadian Actress makes her debut as a leading lady in RKO Radio's "The Spellbinder", in which Lee Tracy plays the title role and is announced as the companion feature attraction.

Just old enough to vote, Barbara has been aiming toward a film career for the past six years, got really started a year ago when she played her first important part in "Three Smart Girls' 'and "Make Way For Tomorrow." Her current assignment comes as a result of her brilliant performance in the recent "Sorority House," in which she played one of Ann Shirley's college room-mates.

In "The Spellbinder", the young actress plays the daughter of Lee Tracy, a criminal attorney who tries to keep his daughter in ignorance of his unscrupulous ethics in defending confirmed criminals.

"Goodbye Mr. Chips"

Robert Donat, who gave the screen one of its finest performances as the idealistic doctor of "The Citadel", once again reveals his consummate artistry and acting skill in "Goodbye Mr. Chips", filmization of the celebrated James Hilton novel, with lovely Greer Garson the screen discovery of 1939 in the leading feminine role is the picture now at the Belle Theatre.

AT THE McCARTHY

"FIVE CAME BACK"

Chester Morris, Lucille Ball, Wendy Barrie, C. Aubrey Smith, Joseph Calleia, Kent Taylor, John Carradine and many more notable stars of the screen head the large cast of the most memorable and gripping adventure film ever made by movie camera "Five Came Back" already spoken of as one of the year's ten best, which is now playing at the McCarthy Theatre with an excellent companion feature attraction "Swing That Cheer" the first college football story of the new season with Tom Brown, Andy Devine, Robert Wilcox, Constance Moore and Ernest Truex the principal character players of the cast. "Marriage-Go-Round" an all-star, all-fun comedy is also presented on the program which we can advise you is one well worth seeing.

"Romance of the Redwoods" "There's That Woman Again"

Next at the McCarthy Theatre comes Jack London's powerful story of the lumber camps, "Romance Of The Redwoods" starring Charles Bickford and Jean Parker, with the hilarious sequel to "There's Always A Woman" second feature attraction in addition to "Romance of the Redwoods." Melvyn Douglas, Virginia Bruce and Margaret Lindsay in "There's That Woman Again" two outstanding screen hits which bring to the McCarthy Theatre another swell show, following the current attractions "Five Came Back" and "Swing That Cheer."

SOVIET RUSSIA HONORS HEROES

At Same Time Strengthens Her Military Forces on Frontiers Facing Europe

By WITT HANCOCK
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Aug. 30—(AP)— Soviet Russia today honored as heroes her soldiers now fighting Japanese forces on the border of Outer Mongolia and Manchuokuo and at the same time strengthened her military forces on frontiers facing Europe.

The Supreme Soviet, Russia's "Parliament" now in session, was expected to delay ratification of the Soviet-German non-aggression pact at least until Friday. There was no session today because it was the "free day," Soviet substitute for Sunday every sixth day.

Decorations for 936 military men for valor were announced, an unusually high number. The awards were believed to be for service in the far east, another confirmation of the belief fighting there has been sharp and is still in progress.

Among those honored was General Gregori Shtero who recently was replaced as commander of the first Maritime Province army in the far east.

Revealed by Dispatch

Disclosure that further military forces were being sent to the Soviet Union's European frontiers came in a Tass, official news agency, denial of what it said were foreign reports that troops were being withdrawn from the western borders.

Tass said that on the contrary military leaders had decided to strengthen the garrisons facing Europe "because of the tense situation in Eastern Europe and the possibility of unexpected developments."

Parliament is to receive a report tomorrow on a new military measure enforcing the recent decree lowering the age at which youths may be called for military service from 21 to 19.

OFFER OF

Acceptability of British suggestions as a basis for negotiation was stressed by the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung.

The British note obviously was not offensive to Hitler because, the newspaper observed: "The British communication was of a sort which made it possible for the Fuehrer to answer."

But despite a slightly more hopeful feeling a conflict might be avoided, Allgemeine Zeitung commented Prime Minister Chamberlain was justified in telling the House of Commons yesterday it cannot be said "the danger of war has receded since the House met last Thursday."

Decision With Others

The Boersen Zeitung, closely connected with the War Ministry, observed, "the decision in the question of peace or war does not lie with us, but with the others."

Hitler's Voelkischer Beobachter took a similar attitude, saying, "the choice is up to London."

In the Foreign and Propaganda Ministries and the Chancellery, the desire to get on better terms with Britain frequently was expressed. The press reflected this attitude. The Beobachter said: "Germany wants peace with France and England, peace and lasting understanding."

The GLASS SLIPPER

by MIGNON G. EBERHART

The little organdy apron concealed only empty hands. Hands that were doubled up into tight fists.

Rue looked at them and said: "What—" and Rachel defiantly opened her hands and held them palm outward toward Rue,staring at her above them with somber, red-rimmed eyes.

"There," said Rachel, "you see—"

Rue saw. Saw and shank away and yet had to lean nearer to make sure she saw. But there was no mistake. Clear upon the girl's palms were smudges and blotched streaks of green.

"Where....?" breathed Rue at last. "How....?"

"I don't know! I don't know, madam. I—I washed my hands and there it was. I don't know.. but I know about her," she cried, gasping and flinging out both stained hands toward the heartrug as if Julie's shabby little figure were still there. And then she looked at Rue again, and gave a strangled, sudden sob and ran out of the room. Hiding her stained hands below the scrap of organdy.

Rue did not follow her.

She didn't know how much later it was that Steven knocked rather diffidently at her half-opened door and came in.

"All alone," he said. "May I come in?....Well, how goes it, Rue? We're just going out for a drive. I thought you might like to go along." He was watching her kindly, instantly aware, as Steven was always aware, of some special trouble. He came to her and smiled down. He already had his coat and muffler on, and was carrying his hat. "Poor little Rue, The glass slipper isn't what it's cracked up to be."

"Poor little Rue, caught between them," said Steven soberly. "I know...."

"I know," said Steven. And as she met his sober, dark eyes, all at once she saw something deeper than sympathy, something stronger than affection, and that was truth. Steven did know.

But she had to say it, faltering: "You mean—you know all about it, Steven? You know.... But you can't—"

"I know," he said again. "Alicia and Brule and—I've known for a long time, Rue."

It was very quiet in the rose-scented room. Rue looked up at the sensitive, slender face of the man who stood beside her.

"But you," she said wonderingly. "You still—love her."

He nodded.

"I still love her. I'll always love her, I suppose. I can't help it. That's love, my dear. I suppose, always there's a hope—like a little, flickering light at the end of a long lane."

"Steven...."

"Don't feel sorry for me." He smiled again. "My eyes are open. Listen, Rue my dear, you are young. I'm —not. Let me tell you something. There's always a time when it's stronger than you are; I've had my moments of rebellion and of struggle and of—well, of hatred. Not — pleasant moments. But it's no good. I've got to accept the whole of it. Do you see?"

"Y-yes."

"No, you don't." He looked at her for a long moment and then unexpectedly bent and kissed her lips lightly. "What a dear child you are, Rue," he said and turned abruptly and went to the door. He paused then.

"You're sure you won't go along?"

She didn't go. Afterward she thought of it, that instant of indecision. But it would have made no difference.

CHAPTER TWENTY-SEVEN

Steven Hendrie had barely gone when Andy telephoned. But he didn't say much. Even when she told him of the girl Rachel and the grisly green smudges on her hands, he said only:

"How....?"

She doesn't know."

Connie Moore and Tom Brown featured with Andy Devine in "Swing that Cheer" Now Playing in addition to "Five Came Back" at the McCarthy Theatre.

"Well, never mind," he said at last. "Let the police worry about it. I only called to ask if there was anything new."

"Only that—and the police were here when we got home. Asking about keys."

"Keys?"

"There's an extra key somewhere they can't account for. I suppose someone has lost it. It's not important." She wanted to say; I'm alone. Please come. I'm alone and the house is big and it's so empty and silent.

She didn't say it. And Andy talked for a little and hung up.

After that the house was even emptier. She thought of questioning Rachel further and rang the bell, but Gross came presently and, when she inquired, said it was the maid's day out and she had gone.

The afternoon wore on slowly after that. Gross vanished to some quiet downstairs retreat for his afternoon rest period; only the doorbell or telephone or her own bell would lure him out of it.

It grew dark early. Brule did not return; and she wondered about the emergency operation. She couldn't read; she couldn't write letters. She thought of Steven. She thought of Madge. She thought, wishing she wouldn't, of Alicia.

But Steven's whole philosophy was wrong. Rue could not accept it for herself.

She rose at last, driven by restlessness and the early dusk and her own thoughts. There was something oppressive about the silence of the darkening house. Something too poignantly reminiscent about that rose-scented room, as if the ghosts of two dead women lingered there, watching—Crystal with her mocking, secret smile, Julie helpless and trapped in a tragedy that did not concern her.

Rue went downstairs. Gross had not yet lighted the hall, and it was cavernous in the growing dusk. She went back toward the library. It, too, was not lighted, and she paused at the door to seek the electric light switch. And as she did so she glanced on down the hall.

The door to Steven's studio was closed, and there was a thin streak of light below it.

A streak of light which, as she looked, silently disappeared.

As if someone had turned out the light.

But no one was there. The house was completely still. She walked across the hall and opened the studio door.

The first thing she realized was that the curtains must have been pulled, for the room was so dark that the ashes left in the hearth made a faint red glow. The dark cavern of the room was so still she could hear the pounding of her own heart. But someone must be there. She had just seen that light turned off.

There was a master switch there, too, by the door, and she pressed it.

The room sprang into view—long, with the big piano in the corner and the heavy curtains pulled across the bay windows.

And there was someone there. Someone who lay, oddly, across the piano bench.

Rue must have moved. For suddenly she was staring directly down at the thing on the bench, and it wasn't quite recognizable, yet it was the maid, Rachel.

Her heart ws pounding so frantically she couldn't have heard small sounds, but she saw the piece of manuscript paper waver, slide slowly off the rack above the keyboard, flutter sluggishly across the huddled figure and fall on the floor at Rue's feet.

It was music manuscript—printed bars filled with hurried, penciled notes. And across it suddenly a bright red smear spread itself. She stared at it stupidly, not realizing why the paper had fallen in just that way.

She must have seen more than she thought she saw, for later there were definite details she remembered and could tell the police. She remembered that Rachel wore a coat and was flung, twisted, on the long cushioned bench so that Rue saw the back of her coat, with a long slit cut into the dark cloth and a spreading wet patch starting all around that slit. The girl wore no hat, and her dark hair was bare, without her usual cap. She had on high-heeled pumps, and one of them had loosened somehow and dangled from one toe. There was no knife or revolver or any kind of weapon visible.

She must have seen all that.

But then she only thought with appalling slowness as in a nightmare. Rachel was dead. Rachel was murdered. But no one was in the house. And.... she had seen the light turned out.

Rachel hadn't turned out the light. Therefore .... someone was there. Someone.... and then she realized, still stupidly, that only a current of air from somewhere could have made that sheet of manuscript paper move and flutter from the rack, and that meant a door or a window open, and that meant....

She was afraid to look behind her, around the room. She was afraid to move, really, yet move she must and did. Perhaps she ran back to the door; she never knew. The next thing she was ever to be able to remember was ringing the bell in the library, pressing the little pearl button so hard it hurt her fingers, and then meeting Gross—moments afterward it seemed, in the pantry. So she must have gone through the empty dark dining room to meet Gross. But she couldn't remember that either.

Flowery Language

By MERLE SINCLAIR

Jim Banning ripped final copy for the Morning Sentinel from his typewriter and looked wearily at the clock. Midnight.

Bill Kilwino, at the next desk, threw down his eye-shade and addressed the office at large. "What I need is some night life of a different variety. What say?"

Jim paid no attention but listened warily. What would his answer be when the gang asked, as it had formed a habit of doing lately, "Coming, Jim?"

These midnight sallies into gay places were causing trouble between him and Nancy. She was jealous of Vina Martineau, and had an idea—ridiculous little Puritan!—that a man didn't impromptu parties without her.

"Impromptu!" she had cried, blue eyes wet with angry tears. "When you've done this a dozen times and never once phoned me to come along! When we haven't been married a year!"

Across the city room, Jim watched tawny-haired Vina put away her lipstick.

"Of course Jim's coming. Aren't you Jim?"

Yes, he was coming. Just to teach Nancy the lesson she had to learn, though his head did ache and bed offered greater invitation.

Most of the staff were working through until two o'clock. So it was just the Kilwines—Bill's wife was society editor—and Jim and Vina who went. Somehow, lately, it was just the four of them a good deal of the time.

He didn't care anything about Vina. But she intrigued him.

The Ace of Clubs was jammed, and almost opaque with smoke. An unctuous master of ceremonies announced novelty numbers—"in honor, la-dees and gentlemen, of the first anniversary of the state's most famous night club. To show its appreciation of your splendid patronage, the management presents....."

Across the room Jim's eye caught sight of Sport Conley coarse-mouthed gentleman of chance who was always pestering the sports department. With him was a bleached and lacquered blond, drinking too rapidly from a small amber glass. Jim looked away in revulsion.

"Mad at me?" Vina whispered.

He turned from her, looked across at Sport Conley, who gave him a slow, leering wink. Jim rose to his feet.

Half an hour later he tiptoed into the kitchen of his apartment. He shortened the stem of a huge, creamy rose, found an olive bottle for a vase. He hadn't brought Nancy flowers for ages. This was just one ......still, she'd be pleased. He placed it on her side of the breakfast table.

He clicked off the light and felt his way into the bedroom. Rays from a street lamp faintly illuminated it, falling across the four-poster bed with its neat spread of candlewick. Across a bed that was smooth and unoccupied!

My God. Jim prayed unintelligibly as he felt for the electric button. Prayed harder as he yanked open the closet door. But every dress, every small, dainty shoe was gone.

He was still telling himself the next afternoon that she would be back, that she was just trying to frighten him.

When the telephone rang, he answered gruffly.

"Jim!" The voice was throaty, trembling.

A flood of warmth spread through his whole being. "Nance—darling—I've been crazy...."

"Then you did care—enough to worry?"

"Care! You dear little nut—where are you?"

"I'm home—now, sweetheart. You see, I called the office last night—when you didn't come. You'd left at twelve—and I couldn't bear it. I mean your wanting some one else."

"Nobody else dear. I've just been stubborn."

"I stayed at the Y.W. I had to think. And I meant to take the afternoon train home—to mother and dad. But I'd forgotten my watch, so I waited until you went to work this afternoon—"

"Yes?"

"But I couldn't go—when I saw the rose."

"Saw what?"

"The rose! It looked so dear and pathetic. drooping from that old bottle. Men fix flowers so funny."

"Listen, hon, throw out that Scotch bouquet. All right for an emergency message, but you're getting a fat love letter from the nearest florist—special delivery! ...... I'll be home early!"

Jim laughed until half the staff turned to look. Laughed triumphantly, derisively, in the direction of Vina....".....to show its appreciation....the management presents each of you ladies with one of these magnificent roses. And to you, gentlemen....."

Vina had laughed at her memento, just as she laughed at everything. Then she had placed it in Jim's lapel, from which the long stem dangled ridiculously.

"Take this to Nancy," she had said, and might just as well have added, "since I have you, old dear."

In his obsession to show Nancy how sorry he was, it had not entered his stupid, aching head that he should have pitched the tainted flower into the gutter!

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Aug. 30—(AP)— The Toronto stock market started the day hopefully and a few gains spotted the board at the end of the first hour. In the subsequent two hours the gains were dropped. At noon base metal and industrial shares were down .35 and .18 respectively, while the golds and western oils were even with the previous close. Light trading marked the day's operations.

The report that Germany was ready to negotiate direct with Poland on conditions, appeared to afford the market some encouragement in the early action. Steel shares advanced while other industrials eased off. Adjustments in the gold group were limited to a few cents. Some of the penny golds were firm and active. Minor fractions were dropped by base metal leaders, Smelters, Nickel, Noranda and Hudson Bay.

Early afternoon brought recessions of 2 to 5 cents for some of the western oils, including Home, Calgary-Edmonton and Anglo-Canadian.

WALL ST.

New York, Aug. 30—(AP)— The stock market went the straight and narrow path today with a good deal of caution. Prices lifted a little at the quiet opening but retreated in many cases later. Near the fourth hour the ticker tape was slow and most gains and losses were in minor fractions.

Wall Street seemed fairly confident war over the Polish-German dispute would be avoided for the time being, but looked forward to long negotiations and perhaps the recurrence of crises. The reported willingness of Herr Hitler to accept the mediation of King Leopold of the Belgians and the Queen of Holland was thought a good sign.

Resistant most of the session were Santa Fe, N.Y. Central, Standard Oil of N.J., Texas Corp., Anaconda, Owens-Illinois and Douglas Aircraft.

Unchanged or narrow were Chrysler, U.S. Steel, U.S. Rubber, Sears Roebuck, American Telephone, Consolidated Edison, General Electric, Du Pont and American Smelting.

Distillers moved up more than a point in the Canadian group and International Nickel added a minor fraction. Most others were neglected. Dominion 4s were under slight pressure in the bond market.

NORMANDIE SAILS SOME TIME TODAY

New York Aug. 30 (AP)— The French line today revised an earlier statement that the Normandie would be held here indefinitely and announced the ship would sail as soon as it received clearance papers probably today.

First announcement said the liner was to be held on orders from Henri Gangardel, Managing Director in Paris. The later statement said the message had been garbled.

Meanwhile the liner, like the North German-Lloyd's Bremen, and two British ships, the Transylvania and the Aquitania, was searched by United States Customs guards to see that she carried no war contraband.

(At Washington the State Department said it understood the Bremen would be allowed to sail on this afternoon's tide. The United States Treasury, it said expected current inspection of all foreign vessels in American ports would be completed in time to permit clearance and sailing then).

Not Allowed Aboard

The Normandie was scheduled to sail at 10 a.m. E.D.T. and many of its 330 passengers began arriving early. None was allowed on board.

The Cunard White Star Line however, permitted its passengers to board the Aquitania which had been scheduled to sail at noon. Among them was Sir Ronald Lindsay, retiring British Ambassador to the United States.

Still chafing under the delay imposed on him, Captain Adolf Ahearns, master of the Bremen, complained today the customs guards were "searching an empty swimming pool." The delay has already cost the line about $4,000, he said and would cost another $2,000 by tonight.

Drop in Butter and Egg Prices

Further price losses were registered by butter and eggs yesterday in continued quiet trading on the Toronto open produce market, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported. Inactive trading again ruled the cheese market, with prices holding steady.

Sales of butter were barely sufficient to establish quotations. Buyers continued to display very little interest in offerings, even though Ontario receipts were light. First-grade creamery solids eased to a price range of 21 1-2c to 21 7-8c, while a few sales of Western butter were made during the morning at 22c.

Another downturn in egg prices at Montreal produced heavier receipts at Toronto. With offerings increasing, the market weakened slightly and dealers experienced some difficulty in clearing their eggs. Trading was light as buyers held back to cautiously await developments in Europe. In the ungraded section, A-large eggs declined to 25c and A-medium to 24c and prices to the retail trade also were down one cent on top-grades. A-large eggs in the graded section eased to 27c and A-medium to 26c.

Total exports of butter from Canada during the week ending Aug. 26 were reported by the department at 799 packages while cheese exports for the week totalled 27,732 boxes.

Butter Off at Montreal

Montreal, Aug. 30—Butter was slightly easier in exceptionally quiet trade on produce markets here yesterday, while potatoes were steady, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reported. Cheese trading was at a complete standstill. Eggs weakened a bit, with receipts ample for demand but difficult to dispose of immediately.

Job price of first-grade creamery butter prints was 22 1-2-23 cents a pound and of first-grade solids 22-22 1-2. Western butter delivered in Montreal was unquoted, price to creamery of Quebec No. 1 pasteurized butter delivered in Montreal for current make was 21 1-4 and the price of Quebec No. 2 pasteurized butter was 20 1-4. Receipts: 408 boxes.

Price to factory of Ontario white and colored cheese delivered in Montreal for current make was 10 13-16-11 3-16. Quebec white and colored cheese were both unquoted. Receipts. 6,084 boxes.

Graded egg shipments in used free cases, inspected, were offered at 28 1-2-29 cents a dozen for A-large, 26 1-2-27 for A-medium, 21-22 for A pullets. 20 1-2 for B-large, 14 1-2-15 for C. Uninspected lots 1-2 cent less. Receipts: 791 cases.

UNCONFIRMED

If Hitler has agreed to direct negotiations with the Poles, as London diplomatic circles said, it indicated a modification of his policy. The French government announced Aug. 27 that the Fuehrer had rejected a proposal by Premier Daladier for direct negotiations between the Poles and Germans.

Despite his lengthy consultations with Viscount Halifax and other Foreign Office officials, Prime Minister Chamberlain appeared on schedule for his customary morning stroll in St. James's Park. He was accompanied by Mrs. Chamberlain.

Arrival of Hitler's reply to the British statement of position last night caused a flurry of activity. Mr. Chamberlain and the Foreign Secretary, Viscount Halifax, studied the message until long after midnight. Those who took part in the midnight consultations included Sir Horace Wilson, one of Mr. Chamberlain's advisers. Also present were R. A. Butler, Undersecretary of Foreign Affairs, and Sir Alexander Cadogan, Undersecretary of State.

CLAIM FOR DANZIG REAFFIRMED

All that has been disclosed of the exchange between the Prime Minister and the German Fuehrer which began with a message from Hitler last Friday is that both sides have made plain their general lines of policy.

Hitler reaffirmed his claims for the Free City of Danzig and Pomorze, the Polish Corridor.

At the same time, it was said, he continued to express his desire for an Anglo-German and a Franco-German understanding, provided Great Britain and France do not stand in the way of a "just settlement" of the German-Polish quarrel.

Britain replied flatly a German threat to Polish independence would find Britain and France "fighting from the first day on the side of Poland." The British government also said it did not differ from Germany in a desire for general improvement of British-German relations.

Ever since the Polish-German crisis arose Britain and France have been urging direct negotiations between the two but until now the Reich has refused. If Hitler has reversed his position the acceptability of his terms to Poland becomes a question of Major importance.

HALTS WAR FOR DAY OR TWO AT LEAST

"It certainly has halted any war for a day or two at least," a source close to the government stated in referring to the German message to the British government, but beyond that no one would venture an opinion.

The government was reported in diplomatic quarters to be making inquiries in Berlin concerning what was said to have been a mention in Hitler's note of a period of time—some reports placed it at 24 hours—for the British reply.

In the conversation last night between Hitler and the British Ambassador, Hitler was reported here to have said this was not in the nature of an ultimatum, however.

International At A Glance

LONDON, Aug. 30—(CP)— The King, Commander - in - Chief of Great Britain's armed forces, called at the War Office this afternoon, apparently to inspect details of the nation's preparedness for war. The visit was officially described as "private and informal."

Later, the King, accompanied by his brother, the Duke of Gloucester, visited the Air Ministry.

VATICAN CITY, Aug. 30—(AP) —Gas masks were distributed to residents of Vatican City today. Dim blue lights, similar to those used in Rome, have been installed to enable the Vatican to join in Rome's blackout. Luigi Cardinal Maglione, Papal Secretary of State, had a long conference on the international situation with the Pope at Castel Gandolfo.

MT. CLEMS, Mich., Aug. 30 — (AP)—Eighteen of the United States' fastest pursuit planes, based on Selfridge Field here, were ordered by the War Department today to fly immediately to the Panama Canal. War Department officials said the ships would be stationed permanently at the canal base.

NEW YORK, Aug. 30—(CP)— Poles resident in the United States and Americans of Polish descent are donating heavily to the Polish Defence Fund as their mother Country faces the prospect of war over German territorial demands. More than $1,300,000 has been raised throughout the United States and forwarded to Warsaw for defence purposes, according to the Polish Consul General at Chicago.

BOMBAY, Aug. 30—(AP)— Some concern was felt here today for 150 British subjects among the 700 passengers aboard the India-bound Italian liner Conte Biancamano, now overdue two days from Europe.

A message from an Indian passenger aboard indicated the liner may be lying some distance off Colombo awaiting clarification of the European crisis.

London, Aug. 30 (CP)—The Royal chapels in Westminster Abbey were closed today following the removal of statues from the tombs of British kings and the placing of sandbags around the tombs.

Southampton, Aug. 30 (CP)—The Queen Mary sailed today with 2,385 passengers, a new record. The list included J. P. Morgan, American financier, who kept only a bedroom for himself when he learned of the crush of passengers, allowing guests to sleep in the drawing room and garden veranda he had reserved.

Montreal, Aug. 30 (CP)—Canadian Pacific Railway Company announced through Vice-President D. C. Coleman today that an employee called by military or other governmental authority for special duty during the crisis will be granted leave of absence on making application. "His position, of course," the announcement said, "will be held for him and his service rights will be fully protected. Instructions in this connection have been in effect for some days."

Dublin, Aug. 30 (CP)—Eire hopes to play the role of a neutral in the event of a European war. "We believe we can be neutral," a government official commented after the cabinet had discussed the situation last night, "but we cannot guarantee whether we will be allowed to remain neutral, and we cannot allow ourselves to be caught unprepared."

London, Aug. 30.—(CP)— Notices instructing passengers how to behave in trains during air raids were posted by the Southern Railway Company and the London, Midland and Scottish Railway today. In the event of an air attack passengers must not leave the train if it stops unless they are urged to do so by railway employees. If possible passengers should lie on the floor of their compartment during an attack.

Sydney, Australia, Aug. 30. — (CP Cable)—Newspapers here today commended Britain's firm attitude in the Polish-German crisis.

"The dominating fact in the European situation is that Adolf Hitler's terroristic technique has miscarried," the Herald said. "If the hope of peace survives it is because Hitler has been made to pause. Hitler halts only because his force has been confronted with force."

The Telegraph said "Never again can Britain and France yield to the German menace. Their future, like ours, depends on standing firm".

The Sun said "Britain, France and Poland are united in one purpose that Nazi aggression should be halted."

SIX COLLIERIES IN N. S. CLOSED

Miners Refuse to Return to Work Before Negotiations Completed

Glace Bay, N.S., Aug. 30.—(CP) — No immediate settlement of the disputes that led to the closing of six Dominion Coal Company collieries in this district was foreseen here today as a result of the rejection last night of a proposal to return to work pending union-company negotiations.

A motion that the six mines —four of which went on strike yesterday out of sympathy for the other two—should reopen to enable settlement talks was thrown out by a meeting of delegates from the collieries involved by a vote of 17-13.

It has been the policy of the Dominion Coal Company not to negotiate a dispute while a mine is tied up.

Joining with the miners in the general strike was the personnel of the company's international coal loading pier in Sydney. In other pits in the district only a few reported for work yesterday morning. A total of about 5,000 miners were involved in the wholesale walkout and all the strike-bound mines were picketed.

The trouble began with minor grievances among men in the company's Caledonia and No. 11 mines. In Caledonia miners struck last week because the company refused a wage increase to a fellow worker and in No. 11 the refusal to hire a roadmaker favored by the men led to the walkout there.

Truth About Gasoline Prices

Why pay for extravagant overhead when you buy gasoline? . . . . for over-expansion by oil companies that operate unnecessary—and consequently unprofitable stations? Overhead doesn't improve the quality of gasoline. It merely makes it cost more, and you—the motorist—must pay this extra cost.

GOOD-RICH Oil Company stations are selected to give motorists efficient service without unnecessary duplication. We operate a most modern refinery, with every device for economical products. We sell direct from refinery to consumer, and we give motorists the full benefit of the savings effected—as much as 5c a gallon.

Test "Blue Star" gasoline. Prove its quality for yourself. Save up to 5c on every gallon you buy.

TRENTON

RUSSELL WILSON GIVEN TWO YEARS FOR WOUNDING

Only Miracle Clarence Gosleigh Did Not Die Says Doctor in Court

RECORD PRODUCED

Trenton, Aug. 30 (Special)—Notwithstanding his plea that he "didn't remember a thing and everything went black until I suddenly saw Clarence in front of me with his throat cut," Magistrate Ambrose Shea of Kingston sentenced Russell Wilson, Trenton man, to two years in Kingston penitentiary in local court yesterday after finding him guilty on the evidence of several witnesses. Wilson was charged with causing grievous bodily injury as the result of a "drunken brawl" which occurred on July 28th along the shore of the Bay of Quinte at which Clarence Gosleigh of Trenton was so badly slashed at the throat by Wilson that medical authorities said it was only by a miracle, that he survived.

Defending Wilson was H. D. Graham, K.C., who emphasized that the men had all been drinking wine and wert hardly responsible for their actions and who further pointed out that Wilson term in jail and produced Wilson's or to run away. However, Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, of Belleville asked for a more serious conviction than a mere few months term in ajil and produced Wilson's record which showed that he had led a "career of violence" since 1934. Only a few days before the slashing incident he had been warned by local police to get out of town as the result of a quarrel in a local home at which he had taken from his pocket a jack-knife and threatened members of the family with it.

Held Jugular Veins

The Crown admonished Wilson that he was a fortunate young man since he had missed being arraigned on a murder charge only because Gosleigh had presence of mind enough to hold the severed ends of both jugular veins tightly in his fingers until taken to Belleville hospital where ne remained for over two weeks and where medical authorities said that he survived only by a miracle.

Wilson said that he had no plea to make in his own defence except that "everything went black and I didn't know anything until I saw Clarence in front of me yelling: 'You've cut me! You've cut me'!"

Among those giving evidence were Gosleigh, scarred from the affray also Dr. E. A. McQuade Chief Constable Bain, and Wilson.

"In the absence of prompt medical attention, what in your opinion would have been the effect of the wounds inflicted on this man?" Crown Attorney Donnan asked Dr McQuade.

"There is little doubt but that they would have caused his death" replied the physician, describing a cut of five or six inches which cut through the outer covering of the throat and a second slash on the shoulder.

Gosleigh testified that the stabbing occurred after he had knocked Wilson down for striking Manley Tripp near whose domicile in the Bay of Quinte shore the incident took place.

Canada Goes to War If Britain Goes, Pattullo Declares

Says U. S. Would Go To War if Canada Does

Fairbanks, Alaska, Aug. 30— (AP)—"If Britain goes to war, Canada goes, and if Canada goes the United States goes," Premier T. D. Pattullo of British Columbia said yesterday at a banquet in his honor.

"They can not keep out whether they like it or not. Britain and France are the world's frontiers of democracy."

Among those present at the banquet were the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, here for a three-day hunting trip.

"Britain and France are the first line of defence for the democracies," said Mr. Pattullo. "And the United States can not be neutral if they are attacked."

The Premier and his party, on an aerial tour which took them to the mouth of the Mackenzie river, were forced to spend a second night at Fairbanks. The tip of the plane's propeller was damaged as the ship was being prepared to take off for Dawson, Y.T.

Repairs will be effected easily. Plans are to leave for Dawson today and continue on to Whitehorse, Y.T.

500,000 MEN

Mobilization Order

A communique explaining the necessity for the mobilization of additional men was issued through the Polish telegraphic agency. It said:

"The Reich has started an aggressive policy toward the Polish republic.

"This is manifested in the German press campaign, in the statements of the leaders of the German state which contain threats, in systematic border incidents and finally in the concentration of German mobilized forces all along Poland's frontier.

"The recent German action on the territory of Danzig, unquestionably directed against Polish rights and interests, and the open and continuous claims of Germany on territory belonging to the Polish republic leave no doubt that Poland is in danger.

All Efforts Accepted

"All the efforts for conciliatory action made either by high personalities for the sake of peace, or by governments friendly to Poland and inspired by the same spirit as Poland, have all been accepted by the Polish government with full approval.

"They have not caused any response on the part of the government of the Reich.

"Facing this situation, especially after the occupation of Slovakia by Germany, the Polish government has decided to complete the state's preparedness by enacting additional military measures.

"The policy of the Polish government, which has not been and is not now inspired by aggressive intentions toward anything, has not changed.

"The sincere wish of loyal cooperation with all states, which has been expressed in the answer of President Moscicki to President Roosevelt, characterized the best policy."

Troops Gather Quietly

The war office for the first time issued mobilization posters which are to be put up throughout Warsaw during the day, naming the classes called for service Previously, all men mobilized were called up secretly by direct order carried to them personally. They gathered quietly and systematically at concentration depots from where they were sent to their regiments.

RUSSO-JAP WAR FEARED AT TOKYO

Both Nations Reported Rushing Large Forces To East Asia

By Relman Morin
Associated Press Staff Writer

Tokyo, Aug. 30.—(AP)—As a result of Soviet Russia's non-aggression pact with Germany, freeing the hands of Japan's rival in Eastern Asia, the Japanese army is sending large forces into Manchoukuo through Korea and North China.

Vulnerable points along Manchoukuo's frontiers with Soviet Siberia and Outer Mongolia, Soviet Protectorate, are being reinforced.

Manchoukuo is filled with rumors that Russia, now free of the German menace on her western frontier, similarly is massing fresh forces in Siberia.

(In Moscow, however, the official agency, Tass, issued a denial of reports that 200,000 to 300,000 Red Army troops had been sent to the Far East, asserting that on the contrary Russia was reinforcing her western frontier garrisons.)

Scores of persons in all walks of life voiced to this correspondent during a recent journey through Korea, Manchoukuo and JaJpan, fears that a second Russo-Japanese war is imminent.

SAYS U. S. DELAY FAVORS GERMANY

New Congressional Dispute Arises Over Roosevelt's Remark

Washington, Aug. 30.—(AP)—A new congressional dispute over foreign policy arose today in the wake of President Roosevelt's assertion that United States Senate postponement of the neutrality law revision was a factor in the European crisis.

Mr. Roosevelt said late yesterday that he thought everybody believed the failure to act on his request for a repeal of the arms embargo had contributed in a minor degree to the present tense situation.

The subject came up at a press conference when the President was asked to comment on a recent speech in which Louis Johnson, assistant Secretary of War, declared postponement of debate until next winter had favoured Germany.

Referring to Johnson's speech, Senator Burton Wheeler (Dem.-Montana) said last night at Helena, Mont.—

"Every war jingoist in this country is in favor of our going to the aid of England and France in event of war. They would not only send arms and ammunition at the present time, but it wouldn't be long before they would want to send men.

"Apparently that is Johnson's idea in the matter. By minding our own business we are not contributing to either side".

Senator Styles Bridges (Rep.-New Hampshire) told reporters he had not noticed any signs that Senators who opposed repeal of the arms embargo would change their position at the 1940 session. Senator Elbert Thomas (Dem.-Utah) had argued that in event of a European war, Congress would "throw the existing neutrality act out the window".

PRACTICAL MOBILIZATION IN GREAT BRITAIN

'Precautionary' Evacuation of All School Children, Mothers, Invalids Ordered by Ministry of Health

Thousands of Polish Citizens Don Khaki Uniforms to Answer Call of Near General Mobilization

READY FOR WAR

Adolf Hitler's Reply to Britain "Even More Bitter" than Message to Daladier Says Spokesman

Warsaw, Aug. 31—(AP)—Thousands of Polish civilians donned khaki uniforms and marched off as soldiers today to answer President Ignace Moscick's order of near-general mobilization for defence of the republic.

The order, calling all reservists under 40 years of age to the colors, was expected to swell Poland's armed manpower from 1,500,000 to more than 2,000,000.

Poland decided upon the new military measures "to strengthen her security" yesterday about the time that the government heard, a foreign office spokesman said, that Adolf Hitler had replied to Great Britain "in terms even more bitter" than his message to Premier Daladier of France which had in effect rejected direct negotiation with Poland.

A government communique declared Germany's "policy of aggression" had "left no doubt about the fact Poland is endangered."

A Bad Neighbor

The pro-government newspaper Express Poranny said that "a bad neighbor has come to the gates of serene Polish republic and this indicates that after Polish diplomacy has done everything it can to maintain peace the Polish armed forces will have to play their role."

Hopes of peace have not been entirely removed, The Express Poranny added, "but if war does come it will be for all of us a sacred and victorious war."

In hundreds of towns and villages there were dramatic scenes as farmers, laborers, lawyers and other civilians said farewell to tight-lipped, dry-eyed women. Some of the women shouted the slogan of Marshal Pilsudski: "Poland will fight to the last man—and to the last woman!"

Requisition Equipment

The government put into effect orders for requisitioning automobiles, trucks, horses, bicycles and other equipment.

The semi-official Gazeta Polska emphasized again today that world peace was threatened by Germany's "aggressive claims" and not by any claims or action by Poland.

Polish authorities said they had discovered a secret German radio station on a German-owned farm near Grudziads in Pomorze but the operator succeeded in escaping.

Groups of armed Germans were alleged to have attacked the Polish frontier station of Orlowo, on the outskirts of Gydnia, and fired on a passenger train near Cadaca on the Slovak frontier.

Everett, Wash., Aug. 31 (AP)—The German motorship Portland, held here by its skipper since Sunday because of the European crisis, left port suddenly last night, presumably for Portland.

Secrecy shrouded the activities of a squad of customs officers and coast guardsmen aboard the vessel earlier in the evening.

Why the Weather!

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Water vapor! Except when the temperature of water is at absolute zero, the water molecules are jumping this way and that, and in doing so some escape and become water vapor. This makes the weather sultry, and the process is called evaporation. On the other hand, some of the molecules of water vapor in jumping about enter the water thus there is a constant interchange. When this interchange is constant the humidity is 100 per cent. However, more evaporation occurs per unit area from a convex surface than from a flat surface. There is more evaporation from cloud droplets than from a lake, for instance, and the cloud space is often supersaturated on that account.

Statement Issued With Order Says Step Does Not Mean War Regarded as Inevitable—Operation Will Require Several Days—Total Population of Designated Evacuation Areas In Neighborhood of Eleven Millions—Germany 'Reluctant' to Recognize Binding Nature of British and French Guarantees to Defend Poland's Indepedence, Says Spokesman

BERLIN MUST MAKE NEXT MOVE

Poland Ready To Negotiate, But Only As An Equal Power and So Long as Her Independence is Preserved—Does Not View Reported German Formula As Satisfactory Basis For Negotiation—Britain Will Not Press Poland to Accept Germany's Condition

London, Aug. 31—(CP)—"Precautionary" evacuation of school children, mothers and invalids from London and other key cities tomorrow—a movement perhaps involving several millions of persons—was ordered today by the Ministry of Health. The operation will require several days. The Ministry of Health statement said the step did not mean that war was regarded as inevitable.

The total population of the designated evacuation areas is in the neighborhood of 11,000,000 but only a part of these residents would fall into the "priority" or first group to be removed.

Children in 'Priority Classes'

Those falling in the "priority classes" are school children accompanied by their teachers, children of pre-school age accompanied by their mothers or other escorts, expectant mothers, and the adult blind and crippled population if the removal of these invalids is feasible.

Meanwhile the diplomatic exchange over the European crisis was said authoritatively to be hampered by the "reluctance" of Germany to recognize the binding nature of British and French guarantees to defend Poland's independence.

Great Britain's whole effort was described by sources close to the government as directed in this connection toward inducing a frame of mind in which negotiation proper could begin. The next move, it was said, thus must come from Berlin or Warsaw.

Situation at Present

Another factor viewed as contributing to the protracted nature of the war-or-peace messages was their latitude.

Besides the immediate question of Germany's demands for the Baltic Free City of Danzig and the Polish province of Pomorze, the broader issue of general European relations has been raised, necessitating inclusion of other powers in the discussions.

Briefly, the situation was this: Britain, France and Germany have indicated desire for discussions to clarify the whole European situation.

As an approach to this Germany is insisting on speedy settlement of her quarrel with Poland along lines laid out by Adolf Hitler.

Not Satisfactory Basis

Poland is ready to negotiate, but only as an equal power and so long as her independence is preserved. She does not view the reported German formula at present as a satisfactory basis for negotiation.

Britain and France are pledged to support Polish independence by force of arms if necessary. They refuse to press the Poles to accept Germany's conditions.

It is estimated there are nearly 12,000,000 men under arms in Europe. Borders of the disputing pow-

ITALIAN ARMY DIVIDED INTO TWO PARTS

To be Commanded by Prince Umberto and Marshal Graziani

NO EXPLANATION

Rome, Aug. 31—(AP)—Division of the Italian army into two parts, respectively commanded by Crown Prince Umberto and Marshal Rodolfo Graziani, was announced today.

No explanation was given for the brief order made known over the air to Italians.

Umberto has been inspector of infantry and a member of the army general staff. Graziani, next to Marshal Pietro Badoglio, was Italy's principle Ethiopian war commander and succeeded Badoglio as Viceroy to Ethiopia.

Meanwhile the Fascist press contended that Europe's crisis had spread from the German-Polish dispute over Danzig and the Corridor to the vastly wider question of giving Germany and Italy their share of the world's wealth.

Fascists also expressed fear that Polish action might precipitate war at any given moment by "abusing Germany's patience."

Arguments Advanced

Developing the Italian arguments for a general revision to settle the present crisis and prevent new ones, Il Popolo di Roma said:

"It is no longer the fate of the Free City which is in discussion. The question has widened and includes problem of high justice. It is now desirable to give Europe a real peace and deal with all the problems which regard colonies, lines of communication and raw material; in brief, to repair old and new errors."

TAR-FEATHERS CHARGES BRING JAIL SENTENCES

Mrs. Ethel Allen and Daughter Betty Sentenced at Calgary.

MAY APPEAL CASE

Calgary, Aug. 31—(CP)—Two Calgary society women, Mrs. Ethel Allen and her 23-year-old daughter, Betty, sentenced to jail on charges of assault by tarring and feathering a nurse, were held here today pending a possible appeal.

Sentenced yesterday by Magistrate D. C. Sinclair, the women may be out on bail within 24 hours if they request their counsel, J. McKinley Cameron, K.C. to apply for an appeal, Mr. Cameron said last night.

The 53-year-old mother and her daughter were convicted of having tarred and feathered Miss Alice Knowles last July 18 in an effort to break upon alleged "lewed and lascivious" friendship the nurse carried on with Mrs. Allen's husband, Dr. J. L. Allen.

Magistrate Sinclair said he was considering Mrs. Allen's age and neurotic condition in sentencing her to 45 days' imprisonment, with

British Navy Greatest Comfort to Britishers In Event of War, Say Experts

COMMAND OF SEAS

33 Capital Ships, 130 Cruisers, 14 Aircraft Carriers, 230 Destroyers and Torpedo Boats, 165 Submarines in United Navies

By DREW MIDDLETON
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 31—(AP)—The best comfort to most Britons in the present crisis is the navy, challenged but once since Trafalgar.

As the ships take up war dispositions—the Mediterranean fleet combined with the French fleet in that sea, and the home fleet "somewhere in the North Sea"—naval observers of neutral powers can see but one slim chance for the navies of the Berlin-Rome axis if war starts.

The chance is an effective aerial bombardment which would destroy the battleships and heavy cruisers, which form a fleet's main striking weapon. Such an attack, if successful, would revolutionize naval warfare.

Anglo-French Command of Seas

Barring the possibility of such an attack being carried out successfully, experts believe Great Britain and France would have virtual command of seas almost from the start of the war.

To these same observers the British and French strategy would be almost identical with that developed from the middle of June, 1916—after the battle of Jutland—on to the end of last year. This includes:

1. Immediate blockade of German—and in this case Italian—ports and coasts.
2. Provision of convoy for transport of men and supplies.
3. Patrol of French and British trade routes to prevent depredations by enemy cruisers and submarines.
4. Support of land operations by bombardment.
5. Bombardment of volunerable ports and coasts.

Guard Against Smash at Blockade

In addition to its offensive missions, the British-French fleet would have to be on constant guard against a German-Italian smash at the blockade. Nine out of 10 naval men tell you it would be folly for the axis fleets to meet the British and French navies in open battle but the chance is there, although it is more remote than in 1914.

SIX-MAN DEFENCE COUNCIL TO HEAD GERMAN POLICY

Virtual General Mobilization In Poland Causes Crisis To Take Dangerous Step

FORSTER IN BERLIN

British Reply To Fuehrer's Suggestion Arrives In Berlin And Delivered To Von Ribbentrop

Berlin, Aug. 31—(AP)—A six-man defence council headed by Air Minister Hermann Goering took supreme control of German economics, military policy and government administrative machinery today in a step which emphasized a darkening turn in the Polish-German dispute.

The order of virtual general mobilization in Poland yesterday was considered here to have caused the eastern European situation to take a dangerous step toward a showdown. The move aroused indignation in Berlin.

Shortly before midnight the cabinet announced from the Chancellery that the special council for defence of the Reich was being established "for the duration of the present foreign political tension."

Six in Group

A decree by Fuehrer Hitler created this little group of six men who will control almost every conceivable human activity in Germany, and the Fuehrer himself gave it authority almost equalling his own.

In addition to Field Marshal Goering the members of the council are:

Rudolf Hess, Deputy of Hitler and powerful figure in the Nazi party.

Wilhelm Frick, Minister of Interior, who controls the police organization of the Reich, including Henrich Himmler's secret service.

Wilhelm Keitel, war veteran, general and chief of the high command of the German army.

Walther Funk minister of economics and President of the Reichsbank who is driving the German economic machine even harder than his predecessor, Hjalmar Schacht.

Hans-Henrich Lammers, chief of Hitler's chancellery.

Forster in Berlin

Soon after announcement of formation of the council a government spokesman disclosed that Albert Forster, Nazi leader in Danzig and newly-created Danzig chief of state, had arrived in Berlin and it was assumed he had come for another important conference with Hitler.

His arrival gave rise to reports that Germany proposed to take positive action in respect to Danzig soon.

Record 'Second Day' Attendance Places Stamp of Approval On The 'Best Fair In Ten Years'

Eight Thousand Throng Grounds, Fill Grandstand and Track to Capacity to Enjoy Fine Show

KEEN INTEREST

Mrs. Joseph Phillips, Belleville Wins First of Two Cars with Ticket 34,292. Crowd cheers holder of First Ticket Drawn

Under the same blazing sun that characterized the opening day of the Belleville Fair on Tuesday, a crowd estimated at 8,000, placed its stamp of approval on the splendid exhibition that is now wholly conceded to be the finest provided by the Fair Board of Directors in years, yesterday as the second day of the three-day exhibition got under way.

Last evening as early as seven o'clock gate officials were hard-pressed to handle the stream of pedestrians and motorists that jammed entrances in order to get places and seats of vantage.

By nine o'clock the grounds echoed and re-echoed to the happy laughter and hum of conversation of the joyous throng as it milled good-naturedly through exhibition buildings, the midway and to fill the grandstand to capacity.

But the tense undercurrent that attends every function where a prize of major importance is to be given away, reached its climax shortly after the conclusion of the grandstand performance last night when the ticket was drawn from the circular drum to discover the winner of the handsome automobile, one of two given away by officials of the Fair.

Crowds Come Early

Previous to the announcement of the name of the holder of the winning ticket, the large throng estimated at four thousand people that not only filled the spacious grandstand to its limit, but crammed rows of impromptu seats that filled the racetrack to the platform edge, as well as the bleachers on either side of the stand, surged quietly towards the front.

On the sea of faces etched in cobblestone effect in the soft light beyond the footlights to the hazy recesses of the backfield, a tense look of expectancy suddenly flashed. A near-silence broken by the excited laugh of a woman fell over the scene.

Then the Master of Ceremonies, William Garden, selected three men and a young girl from the audience to officiate at the drawing.

Hush of Expectancy

The men whirled the large cylindrical drum that contained thousands of tickets under the supervision of President E. E. Bonter

PREMIER DALADIER CALLS MEETING OF HIS CABINET

Summons Follows Conference With Sir Eric Phipps At War Ministry

NO REASON GIVEN

Even in Times of Crisis a Call On So Short a Notice Is Unusual

Paris, Aug. 31—(AP)—Premier Daladier today summoned the cabinet to an urgent meeting at the Elysee Palace at 6 p.m. (1 p.m. EDT) immediately after a conference with British Ambassador Sir Eric Phipps at the war ministry.

President Albert Lebrun will preside over the meeting. No one in authority would give any indication of the reason for the meeting. Even in times of crisis, a call on so short a notice for the cabinet to meet with the President is unusual.

Early this afternoon it was learned that a force of more than 50 detectives swooped down on the central offices of the Communist party in France. They hustled a number of men from headquarters into police cars and drove off while some remained, presumably searching the offices.

Immediately after the cabinet call was issued, Daladier called General Maurie Gamelin and the Polish Ambassador Julius Lukasiewicz, to his office at the war ministry.

NEUTRALITY ACT WILL BE KILLED IF WAR COMES

President Says His Hands Tied by Provisions of Act

CANADA A FACTOR

By SAM ROBERTSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

New York, Aug. 31—(CP)—The United States Neutrality Act seems certain to receive a quick death-blow in the event that war breaks out in Europe.

The internationally-minded President Roosevelt is opposed to it. He has said it tied his hands and prevented him from taking a stronger stand in the crisis born of Germany's territorial demands on Poland. In the event of hostilities he will call a special session of congress and revision of the law will be one of the first orders of business.

British Naval Mobilization Order Completed, Regular Army Reserve And Supplementary Reserve Called

By J. F. SANDERSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 31—(CP Cable)—The British government today announced the armer forces of the country were being placed practically on a basis of mobilization.

The communique announcing the step read: The government has decided to complete naval mobilization and to call up the remainder of the regular army reserve and the supplementary reserve.

"A further number of Royal Air Force volunteer reserve will also be called up.

"Officers and men should await further instructions which will be made public immediately by each of the three service departments."

Britain's sudden move came the day after Poland put her forces in practically the same state of readiness for war and after official circles had expressed pessimistic views over the possibility of settling the Polish-German dispute by negotiation.

The order means the fleet will be mobilized and the army and air force will be brought up to full strength. Official sources denied it meant general mobilization.

Britain Waits on Two Governments

London, Aug. 31—(CP Cable)—The British government sat back today and waited for definite word from the Poles and Germans as to whether they would agree to settle their territorial claims around a conference table.

High government sources indicated their doubt as to whether the Poles would agree to Adolf Hitler's demand that they go to Berlin for conferences and suggested that negotiations, if they ever were held, would go to some neutral capital.

Questions to Be Answered.

Warsaw and Berlin were expected to supply the British government with answers to these questions:

1. Will Germany agree to call a military truce while conducting negotiations with the Poles on a basis of equality and freedom?

2. Will the Poles agree to negotiation with Hitler either in Berlin or elsewhere on his "minimum demand" of the return of Danzig and the Corridor to the Reich?

Hitler's original note agreeing to negotiate in Berlin with the Poles, but stating his minimum demands, was transmitted to Warsaw last night.

Will Not Hurry Poles

At the same time a reply was sent to Berlin, pointing out it was impossible to hurry the Poles into a decision and urging that negotia-

Paris Must Be Blacked Out, Decree Issued Today by French Gov't

Paris, Aug. 31—(AP)—The French government drove swiftly ahead today with its preparations for war, if it must come, by decreeing that Paris henceforth must be blacked out.

The diplomatic lines for peace negotiations were kept open, awaiting the next move by Germany. Across the Rhine border, however, French sources said, the German army already is on a wartime footing.

Through the Paris police an order was issued putting into execution the strict black-out laws already published. Under them every exterior light must be extinguished on Paris buildings and every window must be so screened that no ray of light escapes.

The government also issued its fifth appeal to the citizens of Paris who could leave the city to get out while transportation was still available.

The government moved 16,313 children out of Paris yesterday and today hoped to remove the remainder—about 34,000. Small children had their dolls and walked on station platforms with gas mask containers strapped to their tiny shoulders. It was just another train ride to most of them.

Thousands of applications to serve in the French army poured in on the government from political exiles and foreigners living in France.

Requests were voiced in the French press that the government do something about these applications from Germans, Austrians, Spaniards, Czechs, Italians, Albanians and White Russians. Some 3,000,000 foreigners live in France. The largest individual blocks are Italian and Spanish.

The largest white Russian newspaper in Paris, La Renaissance, carried a front-page editorial announcing all White Russians were called by the French government to the armed forces under the same conditions as Frenchmen.

"Russian refugees are proud to represent the Russian national forces who were the first to fight the Communist international; we share France's fate," the newspaper said.

City and District News

LATE CROPS SHOW SPLENDID GROWTH

The continued dry spell since the recent rains has resulted in noticeable hardening of the soil through the central area, but the land is still workable and fair conditions are reported for the majority according to local agricultural officials.

Late crops are showing good growth; the second crop of clover is well seeded, and root crops and potatoes in many cases are making up for the earlier slim production.

Stook threshing is practically completed in the majority of sections, but considerable barn threshing remains to be done. Yields have been well above expectation in grain, it is reported.

Freshened pastures have resulted in normal milk flow lately, and all stock in the section is reportedly in good shape. A fair amount of fodder is on hand for the winter, and no serious feeding problem is anticipated.

BATA SHOE OFFICIAL VISITS AT BROCKVILLE

Mr. Jan Bata, head of the Bata Export and Import Company, who has recently been in the district overseeing new construction of the company's new works at Frankford, is at present holidaying in the Thousand Islands section, and with Mrs. Bata and two daughters, is a guest of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Johnston of Brockville.

FIVE CONSTABLES ADDED TO DISTRICT

Five special constables were added to the Ontario Provincial Police District No. 8, with headquarters at Belleville, today. The arrival of the five new officers from Provincial Police Headquarters at Toronto was announced as a temporary measure only. Two of the Constables, W. J. French and Arthur Steen, were detailed to District Headquarters, Constable William Harris-Smith to Peterborough, Constable Herbert Howe to Madoc and Constable F. Darwin to the Napanee O.P.P. detachment. "Simply a precautionary move", remarked O.P.P. officials to-day.

HEAVY SHIPMENTS OF SUGAR RECEIVED

Though considerable stocking up on foodstuffs and supplies has been reported from larger cities since the threat of war loomed in Europe, local dealers and supply houses have yet to declare any unusual activity in buying locally.

Heavy shipments of sugar have been received and sold in Belleville lately, but these sales are believed due in large measure to the usual demand made each year during preserving and pickling time. A few heavy flour sales are reported by one local transport firm, but these are believed to wholesalers who might anticipate a sudden rush in the event of the outbreak of actual hostilities.

"There has been no evidence of any food hoarding lately, and no unusual selling has been reported", declared a representative of one supply firm.

There has been no recent change in grain prices noted lately in Belleville, nor any extra activity on the part of buyers, stated a grain supply house.

Police Blotter

Sneak thieves, operating under the cover of darkness, were again reported active pilfering cash from milk bottles off Murney Street recently. Milk dealers complained to the police yesterday, that money left for milk deliveries was being stolen. The matter is under police observation.

A bicycle ridden by Milton Frazer, of this city, was damaged after the bike collided with a motor car at the intersection of Earl and North Front Streets last evening. The motor car was driven by George Wannamaker, Mountain View. Frazer escaped without suffering serious injury.

Kenneth Good, Belleville reported the theft of a windbreaker to the police last night. The windbreaker had been left in Good's parked automobile at the Fair Grounds last night. During his absence taking in the sights, some person stole the windbreaker. Police warned motorists to lock their motor vehicles while in vicinity of the Fair Grounds.

Following reports that two men were acting rather suspiciously on Ponton Street late last night, Constables Wright and Thomson investigated and arrived in time to see two men disappear under the cover of darkness across the Yeomans Street commons.

The complainants stated the men were seen carrying a pail behind parked automobiles in that district. Later the police found a milk bucket nearby, which smelled strongly of the odor of gasoline. Nearby was an old model T Ford touring car, that neighbors stated had been parked by the two suspicious characters. The vehicle, which carried Ontario licence plate numbers 770-X-4 was immediately impounded by the police.

Today a man named Graves reported the vehicle as his and stated it had been stolen last night. Police are continuing their investigations.

POUND OF BUTTER PURCHASE WINS AUTO AT FAIR

Mrs. Joseph Phillips, Winner at Last Night's Performance Says Her Heart Gave a Quick Flip When She Realized She Had Winning Coupon

When Mrs. Joseph Phillips, 156 Church Street, purchased a pound of butter from the Allen grocery store on Dundas Street a few days ago, little did she dream that beneath the wrapper lurked a brand new Dodge automobile.

She placed the ticket given her by the grocerman in her purse, later copying the serial letter and number on a piece of paper on which several other numbers had been inscribed.

Last night at the Fair-Grounds when M. C. Billy Garden called out the number of the winning ticket, Mrs. Phillips stared in surprise. "My heart gave a quick flip. I couldn't believe my eyes. I said to Joe (her husband), I've got the winning ticket. I opened my mouth but could not speak for a moment. Then the number was called again and I managed to yell."

Mrs. Phillips' husband operates a coal-truck for the Conger-Lehigh Coal Company branch here. She won a rug last year at a contest, but "never dreamed she would win something big."

Asked how she felt after winning the car, she smiled, "it didn't bother me a bit, but I'll tell you confidentially, I didn't get to sleep until four o'clock this morning."

The first time in her life that she appeared before a crowd made her nervous last night, she said. "I kept thinking of what happened other people who couldn't find their tickets. I knew I had it, and when I finally found it I could scarcely speak."

The Phillips family owned a small car some time ago but do not own one at present. They think they will keep the car although there is a possibility of them selling it and getting a cheaper one, Mrs. Phillips said.

PURSE SNATCHERS ACTIVE AT FAIR

Mrs. Lorne Gerow, Bloomfield, Had Purse Taken On Fairgrounds

Purse snatchers were reported active at the Belleville Fair last night, Mrs. Lorne Gerow, Bloomfield, having her purse snatched from beneath her arm by a man, who successfully escaped in the large fair throng.

"We were walking towards our parked automobile after the draw for the car in front of the grandstand, when suddenly I felt my purse leave from beneath my right arm, where I always carry it. I turned around, but could only see the back of a man running between two tents. It was too dark to get a description of him," Mrs. Gerow informed city police. The white purse taken contained a small sum of money.

Chief Kidd revealed today that white purses are more easily seen at night and make a better target for purse snatchers. Chief Kidd also added women should keep one hand firm on their purse especially when being jostled in a crowd.

Other persons reported to police the loss of personal articles and wearing apparel from out of parked automobiles in and around the Belleville Fair Grounds.

"Motorists should take caution and securely lock their automobiles while attending any public celebration or performance, where there is a large crowd gathered. Sneak thieves, pick-pockets and purse snatchers always follow the large crowds, so it is advisable to take all precaution possible in protecting private property and goods under these circumstances," suggested Chief Kidd in warning to the public today.

Owing to the unprecedented rush at the gates at Belleville Fair Wednesday evening car coupons were exhausted. The directors regret this occurrence and announce that a plentiful supply will be on hand tonight to meet all demands.

BRITISH NAVY

Then the German imperial navy was second only to Britain and commanded guns and ships to come out under Admiral Scheer and attack the British fleet in an attempt to smash the blockade. The subsequent battle, Jutland, was the greatest naval action of the war. Although claimed as a victory for both sides, the Germans retired behind their mine fields and did not re-appear until they steamed to Scapa Flow.

Strength of France And Britain

On completion of their current construction programs, Britain and France will command 33 capital ships, 130 cruisers, 14 aircraft carriers, 195 destroyers and torpeda boats and 175 submarines.

Submarines would be the axis threat against enemy shipping in time of war. The British and French believe they have found the answer in new detection devices, more pwoerful depth charges and more effective armament for both merchantmen and men of war.

Safety School On Wheels Here Today

Belleville will be visited today from 4 to 7 by the Safety School on wheels in the course of an international tour. During the three months' 10,000 mile trek through eastern and New England and Canada, the travelling safety exhibit is expected to reach about 150,000 people in a score of states and provinces.

Actual results of errors in driving judgment are shown by police accident photographs. Devices that emphasize the importance of clear vision and thinking, are but a few of the many interesting and instructive presentations in the 25-foot specially built auto-trailer. It is towed by a station wagon fitted as an emergency ambulance carrying first aid and fire equipment.

Captain and Mrs. James A. W. Killip of Philadelphia, owners and directors of this unique educational project made a 15,000-mile coast to coast trip last year. During the winter they devote their time to safety and narcotic education in the Philadelphia and suburban schools.

Over $3,000 worth of equipment and the services of the four smartly uniformed attendants are being placed at the disposal of the local Police Department while in the city. Endeavoring to help make the drivers and pedestrians of this city accident conscious the services of the crew and equipment are being offered by a state and national civic organization.

One of the interesting phases of their demonstrations is the drunkometer, the balloon-breath test, for drinking drivers. Free auto safety emblems will be distributed to all drivers signing a safety pledge entitling him to membership in the "Not Over 50" club.

The tour has been approved by Judge Harry H. Porter of Evanston, Ill. Officials of the National Safety Council, insurance companies, auto clubs, and public officials are co-operating in making this international tour possible.

Belleville Fair's Larges Crowd In History Thronged Grounds Day Anc Night

Fair attendance, Wednesday—
Paid admissions to grounds—8917
Admissions to grandstand—
afternoon and evening—2785

Directors of the Belleville Fair yesterday registered the largest attendance records in the lengthy history of the organization, the above figures compiled by Treasurer F. G. Chamberlain being a 1,200 paid admission increase over the best day of the fair last year, while grandstand figures showed a corresponding increase.

Blue skies and cool winds tempered by the warm rays of a brilliant sun continued today to bring smiles and optimism to the directors and members of the Fair Board who confidently predicted that today's attendance would set even new and higher records. Since early morning a steady stream of visitors had been admitted to the grounds and during the day numbers seeking admission had been strengthened during the later hours. This afternoon and evening the attendance will, it was believed be a new high for paid admissions.

Today is Farmers' Day at the Fair, a day replete and full with the judging of the scores of beautiful animals making up an exhibit which was conceded by outside judges to be the largest and most complete ever exhibited at this class fair within the Province. The stables on the north and west side of the grounds have never before held such fine displays of horse flesh or cattle of the various types.

A full day's program has been arranged by directors, a program which included during the morning judging of carriage horses, the junior competitions in horse and cattle judging, cream grading and other events. This afternoon one of the features will be the excellent harness races which attracted hundreds to the track during the afternoon Wednesday. The same band concerts with different programs, the grandstand acts and other features on track and field will all combine to make the day one of full interest and entertainment.

Currency Discount Problem For Tourists

Discount CurrencyCanadian tourists proceeding to the United States are being advised to take sufficient United States funds for their needs as rates of exchange are taken at a wide variation. Canadian banks at border points in Quebec are charging four per cent, for U. S. funds, while at Newport, Vermont, Canadian funds are being discounted six per cent. One Ontario tourist crossing from New Brunswick through United States was even charged 25 per cent., or 50 cents on a $2 purchase for gasoline purchased at a service station in a small town in Maine. This resulted in the party living on a lunch carried in the automobile and avoiding other purchases.

THE DAILY ONTARIO INTELLIGENCER is published every afternoon (Sunday and holidays excepted) at The Ontario Intelligencer Building, Front Street, Belleville.

NOTE FOLLOWS NOTE

Day after day passes and the question of war or peace is undecided. Peace is still preserved, though armies greater than met in the shock of the Great War are drawn up and France for instance has man for man, at least with the Germans. All is in readiness, while heads of state and ambassadors receive and bear messages of the greatest import.

Intense secrecy is maintained about the contents of notes, and there is a consequent spirit of conjecture as to what is going on. Secrecy is necessary for diplomatic reasons until there is some likelihood of a definite trend.

To the man on the street, the wonder comes—how this state of tension can endure for now the world is at top pitch. Yet somehow the nerves of the people are steady under the progress of the crisis, though no one has said yet whether the nations are nearer an understanding or farther away than they were, when the crisis broke.

If the question should go to arbitration there is no doubt of a prolonged tension, though the degree of tension would probably slacken for a time.

MOTHER INSTINCT

The other day an eccentric threw in the air an open satchel from which fell black balls which for all the world looked like bombs. It was a crank's idea of stressing "peace", for he had this word on each of the balls.

But the "bombs" were real to mothers in the London Park for used as they were to the cry used in practice against air raids, namely "bombs", mothers on the grounds threw their children to the earth and covered the young ones with their bodies. It was mother instinct. Such would mothers do in actual warfare, for love of the child is the fondest instinct which has ever developed in all creation.

SCHOLARS AIR RAID DRILL

School children in England are almost enjoying the novelty of drilling to be followed in case of air raids. A tremendous burden rests upon the teachers, while their young charges follow the orders but are extremely lighthearted about the entire proceedings.

This is in keeping surely with the spirit of the sons and daughters of Britons.

THE FAIR'S EXHIBITS

In opinion of those who know the primal essentials of a fair Belleville district exhibition this year has struck the highest note in its history. This is the finest tribute to the zeal and the tireless activity and enterprise of the agricultural society. Only continuity of effort has made this possible and a long view of the possibilities of the society.

There is no reason why it should not be a great fair, because the district is basically such as demands an exhibition of those products which show the farm and countryside as they really are, one of the finest parts of Ontario and the Dominion.

Agriculture is claimed to be the basis of every nation. With it go industry and trade which are the basis of the city and rural life. With these two fairs are chiefly concerned.

With such progress as has been made and with support of country and city, the future of the fair should be bright and should show growth.

To find the exhibits so highly praised as by leading agriculturists is reason for congratulation and confidence.

By moral power we mean the power of a life and a character, the power of good and great purposes, the power which comes at length to reside in a man distinguished in some course of estimable or great conduct.— No other power of man compares with this, and there is no individual who may not be measurably invested with it.—Horace Bushnell.

The greater a man is in power above others, the more he ought to excel them in virtue. None ought to govern who is not better than the governed. — Publius Syrus.

Arbitrary power is the natural object of temptation to a prince.—Swift.

Nothing destroys authority so much as the unequal and untimely interchange of power, pressed too far and relaxed too much.—Bacon.

Neutrality, as a lasting principle, is an avidence of weakness.—Kossuth.

THE BAREFOOT BOY

Out in the summer morning
  Brushing the dews away,
Life seems a gay adventure
  With the dawning of each new day,
Fishing in sunlit waters,
  Swimming in waters cool,
Carefree the boy and happy
  Unmindful of work and school.

Holidays swiftly are passing
  Oh! how the glad hours fly!
Exploring the fields and woodland,
  Climbing the hillsides high,
Feeding on wild-wood berries
  And fruit of the harvest tree,
Tanned by the sun's caresses,
  Was ever a life so free!

Clothing does not impede him,
  No hat ever crowns his head,
His feet are brown and hardened,
  His back with sunburn red;
But oh! he's the lordly monarch
  Of all the rich countryside,
Like a king he rules triumphant
  His domain the whole world wide.

O boy of the sturdy bare feet,
  An emblem you are of joy,
The heart of the world grows younger
  At sight of the bare-foot boy;
For you bring to the aged and weary
  Bright visions of yester-year,
When life held its old-time glamor
  And the future held nought of fear.

—HELEN B. ANDERSON.

CROOKS ARE FINDING IT HARD GOING THESE DAYS. What with moneyed folks getting wised up to all the rackets through the newspapers and refusing to fall for the old-time rackets in modern form, their business is complicated by science which is always butting in to prevent a dishonest man from making an honest, or otherwise, living. Latest crook catcher reported is the telephone. "Telephone News" reports that a forger was recently apprehended at Ottawa who had been operating between Ottawa and Trenton but was stopped as a result of a three-minute long-distance conference call which simultaneously warned bankers at Brockville, Cardinal, Cornwall, Gananoque, Kingston, Lansdowne, Lyndhurst, Ottawa, and Trenton. Within 24 hours of this call, the forger was apprehended at Ottawa, according to "Telephone News". In a conference hookup participants can speak to or hear any of those on the other telephones, just as if the group were gathered in one room. And so the busy businessman has one more protection against the smiling gentry who toil not, neither do they spin, but continue to gather in the coin on various nefarious schemes which look good when presented in the usual high-pressure manner but crumble to dust when subjected to close independent scrutiny without the high pressure artist to gild and strengthen them.

x x x

ANOTHER MONDAY HOLIDAY IN THE OFFING — another busy Saturday with everybody rushing in the business centres to accomplish two days business in one. Saturday before a Monday holiday is the crook's delight, when "rubber" checks are easy to negotiate because they will not reach bank scrutiny before Tuesday. Beware of those bouncing checks, and purchases which require considerable cash change to the stranger customer.

x x x

THREE MEN WERE ARRESTED AT OTTAWA and charged at Brockville with obtaining money under false pretences. The case concerns an advertising program for the Twelfth of July celebration at Perth. It is alleged that the programs were not published until after the celebration and were about as useful as a last year's birdsnest, that they never reached Perth at all. It is alleged that the original promoters, or others, collected for the advs. in the program, in some instances twice over. Fifty advertisers in Brockville fell for the program which did not appear until the Battle of the Boyne was over, a number in Kingston, Gananoque, Ottawa and other places. Another case of a similar nature was recently heard in Oshawa court concerning a book which was to have been published for a Ukranian church at the expense of advertisers who claimed that they put up their money but failed to get performance from the promoters. These high pressure salesmen who can get cash in advance without value received must be good — but their undoubted talents could be put to better use for themselves and society in general.

SAID THE "EAGLE" TO THE "BEAR"

Said the German "Eagle" to the Russian "Bear",
I'll bet that old "Austin" thinks we're quite a pair,
And the fright that we gave him o'er that trade pact deal,
Will make him think that he has a wound to heal.
So now's the time to rub it in
And see if the "Lion" will create a din,
And if he doesn't, then it's plain to be seen
That we both can grab a piece of the Polish skin,
But the "Lion" heard in his tight little den
About the story of the two bad men,
And he called his "Cubs" who have grown quite big,
And decided to kick them both in the rib;
He also called in a few more of the boys
Who were not afraid of the big, bad noise,
So they sallied forth in the dead of night
And the "Eagle" lost all its feathers in flight—
The poor "Bear" in distress, as he shed his coat,
Said "I might have known I'd be Ribbentrop's goat".

THAT BODY OF YOURS

By James W. Barton, M.D.

What Makes Youngsters Slump?

At many preparatory schools there is a physical examination at beginning of the term and those with a poor posture— standing or sitting— are put in a special class and given special exercises to help them to keep the body erect. All the teachers make it a point to check a boy who assumes a "slouched" or stooped position.

There is always the question as to whether the poor posture causes the symptoms of fatigue, indigestion, constipation and other conditions, or whether these conditions cause the poor posture.

However, getting boys (and girls) to attain an erect carriage needs more than just speaking to them. Dr. Alvia Brockway, Los Angeles, in Hygeia, says "Instead of constantly exhorting their children to stand up straight, parents should attack the underlying causes of poor posture as well as provide the child with definte posture training. The child who slumps generally does so because, for some reason, he is fatigued. In some instances this reason may be that he is not getting enough rest to supply his needs for energy. Too many picture shows or radio programs in the evening frequently interfere with proper rest. The tired attitude may be due to enlarged adenoids, diseased tonsils or sinuses, faulty vision or constipation."

I believe these two explanations of the cause of faulty posture—lack of rest and infection somewhere in the body—account for the majority of cases.

The thought then is for parents and teachers to study the daily habits of the "slumping" youngster, because early correction will prevent "permanent" curves in the back. We all have four curves in the back—back of neck (forward), at shoulder blades (backward—round back), at small of back (forward—sway back) and at big muscles on which we sit (forward). When a youngster slumps he increases these curves and if he slumps long enough this increase in the curves will become permanent.

If your youngster slumps, have him examined by your physician and dentist and watch his daily habits as to rest, food, and exercise. Teach him to stand and sit tall, always.

Dr. Brockway advises that in severe cases, an orthopedic specialist should be consulted.

FIFTY BABIES CONTEST PRIZE AT LOCAL FAIR

Entry List is Unusually Large, Each Group Being Closely Contested

Fifty tiny visitors invaded the band stand at the Fair Grounds promptly at three o'clock yesterday afternoon to take part in the baby show, an annual feature event of growing popularity. Not only were local infants entered but there were many contestants from out of town, one of whom captured a prize, the Belleville babies sweeping all other classes.

There were prizes for boys and girls in two groups — under six months, and from six months to one year. Space about the band stand was at a premium as fond relatives and friends awaited the results of the judging.

Miss Neta Bush, Reg. N., assisted by Miss Beth Stock as registrar, acted as judge and performed her exacting task to perfection in spite of the keenest competition from the group of beautiful, healthy babies who made up the entry list.

After much deliberation the following were announced as winners:

Boys, six to twelve months—First, Gordon St. Louis, son of Mr. and Mrs. St. Louis, 25 Brock street; second, George Craig Platt, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clair Platt, Wellington.

Boys under six months — First, Murray Phillips, son of Mr. and Mrs. B. Phillips, 26 Turnbull street; second, Thomas Maxwell Turner, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Turner, 77 Cedar street.

Girls, six to twelve months—First, Barbara Ann Pointer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Pointer, 34 Colborne street; second, Diene Jane Hales, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. Hales, 57 Dunbar street.

Girls, under six months — First, Isabelle Margaret Kidd, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. Kidd, 188 Victoria avenue; second, Barbara Ann Clapp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. Clapp, 244 Ann street.

Recipe for Mrs. Cook's Prize-Winning Biscuits

I'VE sampled lots of tea biscuits in my time, but I have never tasted any that so completely tickled my fancy as those baked by Mrs. George E. Cook, R. R. 5, Acton, Ontario. Her biscuits are really wonderful. So light and flaky, so creamy, so meltingly delicious. Served with maple syrup, honey, apple sauce or preserved fruit, they are superb. Here's a copy of Mrs. Cook's own recipe—do try them!

2 cups sifted Robin Hood Flour
4 level teaspoons Baking Powder
½ teaspoon Salt
4 tablespoons Shortening
¾ cup of Milk

Sift the dry ingredients at least twice. Work in the shortening, then add the milk. Mix lightly as possible. Pat into shape and cut with a floured cutter. Bake in a hot oven, 425° F., for 15 minutes.

Mrs. Cook says: "Speed in mixing plays a big part in the lightness and flakiness of biscuits. The dough must be soft and light and handled as little as possible after adding the milk." Be sure to use Robin Hood Flour. It is famous for the flavor, texture and lightness it produces in bread, biscuits, and, in fact, all baking.

Sincerely,
Evangeline

3-Day Fair's Value Proven Says President Who Suggested Change From 4-Day Show

Farmers Want Three-Day Exhibition, Because Harvest Days are Busy Time —President will Get Views of Exhibitors on Question

President Earl E. Bonter of the Belleville Fair Board was the happiest man on the Exhibition Grounds last night.

On his face was a broad smile one that was not there altogether because of the fact that his prize Holstein bull had won the grand championship of its class, and one of his cows had likewise annexed the grand champion female award in her division.

For President Bonter, as he watched the thousands milling about the midway, the grandstand, the livestock pens and exhibition buildings was watching the result of a suggestion made to the board some time ago and which has brought a handsome dividend in the form of a record entry list, and near record attendances.

3-Day Fair Answer

"What is the answer to these record-breaking events?" he was asked. His face adopted a thoughtful look.

"The three-day fair", he answered simply.

Asked to amplify his statement, President Bonter stated, that the change from the usual four-day exhibition to the present year three-day fair was suggested by him to the board merely as an experiment this year. That it is a success is plain to be seen, he said.

"Farmers want the three-day exhibition, in view of the fact that one of the most important weeks in the year, harvest week is not entirely spoiled. The four-day fair practically ruins the entire week for these men, and at a time when there is plenty of work to be done on the farm. Give them three days, and they can get back home in time to get some mighty important work done."

"Personally I am in favor of the three-day exhibit and I am going to get a consensus of opinion from the exhibitors as to which they think is the best.

Favors Continuance

"I think the exhibitors answer to the three-day exhibition is seen in the record number of entries we had this year, and in the box-office attendance. People stall off their attendance to the last two days anyway, and that removes some of the overhead cost. I am heartily in favor of continuance of the three-day exhibit."

"We are proud of the fair this year, and I think the majority of the people who have attended say the same", President Bonter stated. "We left no stone unturned to make it the banner fair of the district, and I must congratulate every director on the board for the unselfish efforts they have put forth to attain this end."

"The Grandstand Show is the best we have had in years, so are the livestock entries, but why go into detail. We all feel this is the best fair Belleville has had in years, and we are not only proud of that fact but also thankful for the expression of appreciation of the general public as exemplified in the entries and attendance", he concluded.

ITALIAN ARMY

Italy meanwhile went ahead with defence measures. While civilians were deprived of coffee, as that commodity was reserved for the troops, it was announced that if war comes there would be enough bread for everyone.

Reliable sources said Premier Mussolini was striving to moderate Fuehrer Hitler's demands. They thought it likely that Mussolini would make a conciliatory move for a peace conference.

The ill-fated Squalus hit the surface in a smother of foaming water as U.S. navy salvagers completed the last of three lifts to bring the under-water craft to the surface.

RECORD

and a number of his directors of the Fair Board. Again the hush of expectancy as dainty little Miss Catharine Beniakowski of Point Anne inserted her hand in the aperture of the cylinder and drew forth a ticket.

It was almost quiet now. Then a gradual surge forward as Mr. Garden announced that the lucky ticket was numbered "C—34,292."

He announced the conditions of the draw. No response came. He read the number again. Disappointed people sighed audibly then looked up in expectancy as a faint shout from the faraway bleachers on the left side of the grandstand announced the presence of the winner.

Afew minutes later, Mrs. Joseph Phillips, 156 Church Street, shaking visibly with excitement walked to the stage microphone. She was plainly nervous but quietened as Mr. Garden uttered a few soothing words. In her hand she held a number of ticket lists. From her purse she drew forth bundles of tickets. The orchestra leader stepped forward to assist her and within a minute Mrs. Pihlips had become the proud owner of the brand new automobile. She thanked the folks graciously over the microphone, and cheers rang out from a disappointed but sportsmanlike crowd.

Grandstand Show Applauded

Previous to the draw, the large crowd sat in, at times breathless suspense as the talented performers that comprise the Canadian Vaudeville Exchange show on the raised dais in front of the grandstand, went through their various acts. They cheered each act to the echo, laughed uproariously at the comedians, gasped as dare-devil equilibrists swung in midair, and clapped enthusiastically as a bevy of dancing "Marquisettes" pirouetted and whirled their way through several intricate dance numbers. The grandstand show, according to the directors and to the vast majority of the huge crowds that have enjoyed it thus far, is the finest ever brought to Belleville in a similar capacity.

A Joyous Aftermath

Four thousand people suddenly let loose upon an already crowded Midway caused that popular "street of entertainment" to jam to its capacity. Filled with stage entertainment the majority of the large grandstand throng lingered to enjoy the fun and jollity that only the Midway can produce.

Barkers roared their wares in a frenzy of tone. Sideshows did a landoffice business. The brilliant lights of wheels, merry-go-rounds, "octopus", and other whirling aerial rides gleamed brighter as a laughing, joyous throng availed itself of their delights.

Food concessions were taxed to capacity. Novelty sellers were busier than the proverbial one-armed collection taker. Games of chance, fortune tellers, shooting galleries, had a field day as a typical Hastings-Prince Edward and in fact, Eastern Ontario crowd of fairgoers enjoyed themselves to the utmost. It was a grand day and night, and that broad smile that was apparent on the faces of President Earl Bonter, and his genial directors was not wholly because of the fact that he won several prizes with his pure-bred livestock.

Nor were the exhibition buildings lacking for crowds. A loudspeaker advised the youth of the district that dancing was in progress, while the older generations were content with admiring the beautiful displays that the merchants of the city and district as well as the rural residents and farmers have provided for their admiration. Each building was the centre for transient crowds of spectators.

Afternoon Crowd Good

The afternoon attendance compared favorably with any in the last ten years. Incomparable fair weather played heavily in favor of the exhibition, and in spite of the heat that at times reached intensity, the happy crowd took full advantage of the opportunity to vie the exhibits and enjoy other special events that were part of the afternoon program.

Again the exhibition buildings were crowded with an intensely interested mass of people. The Belleville Municipal Bands, with coats and hats cast aside, again rendered one of those splendid programs for which it is justly famous. The grandstand again packed with curious thrill-seeking people echoed and re-echoed to the applause of the crowd as the Canadian Vaudeville Exchange galaxy of talented artists thrilled them with superb entertainment.

Another event that drew the acclaim of a large part of the crowd especially horselovers was the judging of the heavy draught classes and the roadster class. Proud Percherons, and haughty Clydesdales of both sexes and of all ages paraded proudly in the judging ring before the critical eyes of the judges and the admiring ones of the spectators.

Proud - spirited carriage teams vied for public and official favor as they minced and pranced along beneath a blazing sun. Drawn up on the track in front of the grand stand, several splendid specimens of these horses and their drivers heard the large crowd's plaudits.

On the track, speeding standardbreds in races that were fought from start to finish, whetted the racing appetites of the lovers of this particular sphere of sport. Under the keen eyes of Starter George O. Tice, the races were gotten under way well on schedule with some thrilling events being provided by drivers and horses alike.

Police Control Traffic

Much of the success of the evening performance was attributed to the splendid handling of the large crowd of pedestrians and motors by Chief Alex Kidd and those of his members of the Belleville City police force, detailed for duty at the fair.

City Traffic Officer Douglas Ellis, did a splendid job in handling traffic near the gates, while Police Constable William Evans and Horace Wright were on duty near the grand stand and on the Midway.

Inspector Gardner of the O.P.P., and some of his force were also on duty. However the crowd was very orderly according to the officers, and little difficulty was experienced.

Final Day Today

Today will mark the last day of the fine edition of the 1939 Belleville Fair. With a crowd yesterday that broke all attendance records for "second days" directors anticipate another record crowd tonight, when the second and last of two automobiles will be given to a lucky ticket-holder.

With the grandstand attendance last night taxing every available seat in the stand, the bleachers and on the track to capacity, directors today are making arrangements to seat a yet larger throng that they anticipate will attend the "windup" of the Fair. Additional seats will be placed on the track and near the bleachers so that those forced to stand last night will be able to view the performance and "draw" with a better modicum of comfort.

Farming Greatest Occupation Open To Young Man of Today W. A. Newman Tells Gathering

400 Junior Farmers and Girls Gather for Annual Banquet at Fair

FARMING AN ART

Not Bare Drudgery but a Job where all Faculties Can be Used says Speaker

Four hundred junior farmers of the Counties of Hastings, Prince Edward and Northumberland and friends, who gathered in the auditorium of Holloway Street United Church last evening on the occasion of the annual junior banquet tendered by the Trenton Dairies, Swift Canadian Company, Belleville branch, Maple Valley Dairy, Stirling Creamery and the Belleville Fair Board heard their profession described by Wm. Newman, ex-M.L.A., present member of the Co-operative and Marketing branch as the greatest occupaton open to young men and women of today.

"And never were the young men and women of the country better prepared and better equipped to take up the profession of agriculture in all its allied lines as they are today," declared Mr. Newman.

Farm Drudgery Seen No More

Farming of today is not the bare drudgery and toil once so commonly associated with the very word 'farming'. Today the art of farming is a highly individualized and specialized work, made pleasant by latest improved machinery and farm aids which are being constantly improved, impressed the speaker.

The annual banquet, perhaps the largest on record, and attended by more junior farmer competitors of the various classes during the day at the Belleville Fair than ever before registered, was presided over by Mackenzie Robertson of the Maple Valley Dairy who acted as chairman.

In his introduction of the noted speaker, Mr. Robertson described Mr. Newman as one who had devoted his life to the culture of the soil and the interests of the younger representatives of the profession. A son of the pastor of Holloway Street United Church, Wm. Newman had distinguished himself through his work in dairying and mixed farming and had studied his job to make it the success it is.

In his remarks, Mr. Robertson paid tribute to the worthy work of the ladies of Holloway Street Church and commended all members for the thoughtful and complete arrangements made for the annual dinner. To the members of the Belleville Fair Board, chairman Robertson also extended warm praise.

Youth Must Take Up The Work

Mr. Earl Bonter, president of the Fair Board in his reply, declared that for years he had enjoyed the privilege of being closely connected with junior activities of his own county and the Belleville Fair. "I have always held up both hands for junior work in favor of it all the time. You boys and girls in this hall are the farmers of tomorrow, and it will be up to you to take the places of the older ones within the next very few years" added President Bonter. To the creameries the fair president voiced his thanks for the interest displayed and the help given junior farmers of the counties.

Lyall Hunter, manager of the Belleville branch of the Swift Canadian Company, speaking on behalf of the creamery interests, declared the pleasure it had been to be associated with such a worthy work, that of the junior organizations. Now in its fourth year, the annual banquet, he stated had become a yearly institution which had become one of the most talked of events in connection with the Belleville Fair. "We have had more entrants and a bigger and better competition than ever this year, which proves that even better things may be in store," declared Mr. Hunter.

Opportunity Lies Just Ahead

Mr. Newman in his address to the younger farmers present congratulated them upon their choice of being born in the present age when so much opportunity, he said, awaited.

"None of us is given that gift to look ahead and see what may be coming, but these things we do know, that a healthy body, a healthy mind and a soul are the attributes not only of successful farming, but of successful living. We need all three before we can get along. We know that on the farm, which work presents glorious opportunity for the youth of today, that we can receive that education which only the soil can give. An education in character which no city born and bred child can hope to get."

"Is there anything more beautiful than the calf or the colt, or even the pig that you raise on your own farm?" asked the speaker.

The chances that were presented to youth of today through owneriship of a farm were enumerated by Mr. Newman.

"He can be outdoors at work instead of being tied to the stuffy office. He can grow his own vegetables and raise his own family sincere in the knowledge, that as long as the soil is there he will never starve. He can purchase his farm today at less value than ever before in history, a purchase price less than the cost of buildings upon the farm. "And even though it be weed-choked and in disuse, the sun still shines and the rain still falls and all that is needed is work to produce a rich living."

Farmer at Last Recognized

Farming is not the drudgery of old, continued the speaker. Present machinery has taken all heavy work from the shoulders of the farmer and farm wife alike. Today the farmer is looked up to and respected. Even the politicians have come to recognise the farmer as a leading figure of the municipal life. Never before has he commanded as much respect and attention.

Mr. Newman refuted statements that every child born in the country today was born into debt. Through the use of cold figures he revealed the assets of Hydro, roads and mineral wealth, forests and streams.

"In Hydro alone we have an asset of $109 millions as a clear asset. You own Hydro; it is yours. But that is only part of the wealth of this country. What of the timberlands and the natural resources? Instead of being born into debt, each Canadian child is born with assets of some $400 in actual wealth."

In his advice to choose well the life's work that is intended, Mr. Newman reminded again that nothing was so "honorable or independent" as tilling the soil and creating one's own wealth year after year.

"But if you farm, then farm. Learn all you can and never stop learning. For that is the only way you will succeed," he added.

Following the speaker's address, the names of the various competitions at the Belleville Fair were then read by Miss Greta Pollard and Mr. A. H. Martin.

an additional 15 days in default of payment of court costs. He found Betty Allen had been induced by her mother to help in the assault and sentenced her to 15 days' and a fine of $100 with an additional 30 days in jail in default of payment.

Mother Gasps at Sentence

As the sentences were passed, Mrs. Allen gasped and clung, sobbing, to her daughter's arm. Miss Allen stood straight and showed no emotion except that tears slowly welled to her eyes.

"I would think there is a chance of appealing" said Mr. Cameron last night in disclosing that police will hold the women here for a day or more pending a possible appeal application. If an appeal is not sought, they will be taken to Fort Saskatchewan jail, 20 miles east of Edmonton.

Final defence argument hinged upon whether or not provocation at the discovery July 18 that the friendship between Miss Knowles and Dr. Allen, supposedly ended late in 1938, still continued between the two caused a mental condition that would justify Mrs. Allen's action.

Presenting Argument

Crown Prosecutor M. H. Staples maintained that if the charge against Mrs. Allen was dismissed it would have to be on the ground of insanity. He said evidence showed Mrs. Allen knew what she was doing and had planned the assault.

Magistrate Sinclair said he could see no ground for provocation or insanity as the evidence before him showed premeditation and deliberation on the part of Mrs. Allen. Crown Prosecutor Staples' summary of the case was "fair," he said.

NEUTRALITY ACT

The President's desire that the act be rewritten was thwarted at the last session of congress. Now, however, the leaders of the forces that defeated him are reported coming around to his view. They are described as confident the other dissenters "can be made to see the light."

Big Business Interested

There is no doubt where big business stands on the question and big business has a very big voice. The act would halt the shipment of all implements of warfare to all belligerents. That would be a bitter pill for big business.

In talk of possible revision of the neutrality legislation, a "cash-and-carry" plan is the one most often suggested as a substitute. Under it warring nations could buy what and when they pleased in the vast United States market, but it would be a cash proposition and the purchaser's problem to get it across the Atlantic.

Such a plan would weigh heavily in favor of Great Britain and France. Their mighty fleets would be available for protection of shipments. And those fleets would be a tremendous obstacle to German steamships and those of her allies.

Canada Big Factor

The proximity of Canada has been a factor in the seeming retreat from the embargo provision of the act. If United States munitions makers, manufacturers of boots and such could not sell directly to Britain, there is nothing to prevent them from getting around the embargo by establishing plants in the neighboring Dominion. Judging by the experience of the Great War, a business plum of many billions is at stake.

When that last great holocaust enveloped the world, the neutrality act invoked by the United States at its inception contained no provision blocking trade with the belligerents. The allies bought freely and, for a time, Germany got around the allies' naval blockade by having American goods shipped to The Netherlands and neutral Scandinavian countries for later trans-shipment. But as the Anglo-French blockade was perfected this flow of goods was reduced to a trickle.

BRITISH AMBASSADOR CHEERED

Here is the scene on Downing St. in London, as thousands thronged the way to cheer Sir Nevile Henderson, British ambassador to Germany, as he passed along the famous thoroughfare to No. 10 Downing St., to confer with Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain on the results of his visit to Adolf Hitler.

THE GLASS SLIPPER

By Mignon G. Eberhart

And it must have been Gross who remembered that there usually was a policeman somewhere about the house. Later Rue had hazy memory of herself huddling against the buffet in the dining room and hearing Gross's voice, husky and unnaturally high, shouting at someone who was apparently in the street outside the house. The front door banged, and feet came down the hall.

And it was really then that the deluge began.

It was a repetition of the night following Julie's murder, only it was worse. And it was all unutterably confusing.

But there was another thing Rue was to remember out of the confusion, and that was Brule's return.

For he came before the homicide squad arrived. Came just after Rue had heard them making frenzied telephone calls to the police headquarters. He came and was met in the hall and cried instantly on hearing the news:

"Where's Mrs. Hatterick?"

Rue cried: "Brule.... Brule...." and he came and met her there at the door of the dining room.

"Rue—they say you found her!"

"Yes. Oh, Brule—"

"Who did it?"

"I don't know. Someone was in the house. The lights were turned off—Brule—" She was shivering He put his arms around her and drew her closer to him.

"You're sure you're all right? I've got to go in there—"

"Don't leave me."

It was then she saw it. The infinitely small, infinitely trivial thing that was so difficult to forget. He still wore his overcoat but had tossed hat and gloves down somewhere. She had put one hand on his shoulder, and he put his own hand to cover it, and all around the square clear fingernail of the middle finger there was a faint red line. A line that was—that could be nothing less but dried blood. She had seen it too many times; there was no possible chance of her making a mistake. She must have caught her breath a little, the wet patch on Rachel's coat too fresh in her memory, for Brule looked at her sharply, followed her gaze and released her hand abruptly to look at his own.

He frowned.

"Glove broke while I was operating," he said quickly. "I scrubbed up afterward in a hurry. It was a long operation, and I was anxious to get home." It was dismissed. Forever, so far as Brule was concerned.

"Stay here, Rue. I've got to take a look."

He joined the men in the studio. In another moment they were searching the house.

Yes, it was the same kind of ordered, engulfing deluge that had fallen upon them, had submerged the house and all within it after Julie's death.

Only it was worse.

This time there was no doubt that it was murder. This time there was no doubt that those other deaths had been murders.

At the time of Julie's death there had been enough doubt as to the manner of her death, enough prestige belonging to the Hatterick name, to induce what the newspapers later called a kid-glove handling of the situation.

There was no more of that.

The witnesses were separated immediately, questioned alone and without a chance to make their stories agree.

Lieutenant Angel himself questioned Rue mainly, although Miller and even Funk, as well as several detectives whose faces were known to her, questioned too.

"You were alone in the house?"

"Yes. Except for Gross and—"

"Yes, we know. Yet you saw the light turned out in the studio?"

"But no one was in the studio?"

"Only—Rachel. I saw no one else. But the manuscript fell off the piano. A door or window must have opened—closed—I don't know."

"There was a strong enough current of air to blow that paper off the piano. Yet you don't know whether a door or window was open?"

"No. The curtains had been pulled."

"Do you expect us to believe the murderer actually left that room and you didn't see or hear anybody leave?"

"I don't know. I'm only telling what I saw.

Perhaps they would leave it at that, ask other questions. (When had she last seen Rachel? Exactly what had Rachel told her about the streaks of green on her hands? How long had she been alone in the house?), then slyly, unexpectedly, someone would return to it: "You say you saw a light in the studio?"

CHAPTER TWENTY-EIGHT

Police were all over the house. By midnight, and after hours of inquiry, there emerged certain salient facts.

Rachel had been stabbed and had been stabbed so efficiently that she had died almost at once, if not instantly. Her hat, gloves and pocket-book were in her room, in the servants' wing at the end of the fourth floor, tossed as if hurriedly across the bed. The police deduced, after suitable inquiry of Gross and the other maid and the cook, that Rachel had taken her hours out, returned, gone straight to her room and after hurriedly removing hat and gloves and tossing down her pocketbook, had gone downstairs immediately to the library. Thus, because she was not in her uniform and had no duties in the library, she had gone there to meet someone.

And her hands were stained with those unpleasant, troublesome streaks of green.

Rue told them all she knew about that. The servants knew it too; they were terrified, superstitious. But Rachel herself hadn't known—or had claimed she hadn't known—where the stain came from or how it got on her hands.

"I warned her," said Gross, quavering and eyes as blank as walls of concrete. "I warned her. It was a sign—"

"What had she gone to her room to get? Do you know?"

And Gross did know.

"The charts," he said. "It must have been the charts. I always thought she had removed them herself. The charts for the first Mrs. Hatterick.... when she died."

It was after that, probably, that they questioned Rue again in her bedroom after letting her rest an hour.

As to the charts, Rue only knew that she had questioned Rachel about the charts, that she'd thought in spite of Rachel's denials that the girl knew something of them.

"Why would she take them from the room?"

"I don't know."

"Gross says she was crying this afternoon. Why?"

"I don't know," said Rue. And suddenly remembered the girl's interview with Brule in his little study. The girl—she'd been sure it was Rachel—sobbing; Brule in a white heat of rage, which he suddenly controlled, so his voice was almost coaxing when he said: "Bring them—bring them to me at once."

Bring what? The charts? Then Brule knew. And Brule had been furiously angry and trying, which was unusual with Brule, to conceal that anger. Brule—gone all afternoon, returning just after the murder was discovered — with blood around his fingernail.

"So you don't know why she was crying?"

"No," said Rue instantly.

After all, that scene between Rachel and Brule was not evidence. Why tell the police?

But she remembered it after they'd gone.

Brule himself came finally; he knocked and as she answered spoke to someone outside and entered. She sat up, and he came and sat beside her on the bed. He was gray with fatigue.

"Rue, child...." he said, leaning over to push her hair gently back from her forehead. "I didn't—lord knows I never meant to plunge you into anything like this. If I'd known—but how could I!"

"What are they going to do? What have they done? Have they made any arrest?"

They hadn't, Brule explained.

"They've got a police guard all around the place. They've made a minute search. They can't find any knife or instrument that had any bloodstains on it. There are knives in the kitchen—there's a long paper knife in the library that's sharp; but so far they aren't certain. They've got to make an arrest soon."

"Who?"

He looked away from her and said he didn't know. "You see, it's simmered down just now to a question of alibis."

"And I—I was alone—"

"You aren't the only one without an alibi," said Brule quickly. "I was driving home. I could have done it. The door leading from the studio into the back lawn (that goes to the gate in the wall, the tradesmen's entrance) — that door was open, and the gate is always unlatched. Anybody could have escaped that way."

"But Steven and Madge and Alicia—"

"Were not together," said Brule grimly. "Alicia and Madge went into a store to do some shopping. Steven sat in the car for a while, then told Kendal he was going to the drugstore for something or other and left him. Steven met all three an hour later at one of the Randolph Street doors—but he'd waited, he told them, at the wrong door. Kendal was to pick up Alicia and Madge at the door nearest Wabash; Steven said he'd waited at the Randolph Street door nearest State Street; but nevertheless, though Kendal went around the block a couple or three times, Steven says he didn't see the car. And Alicia and Madge had separated inside the store; Alicia went to the seventh floor for a fitting; Madge to the fifth for dancing slippers. You see, any of them could have taken a taxi and returned to the house. There'd have been plenty of time. And Guy was in his house next door the whole time," added Brule unexpectedly. "Alone, reading, he says. With access to the back yard and the studio door. And Andy—"

"Andy....?"

"Certainly; why not? Andy was in his office, he says, but the office girl had a headache, and he let her go home early. He was there when I telephoned; the police had him come here. It's pretty evident just whom the police include in their list of suspects," said Brule a trifle wryly. "They waste no time rounding us up."

"And no arrest," said Rue slowly, seeking into Brule's eyes. But if he knew — or feared — more he would not tell her. He said instead with a pretense of briskness: "So you see, it all simmers down to alibis. And since they're pretty certain the same fellow murdered Julie and Rachel (and for the same motive in all likelihood, and that was the knowledge of Crystal's death), then the question of alibis for Julie's murder comes into it too. Steven, now, had a perfect alibi for the time of Julie's murder. You gave it to him yourself."

Rue thought of Brule's words the next morning, when the police brought her the curious thing—the broken record—they had found.

But then she suddenly clung to Brule.

Acern oils took a half poin drop. Action continued light on the decline and only 244,000 shares changed hands in the first three hours.

WALL ST.

New York, Aug. 31—(AP)— Wall Street didn't like the looks of the European war-peace game today and the stock market took another step downward.

Consoling to analysts, however, was the fact offerings were even lighter than in the preceding listless session. Early losses, running to a point or so, were reduced later, but declines of 2 or 3 came into the list near the fourth hour.

Prominent stocks on the offside were Westinghouse, Du Pont, United Aircraft, U.S. Steel, Bethlehem, Chrysler, General Motors, Montgomery Ward, American Telephone, Anaconda and J. I. Case.

Pushed back fractionally in the Canadian section were Dome, Distillers and International Nickel. Hiram Walker, however, moved up. Dominion 4s were under fair presure in the bond market.

Recipients of Many Gifts—Family Join In Celebration

MARRIED IN ENGLAND

Fifty years of happily married life, of congenial associations that have lasted a half century and a mutual companionship that has broadened down through the years was celebrated today at 5 Ridley Street when Mr. and Mrs. John Neal, residents of this city and vicinity for the past thirty-two years observed their golden wedding anniversary.

At noon today surrounded by their five children and seventeen grandchildren and intimate friends Mr. and Mrs. Neal were the recipients of handsome gifts, as well as many messages of congratulation from a wide circle of friends.

Fifty beautiful yellow roses in handsome basket, the gift of loving grandchildren, graced the table at which sat the guests of honor. A splendid electric clock, bearing the love and congratulations of the "bride and groom's" five children also occupied a conspicuous place. Throughout the day friends c at the home to extend their felicitations on the attainment of fifty years of marital bliss.

Married In England

Mr. and Mrs. Neal were married at Clophill, Bedfordshire, England, by the Rev. Mr. Doubleday, minister of St. Mary's Church, in August, 1889. Coming to Canada in 1907 they resided in Napanee until 1911 when they moved to Belleville. Here on Gilbert Street, just outside the city limits, Mr. Neal operated a successful market garden until three years ago, when he retired from active life.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Neal are in excellent health. Daily they do their work about their home, and find time to extend their activities to working for organizations outside the home circle. Members of Bethel Hall, the elderly couple have devoted much of their time and efforts in the past to the furtherance of the work of this denomination. Even now, Mr. Neal takes a important part in services held b his denomination, when it visi the Home for the Aged.

Treated Kindly By Years

The years have treated Mr. and Mrs. Neal kindly. Mutual helpmates from the start, the years have but straightened the bond of love and comradeship, that have been the prime factors of a half-century of contentment, love and happy association.

Today in the presence of their family, they again relived those years, content that the future can hold nothing but that simple sincere happiness that has been their lot since first they met.

Five children blessed the union, three sons, W. E. Neal, Verdun, Que.; Walter, Belleville, and Reginald of Detroit, and two daughters, Mrs. J. O. Collyer, Weston, Ont., and Mrs. V. Boston of Napanee. These with seventeen grandchildren today congratulated their parents at a joyous family reunion held at the parental home.

Hamilton, Ont., Aug. 31—(CP)—Thirty guards recruited from the ranks of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders went on duty at the Burlington Beach Canal at midnight. SIX-MAN DEFENCE

Hitler, it was said in government circles, felt he might be facing one of the most critical moments of his strenuous career. It was said that, to meet the possible emergency, he was surrounding himself with a small group of able advisers and administrators with whom he could share the responsibility of driving the German Reich ahead to meet his destiny.

British Reply Received

While Hitler, by decree, was setting up this extra-ordinarily powerful council the British reply to the Fuehrer's suggestions as to how the peace of Europe might be saved, arrived in Berlin.

The answer came to British Ambassador Sir Nevile Henderson who immediately brought it to the German government's attention.

But it was noted that the Ambassador chose to take the communication to Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop rather than to Hitler himself.

Observers familiar with diplomatic practice said that, had anything approaching a final solution of the quarrel over Danzig and the Polish Corridor been proposed by Great Britain, the suggestions probably would have been taken directly to Hitler.

No Hint of Nature

The German government gave no hint of the nature of the British reply.

The press emphasized the importance which the government is attaching to the serious step of organizing the defence council (which in some quarters was being called the supreme war council.)

Hitler's newspaper, Voelkischer Beobatchter observed that creation of the council "demonstrated the firm determination of the Fuehrer to be prepared for every possibility and not to depart a hair's breadth in standing up for our rights."

LONDON DOUBTS

tions would be impossible in an atmosphere of armed force. The note further suggested that both nations call a halt to their military preparations.

See Goering as Moderator

Official circles did not attempt to hide their pleasure at the ascendancy of Field Marshal Hermann Goering in Berlin. They regarded as a good sign his appointment as head of the German Defence Council with wide plenary powers.

Field Marshal Goering is regarded in London as the leader of the moderates in Berlin, as opposed to Foreign Minister JoJachim von Ribbentrop, Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels, Heinrich Himmler, chief of all police and other Nazi extremists.

Whether the Poles would agree to send a negotiator to Berlin, was considered extremely doubtful by informed sources here.

Likewise they were also doubtful whether the German Fuehrer would permit negotiations to open anywhere but on his own ground.

It was officially stated that Britain has placed no pressure on the Poles to accept Hitler's terms.

All Communications Between Europe and U. S. Halted Tonight

London, Aug. 31—(CP)— All telegraphic and telephonic communications between the European continent and the United States were halted tonight. The reason was not known immediately.

For the moment it was notclear what had happened to communications between European countries.

The London office of the Associated Press was notified that within a very short time British censorship would begin copying all outgoing press dispatches on telegraph lines.

Bawden Shows Rare Form In Defeating Kingston Tanners To Eliminate Eastern Club

Belleville Hurler Strikes Out Ten and Walks Two

ALWAYS ON TOP

Oilers Club Two Kingston Hurlers for 12 Hits with Ronsky, Moon Leading

With their ace moundsman, Johnnie Bawden in complete control of the game and pitching five-hit ball, the Belleville Shell "Oilers" defeated the Kingston "Tanners" 8 to 3 in the second game of the first round intermediate O.A.S.A. playdowns at Kingston before 6,500 fans, the most of whom were disappointed home patrons last evening. The win was the second in succession and saw the "Oilers" eliminate the Kingston nine in two straight to meet the winner of the Peterborough-Oshawa series in the Eastern Ontario intermediate O.A.S.A. finals.

Belleville clubbed two Kingston hurlers hard for a total of 12 base hits, including three for extra bases, while Bawden was in rare form as he struck out ten and did not allow a single batter more than one bingle. The Belleville nine played sterling ball behind their ace moundsman defensively, with Dickey and Amo making sensational catches and the infield working smoothly throughout.

Bawden retired the homesters in order in the first, second, fifth and seventh, as Kingston only had four men left stranded on the runways throughout the entire nine inning session. The homesters were kept off the scoring end until the eighth, when after one was out, Gow was safe on an error. Banks followed with a hit and Jordan banged out a double to score two and later scampered across the plate with a run on a fielder's choice to give Kingston their only scores as Bawden struck out one and made two hits to the infield for outs in the ninth.

The "Oilers" showed their superior attack in the initial inning as they scored to open the game when Amo walked and raced home on Sero's timely three base blow. Belleville added two more in the fourth as Whalen walked after one was out and went to second on a passed ball. Ronsky came through with a single and went to second as the ball followed Whalen across the plate. Ronsky then scored on Moon's second hit of the game.

A single by Bawden, a double by Sero and a single by O'Neill gave Belleville two more runs in the seventh and they added a brace more in the eighth to cinch the piece as Ronsky opened with a single, Moon duplicated and later both scored as the result of an error and fielder's choice. Belleville left seven stranded to Kingston's four.

Ronsky, Moon Led Hitters

Ronsky and Moon with three singles each paced the "Oilers" as Sero came through with a triple and a double. Whalen cuffed a double. Bawden helped his own cause with two one base blows as the "Oilers" played sterling ball defensively. Gow and Jordan hit doubles for Kingston as the remaining three hits were of the one base nature. Law started for Kingston and struck out one in four innings, Scrutton hurled five frames and struck out two, while Bawden whiffed ten and only walked two as the Kingston pitchers each passed a brace of Belleville batters. With Bawden in rare form the issue was never in doubt from the time Belleville assumed the lead in the initial frame, as Bawden blanked the homesters from the first until the eighth, when they scored their three runs.

Belleville: Dickey rf; Amo lf; Bawden p; Sero ss; O'Neill 1b; Whalen cf; Ronsky 3b; Moon 2b; and Rowbotham c.

WILMER HILLOCK WINS 2.15 CLASS WITH AL GRATTAN

Forced to Drop First Heat to Lilly Parks, when Horse Goes to Break

BEST TIME 2.11

Competition for Best Groomed Horse Won by L. Kennedy of Bethany

Wilmer Hillock, veteran reinsman of this district, uncovered a smart 2.15 pacer at the Belleville Fair on Wednesday afternoon in Al Grattan when he won the final two heats after being defeated in the first heat by Lilly Parks, owned by Dr. Locks of Williamsburg. The race was one of the best held here in some years although there were only four horses entered. All four produced a blanket finish in the first heat and the second heat was nearly a nose finish, as Al Grattan raced on the outside until the horses headed into the stretch for the drive home. The third heat was the fastest of the afternoon as Lilly Parks made at least three attempts to go around the brown wiggler but she did not have enough foot to head this glibe pacer. Hillock appeared a little anxious to go to the front in the first heat and his horse went to a break going into the back stretch and whatever chances he had were lost at this point but the reinsman made up for the mistake in the next heat.

Only Three Starters

There were only three starters in the 2.27 class with Stella Grattan proving easily the best of the field. Richard Hal, a converted pacer provided the chief contention but he was not good enough on the trot to even put the winner to a drive in any heat. Evans Harvester was not glibe enough in that field. The judges were not satisfied with the result of the first heat and the drivers were told to show a little more ability in their reinsmanship and the result was a much better race. The starts were all excellent under the handling of George O. Tice and the races were run off in quick order.

Best Groomed Horse

The judging before the grandstand occupied the attention of the race fans with a class for the best groomed horse proving the most attractive, a beautiful engraved $12 cup presented by Mrs. S. P. Hagerman to the winner was won by Lloyd Kennedy of Bethany. Mr. Kennedy's mare was slick and shining and no matter how hard the judge tried he could not find a speck of dust on the mare's hide. It was the first time such a competition was held at the Belleville Fair, and Mrs. Hagerman is to be congratulated in her interest in the field of proper care of a horse. The results of the races follow:

Belleville 'Orfuns' Defeat Coe Hill 9-8 In First Game Intermediate 'B' Playdowns

Bud Wilkins, Coach of Team, Does Fine Relief Hurling for Two Frames

RALLY IN NINTH

Giles, Opposition Hurler, Weakens and Locals Score Four to Win

With Coach Bud Wilkins in the lead role as relief pitcher to abruptly halt an avalanche of hits after two Belleville moundsmen had been shelled from the hilltop, the Belleville "Orfuns" took full advantage of their opponents' weakness and scored four runs in a ninth inning rally to eke out a 9-8 win over Coe Hill in the first round play-off in the intermediate O.B.A. at Coe Hill yesterday. The return game will be played in Belleville on Saturday afternoon.

With Bert Giles, their ace moundsman, literally mowing the Belleville batters before him in the early stages, Coe Hill took a deciding early-game lead to shell Joe Kelleher from the mound. Chuck Barriage shared little better as the homesters pounced on his deliveries and one inning on the hilltop saw Barriage relieved by Coach Wilkins, whose relief hurling proved a prolific chore, Wilkins striking out the side in the ninth, after having halted the homesters in an eighth-inning rally.

Tired in Ninth

Giles tired in the ninth and as the Belleville hitters pounced on his deliveries, his team mates collapsed and booted the ball badly with the result, that 16-year-old Don Giles took over the pitching duties, but shared little better fate, as Belleville scored four runs on two hits.

Barriage with two hits, McQuaid, Weeks and Riggs with one each, accounted for Belleville's attack, while Lehigh, B. Giles, McCaw and Poff each collected two safeties for Coe Hill and Rollins and Coatt one each to give the homesters ten safeties as they badly outhit the "Orfuns", but the homesters collapsed under the pressure. Several of Belleville's regular players did not make the northern trip, however, but will be in uniform for the return game Saturday. B. Giles, Coe Hill's fire-ball hurler, is reputed to be one of the best pitchers the "Orfuns" have faced this season.

AMERICAN LOOP RACE BECOMING A DULL AFFAIR

Yankees Drop Second Straight to Cleveland Indians in 10 Innings

A'S TAKE TWO

White Sox and Senators Divide Double Bill— National Games Rained Out

(By Judson Bailey Associated Press Sports Writer).

The race in the American League has become so dull that the teams now are playing "give-away." Even the world champion New York Yankees are taking part.

The Yankees dropped the second straight last night, in a 4-3, ten-inning debacle which must have amused the 35,000 spectators present at Cleveland.

Three pitchers muffled the Bronx Bombers with four hits, two of them bringing a run in the first inning. Hal Trosky hit his 23rd homer with one on in the fourth to lift the Tribe in front and then the boys started to play—but not baseball.

In the seventh Joe Gordon walked, went to second on an error, to third on a sacrifice and scored on Al Milnar's wild pitch. In the eighth Bruce Campbell made a three-base blunder on a fly by Red Rolfe, who scored on a single. In the ninth Lefty Gomez walked a batter with the bases loaded to tie the score, and in the 10th Ben Chapman was walked by Johnny Murphy and subsequently scored the winning run on Ken Keltner's third single.

Tossed Away Decision

Boston Red Sox passed up the chance to chisel another nick in New York's 12-game lead by tossing a 7-6 decision to the Tigers although getting three home runs and outhitting Detroit 12-8.

"On to Peterborough or Oshawa" was the cry of the Shell "Oilers" after eliminating the Kingston Tanners in successive games in the O.A.S.A. playdowns last night. A surprised and disappointed crowd of well over 6,000 fans saw the Tanners humbled by Johnnie Bawden and company to the tune of 8-3 in Kingston, but there was no argument as to which was the better club. The Belleville boys courageously came from behind with a bottom half ninth inning rally to win at home and last evening in Kingston they added to their laurels by heading the Tanners from the barrier to the wire. Frankly speaking the homesters were never in the picture and had it not been for an eight inning error, with one out, there is little doubt but that Bawden would have blanked the Limestone "mushballers." After the series was all over, however, Stan Scrutton and a few more of the Kingston boys readily admitted Bawden was too good and the "Oilers" were a better team than they had anticipated meeting.

Maybe today the Kingston softball moguls will realize we play just as good softball in and around Belleville as they ever did in Kingston. After all a local team had eliminated Kingston for the past two years in the O.A.S.A. playdowns and the proof of the pudding is in the eating. We are convinced the local softball mentors are smarter in one sense than the Limestone City sponsors, who revert to veteran players, who have long since passed their era of usefulness, while in Belleville the skippers are always on the alert for new and younger blood, to prove the old saying—"youth must be served." Last year Point Anne eliminated Kingston with a young team and yesterday the "Oilers" repeated the dose. Maybe we're divulging secrets, but nevertheless are facts. The Shell kids played great ball behind Bawden, who limited Kingston to five hits and blanked them until the eighth, which should be enough to win any man's ball game.

Under a heading—"Ponies again on carpet"—the Kingston sport scribe penned the following comment:

"It seems that the Kingston Ponies are doomed to be the subject of baseball debates forever even though they have dropped out of the game except to help young boys learn to play and romote the sport among the minors. Although officially away from the authority of the Ontario Association or any league the Ponies nevertheless were the innocent members of a secret treaty that recently caused trouble in the Bay of Quinte League but peace has been declared. The Picton protest over Walt Gerow's eligibility was thrown out and Napanee will advance in the provincial intermediate playdowns with Port Hope or Bowmanville, winners of the Lake Shore League, while Belleville will oppose Coe Hill in the intermediate "B" playdowns.

It appears that before the opening of the Bay of Quinte schedule Walt Gerow Sr., made an agreement with Picton and Belleville that if Walt Gerow Jr., was permitted to play for Napanee, although he had previously got a change of residence to Northern Ontario for hockey, that Napanee would not play Herb Hanford, Queen's student, or deal with any of the former Kingston Ponies who were eligible to play with Napanee.

The treaty was satisfactory but it appears that Picton only agreed to Gerow playing in scheduled games and not the league playoffs. The protest was aired on the week-end but the O.B.A. ruled Walt Gerow eligible to play for his home club. Apparently Gerow did not apply for a baseball transfer north and as far as the O.B.A. is concerned he never left home, despite his application for a hockey transfer.

It is tough on Picton to lead the schedule all season and then be eliminated by Napanee in a short playoff while Belleville, which also lost in the league games travels on in another division, but those are the playoff plans in sport now. It does not matter how good a club is all season but what it does in the playoffs that counts."

Rallying as the Coe Hill pitcher weakened in the ninth, the Belleville "Orfuns" won 9-8 over the "Northerners" in the first round intermediate playdowns in the O.B.A. yesterday. Belleville used three hurlers, starting with Joe Kelleher, then Chuck Barriage and finally Skipper Wilkins went to the mound to halt the Coe Hill sluggers. Wilkins showed a splendid piece of relief hurling his efforts standing out for Belleville. Gills, on the Coe Hill mound, silenced the Belleville bats and the home team was leading 8-5 going into the ninth Giles weakened and Belleville pounced on him for five runs and victory. "Those Northern boys swing mean and potent bats and we'll have our hands full to beat them here in the return game Saturday," predicted business manager "Dolly" Gray this morning, as he added the locals played sound defensive ball yesterday.

Congratulations are the order of the day for Harold C. McElrath, who yesterday realized the zenith of his golfing aspirations when he shot a hole in one. Harold was playing with the Belleville Golf Club in a friendly match at the Port Hope Club, when he teed off for the 18th and final hole. Harold's swing was perfect, the ball soared up and over the hazard, hit on the green and rolled to the cup where it dropped in for "A HOLE IN ONE". Congratulations Harold.

New York, Aug. 31 (AP)—Those Yankee-owned Kansas City Blues are breaking hearts right and left in the American Association, particularly around Minneapolis .... They've all but stymied the Millers' stretch bid with a brand of pitching that has left fans gasping. It's of the one, two three hit variety, with shut-outs commonplace....You can't tell a lot of folks around here that the real reason Herman Taylor postponed Nova vs. Galento wasn't that (A) Nova is looking sour in training and (B) the ticket sale is looking ditto.

The Heroine

By LARRY ALLAN

Into the little hamlet of Hartwell that day came walking and riding, living cross-sections of the human countryside, all intent on getting as close to the shrouded monument as the crowd of earlier arrivals in the public square would permit.

All Hartwell, all Hart county, all that section of Georgia, were there on that day to take part in the celebration incident to the unveiling of a beautiful monument to Nancy Hart, Georgia's Joan of Arc, the brave American woman who had killed her share of Redcoats in the Revolution and had inspired her men folks to go and do likewise.

The little town of Hartwell and Hart county had been named after her; there was a Hart street; and now a monument erected to her everlasting memory with funds voted by congress was to be unveiled with all the pomp and ceremony befitting such an occasion.

The governor made a long and well-gestured speech extolling Nancy Hart and her brave deeds. The lady representing the Daughters of the American Revolution read the paper on "Revolutionary Heroines" she had so carefully prepared. Several patriotic songs were sung. Mrs. Juanita Floyd, a great - great-granddaughter of Nancy Hart, sat among the guests of honor on the platform facing the shrouded monument, nervously awaiting the moment when she would jerk the rope to loosen the canvas covering and let the monument stand out in all its beauty.

The governor's speech extolled Nancy Hart's heroism in resounding words and grandiose phrases in a typical patriotic dislpay of verbal pyrotechnics, but sitting next to me was a tobacco-chewing Cracker who told me in words of one syllable the story of Mistress Nancy's heroic gesture.

Nancy was born in North Carolina some twenty years or more before the outbreak of the Revolution, and eventually married Benjamin Hart. Some time before the Boston Tea Party they felt that that section of North Carolina was getting over-populated and migrated to the wilder mountain regions of Georgia.

When the Colonies rose in revolt Georgia called on her sons. Among the first to respond was Benjamin Hart.

One rainy, muddy day when the small handful of patriots left behind to protect homes and families were out on a scouting expedition, and Nancy and her small daughter were industriously preparing the day's food for the men, five Redcoats suddenly rode up and surrounded the home.

A quick search by them revealed that there were no male rebels on the premises, but instead of going on their way the Redcoats, smelling the fragrance of Nancy's cooking, demanded that she serve them. Now Nancy was just a poor lone woman in the wilderness, but all of those pioneer women were spunky. he hated Redcoats and, being an extremely finicky housekeeper, she was as mad as a hornet at the Redcoats for tracking up her kitchen with their muddy boots.

And so Nancy laid the table and busied herself about the fireplace without a word of protest. It was while she was going to the bin for more cornmeal the thought suddenly came to her that the patriots might return while the Redcoats were there. Not realizing their danger they were quite likely to walk right into trouble. With that thought uppermost in her mind she gazed around seeking some method of escape, and it was then that she noticed that the Redcoats, their vigilance lessened, had stacked their guns in a corner of the cabin.

Without exciting their suspicion Nancy walked toward a table near that corner of the room and reached down as if for the jug of molasses she kept there. Suddenly she whirled, seized the nearest rifle and fired point-blank at the unfortunate Redcoat who had just gotten up from the bed. The four others jumped to their feet, but even as they did so Nancy had seized a second gun and stood aiming it at them.

"I killed one!" she cried fiercely, "and if you make a move I'll kill you!"

Then she sent little Nancy scurring out to give the alarm. It so happened that the little group of scouts had heard the gunshot and had turned toward the cabin.

The four King George's men, each fearful that he would be sent to his death if he made a move, stood there helpless until Benjamin and the Continentals arrived on the scene.

"And there's the story just as it really happened," the old Cracker explained.

Just then the lady pulled the cord, the canvas parted, and amid the applause of the gathered Georgians the monument to Nancy Hart was revealed. I was disappointed. It was an obelisk, and not a statue of the Redcoat-killing Nancy.

"Why didn't they have a statue of Nancy so we could see what the great heroine looked like?" I asked.

"Well, you see," my local historian explained "it was on account of Nancy herself. The citizens thought it might look kinda funny. Did yuh ever see this movie fellah, Ben Turpin? Well, Nancy Hart was just as cross-eyed! That's why she was able to bluff them Redcoats, each one thought she was aiming straight at him!"

Little Benny's Note Book

I went around to the barber shop on account of pop claiming pollitness would cease if he had to remind me again, and the big barber was cutting my hair while the little barber was shaving his own face in the mirrer and talking to the big barber, saying, This new Syedish razor of mine cuts like a charm, Fred, I'll be sorry if the Sweeds ever take on a dictater, because then maybe I'll have to boycott them?

This boycott thing is getting serious, the big barber said. I've got a friend that wont eat bake mackarony any more because the world's bigest mackerony eaters have a dictator, and bake mackerony is this chap's favorite dish and he used to have it twice a week, and now he's going around with a long face on him and is hardly fit to talk to, he said, and the little barber said, My wife's got a Mexican hairless mutt that gives me the creeps, I'm going to remind her, Mexico's got a dictator.

Yes sir it's no joke any more, the big barber said. If this dictater, habit keeps spreading over the world it'll get so that a man'll go home hungry and ask the wife, What's on the menu? and she'll say, Hamburg steaks, and he'll say, Nothing doing, do you think I'm a traitor? What elts? he'll ask her, and she'll tell him, Some nice Frenchfried spuds, and he'll say, Throw them away, haven't you read the communists are in power in France? and she'll say, Well, you can fill up on dizzert, we've got some elegant Danish pastry, and he'll come back, Nix, the Danes have got a hookup with Japan. So the poor egg goes without his supper and is even afraid to go out and shoot a little with the boys because he's heard reports about Great Britain and he's scared he might put a little English on the ball, he said.

And he gave me a poke proving my hair was cut.

Pop was in his private chair smoking and thinking and I was on the floor just thinking, and I said, G, pop, I just thought of a swell plot for a book.

I'm trapped, pop said, and I said, It's about a man that ran away from home when he was a boy because he didn't enjoy living with his step father and his step mother and they didn't enjoy living with him either, and he joined a circus but he didn't stay long because he didn't enjoy the smell of camels.

Quite an esthetic young chap, pop said, and I said, And then he stowed himself away on a ship and the captain made him work his passage as a cabin boy, and he liked the sea air so much he shipped before the mast for 10 years, and after that met some evil companions and turned into a highwayman.

Shipped behind the mask, as it were, pop said, and I said, And then one day he robbed a beautiful girl and she was so nice about it that he reformed and joined the Forrin Legion and was wounded! several times on the field of honor and was awarded a lot of meddles for bravery, and after that he wandered around the world shooting tigers and starting and stopping revilutions and having adventures.

How did he finely turn out? pop said. Surely he became the head of an invincible army or a giant chain of heartless grocer stores, he said, and I said, No sir, he opened a hot dog stand on the road out in the country, because for one reason he felt like settling down after all that, and for another reason he always loved hot dogs.

A beautiful ending and no doubt true to life, pop said.

And he got in back of the sporting page and stayed there.

THE CANADIAN DEPARTMENT STORES LIMITED

PRECAUTIONARY

ers—including Germany's axis partner Italy which is urging peaceful negotiation—bristle with guns.

Britain was said merely to have restated things she had said before, covering every point in the German contention susceptible of continuing the preliminary discussions. The way to negotiation, they repeated, still is open.

King at Admiralty

The King spent an hour at the Admiralty today, inspecting the department's administrative plans in case of war.

The King, who as a lieutenant in the battleship Collingwood during the Great War was present at the battle of Jutland, took his younger brother, the Duke of Kent, also a navy-trained man, on what officials described as an "informal" visit to the Admiralty.

His Majesty yesterday visited the war office, the air ministry and the home office.

With only one equerry in attendance, the King and the Duke of Kent, both wearing lounge suits, drove to Buckingham Palace to a side door of the Admiralty.

They were shown the secret control rooms, tunnelled deep in the earth, from which the navy could be directed even if the entire admiralty building above were destroyed.

The ministry's announcement of the "precautionary" transfer of civilians follows:

Start Evacuation Friday

"It has been decided to start evacuation of the school children and other priority classes as already arranged under the government's scheme tomorrow, Friday, Sept. 1. No one should conclude that this decision means that war is now regarded as inevitable.

"Evacuation, which will take several days to complete, is being undertaken as a precautionary measure in view of the prolongation of the period of tension. The government is fully assured that the attitude of quiet confidence which the public have been displaying will continued that no unnecessary movements which would interfere with the smooth operation of the transport arrangements will take place and that all concerned in the receiving areas will entirely put aside every consideration of personal interest and convenience, and do everything possible to contribute to the success of a great national undertaking.

Areas Named

"Evacuation will be from the following areas: Greater London which includes the London county council area, the county boroughs of West Ham and East Ham, the boroughs of Walthamstow.

"Leyton, Ilford and Barking in Essex.

"The boroughs of Tottenham, Hornsey, Willesden, Acton and Edmonton in Middlesex, the Medway towns of Chatham, Gillingham and Rochester; Dagenham, Thurrock, Gravesend and Northfleet, Portsmouth, Gosport and Southampton, Birmingham and Smethwick, Liverpool, Bootle, Birkenhead, Wallasey and Crosby.

"Manchester, Salford and Stretford, Sheffield, Leeds, Bradford, Hull and Rotherham, Newcastle and Gateshead, Runcorn and Widnes and in Scotland, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Dundee, Clydebank and Rosyth."

Divided in Three Classes

For emergency purposes the population of Great Britain is roughly divided into three classes:

1. The relatively congested areas where "priority" evacuation now has been ordered among a population of about 11,000,000.

2. The "neutral" or less dangerous areas during air raids in which about 13,000,000 live.

3. The country or "reception" areas in which more than 16,000,000 reside.

Of the 11,000,000 in the "evacuation" area it was estimated that about 27 per cent or roughly 3,000,000 would come inside the classes whose removal will start tomorrow. This figure may be cut sharply by the fact many families have not registered their children as directed.

First Month Most Severe

The Air Raid Defence League which studied the problem in detail concluded:

"The first month and perhaps only the first fortnight of war in the air would be incomparably the most severe. The idea of the 'blitzkrieg' (German for lightning war), the smashing blow at vital civil centres, is not yet explored.

"Half of its effectiveness lies in surprise. If the very worst period is to come first it is all the more important that the maximum evacuation should take place before hostilities have begun.

"The authorities should not hesitate to evacuate the priority classes even if there is some chance that war will not come.

"It is estimated that all rail transport will be fully occupied at least for two days and in some cases longer by the "priority" classes alone. The ordinary citizen must be clearly told not to attempt rail transport during these two days. This applies also to businesses."

Children Rally at Schools

Children will rally first at their schools tomorrow. Subway, bus and railroad services will be restricted to speed the evacuation.

Gas masks, food for two days and essential clothing will be carried by the children. If possible one adult will travel in each railroad compartment of the trains carrying the children to quarters in the country. Postal cards will be provided for the children to notify their parents of safe arrival.

The evacuation of mothers, pre-school age children and expectant mothers probably will start Saturday.

Girls of 15 to 18, too young for hospital nursing or ambulance driving, will get free board and lodging for full-time service.
